The Bridal Song. A Poem by JAMES NEIL, M.A., 5s.

Author of "Pictured Palestine," "Palestine Explored," "Salute One Another," "Figurative Language of the Bible," &c., &c

The Publishers have much pleasure in announcing the issue of another work, and that a poem—the first from this gifted pen.

The song glows with richest eastern colouring, breathing in its devout and burning stanzas the beautiful spirit which pervades that portion of the Canticles upon which it is founded.

The Author's intimate knowledge of Holy Land Life has nowhere been turned to better account than in "The Bridal Song," where every thought is set in the warm, full light of the Orient.

The valuable notes at the end will be a little mine of wealth to the Biblical student.

THE ROCK says:—"He is to be congratulated on an exceedingly apt and graceful rendering of the 'Song of Songs. . . . A high spiritual conception, modestly worked out. . . . The cover—one of thick bevelled boards—is embossed with a design of orange and myrtle in white and gold, and is dainty enough for all uses as a gift book. As a wedding-gift it would be specially appropriate. For so artistic a volume, without having regard to its intrinsic worth, the price of five shillings is so unusually low that we go out of our way to mention it."—April 22, 1892.

Notes and Comments.

NEXT week we purpose giving portrait and sketch of Rev. G. S. Barrett, of Norwich, Vice-President of the Congregational Union of England and Wales.

A friend who was present at the Redhill, Convention last week describes it as "a glorious time." Our report is postponed to our next issue.

At the Missionary Meeting of the Redhill Convention on Friday last, Dr. Pentecost delivered such a powerful address on the growth, development, and marvellous results of Christian missions in India that the friends present thought the Doctor should be urged to remain for some time in this country, and rouse British Christians to their duty and responsibility with regard to India. Our London readers will be glad to know that Dr. Pentecost has agreed to give addresses on Christian work in India in Marylebone Presbyterian Chapel, Upper George-street, Edgware-road, from Tuesday to Friday next week, at 7.30 each evening. All those interested in foreign missions should endeavour to be present.

Monday last saw the opening of two of our leading Church Parliaments—the Baptist Union in London, and the English Presbyterian Synod at Birmingham. The Presidents in both cases chose the present aspects of Biblical Criticism as the topic of their inaugural addresses. At Bloomsbury Chapel Rev. R. H. Roberts discoursed ably on "The Witness of the Bible to Itself"; at Birmingham Dr. Johnstone expressed satisfaction that so much reverent attention is being concentrated on Biblical literature. Both gentlemen declared their assurance that the sacred oracles will emerge from the ordeal unscathed.

At a crowded meeting of the Baptist Union, held on Monday, the resolution, moved by Rev. Charles Williams, and seconded by Rev. F. B. Meyer, discountenancing association in religious work with Unitarians, was carried by an immense majority, only a few hands being held up in opposition. This is a matter for congratulation, especially as Rev. C. F. Aked, of Liverpool, whose action gave rise to this protest, explained that he had invited Rev. Mr. Armstrong to his pulpit, not as a Unitarian, but as a moral reformer; and professed his willingness to abide by the spirit and letter of the resolution.

Rev. Edward White's closing lecture last Tuesday, of the series at the Memorial Hall, on Biblical Criticism, put a fitting finish to his brilliant arraignment of the modern school of literary "scalpers." Dealing with the new destructive theories as to the authorship of the second half of Isaiah and the Book of Daniel, he showed how these opinions are based on "sheer critical conjecture"; and uttered a singularly eloquent vindication of the recognised claim of these portions of the Bible to a place in the inspired Canon. In his long public service of half a century, Mr. White has rendered no better service to Christianity than in this course of lectures; we trust they will be published in popular form.

Probably The Times expressed the conviction of the average Englishman when it said, on Tuesday:—

> The Continental Anarchist really means what he says, and will do the mischief which our home-raised brood is quite satisfied with talking about. On Sunday next we shall have labour demonstrations of all sorts in Hyde Park, and in many of our large towns. But, when the poor fellows have wasted their holiday and have spent their week's wages, they will go quietly home, and we shall hear no more of them until they are called out for some new demonstration as inoperative as the last.

We question whether this is a safe conclusion. Englishmen may be less inflammable, but they burn longer. The Times itself seems to have made a step in advance on Tuesday. In commenting on the death of M. Véry, through the explosion of a bomb thrown into his restaurant, the leading journal says:—

> This additional proof of the reckless and unscrupulous spirit of Anarchism should nerve the Governments of all civilised countries to confront boldly a system of terrorism which, if it were allowed to make headway, would soon put an end to civilisation itself.

But Governments, not recognising God as the source of their authority are beginning to realise the result of this in the disaffection of the peoples.

Fundamental truths are few and simple, but the Bible presents them in many ways—in logic and in poetry, in history and similitude, in abstract reasoning and concrete narrative. Portions of Scripture, which to one reader seem void of authority or almost of meaning, bring to others life and light. All truth is concentrated in Jesus, but some have vivid visions of Him in types and parables; while others, like Mary in the garden, see Him in the Old Testament and know not that it is Jesus.

We desire to draw our readers' attention to the splendid and beneficent service rendered by the Theatrical Mission, through the fifteen hundred ladies who correspond with young women professionally engaged in places of amusement. Nor is this all the benefit rendered by this kindly institution; it keeps itself informed of the engagements of English girls going to the Continent and to other parts of the world, and renders them, through its Christian correspondents there, the motherly and sisterly attention which the heart of a stranger so well appreciates.

The New York Independent has been describing the past and present condition of the Indians and Negroes of America, and advocating measures for their further education and spiritual enlightenment. Much has been done to meet the needs of the Negroes, but an immense amount yet remains to be accomplished. Dr. W. A. Spencer, of the Methodist Church Extension Society, says:—

> By union of all the forces, two thousand churches a year ought to be built in the old Slave States until the end of the century; small churches to shelter existing congregations, larger churches at strategic points, to provide for new communities just organising, or old communities suddenly awakened by an industrial earthquake. If the sixteen thousand churches were built immediately, they would still leave the Southern States less thoroughly provided with church accommodations than are the States of Iowa and Kansas, remarkable as that statement may be.

Many testimonies are borne to the intellectual and moral advancement of the Negroes during recent years. Dr. D. J. Satterfield, of Scotia Seminary, Concord, North Carolina, writes:—

> We are told that the Negroes want to work by themselves; they want to be in separate schools and churches, &c. The men who tell us this are the men who want it to be true, and are trying to make it true. And to a certain extent they have succeeded; for they have made the Negro feel so unwelcome wherever they are that he prefers being anywhere else. If he is to be denied the right to assert his manhood, or if he must submit to persistent snubbing among white men, he does prefer to be with those of his own colour.
> But for six years and more I have been on this field; and during this time we have been mutually helpful in presbytery and synod, in teachers' conventions, in temperance work, in almost every way, that men can help one another to care for the masses; and I tell you, the earnest, conscientious leaders among them do want co-operation. They welcome joyfully as a co-worker every white man who is willing to lay aside prejudice and work with them as well as for them.

With reference to the Indians, Dr. Merrill E. Gates, chairman of the U. S. Board of Indian Commissioners, writes:—

> The work for the Indian is, in a peculiar sense, work for the heathen who are "at our door." They have an especial claim upon us. The true "sons of the soil," the most distinctively American people within our boundaries, until this last decade we have made it impossible for them to receive protection from our laws. We have herded them in crime-sodden reservations. We have pauperised them by rations dealt out as a premium upon laziness. We have cut them off from civilisation, shut them out from citizenship, and left them untaught and unaided.
> We have retained in our treasury millions of money by our own treaties due to them for the education of their children. And we have been readier to spend ten millions to fight them than one million to teach them. All this is changing. Over twenty-thousand Indians have received allotments of land; over sixteen-thousand are already citizens of the United States. The Government provides school accommodations for nearly twenty-thousand Indian children, and the extension of civil service regulations over part of the service gives hope of permanency of tenure for faithful officials, and thus of permanency in reform methods.
> These latter are cheering signs, affording, on the one hand, evidence of Christian influence in action, and, on the other hand, justifying a hope that great blessing will result from earnest and sustained work for Christ, on ground which has long been in process of preparation.

It is grievous to note that the negroes of the Southern States are suffering acutely from race prejudice at the present time. Boycotted and outraged in various ways, the coloured people of some centres are actually talking of reprisals. Intelligence from Gurdon, Arkansas, states that numbers of the negroes are selling their property with a view to an exodus to Africa, the coloured preachers encouraging the movement, which will be watched with special interest by all who are watching the dawn of day in the Dark Continent.

A Bill has recently passed through the Imperial Parliament of Germany, to come into force in June next, by which all Sunday labour (except such as is absolutely necessary) will be made illegal. The delivery of goods by the railways is to cease; and all shops are to be closed, with the exception of butchers' and bakers', which will be allowed open until 8 a.m. An esteemed correspondent in Germany says:—

> I rejoice that this much-needed step has at last been taken. There is, however, still much to pray for. The Sunday in this country is commonly a day of worldly amusement, theatres and concerts being largely resorted to in the evenings.

The cost of the German army for the financial year just closed amounted to £24,000,000; and the estimate for the present year exceeds that startling sum by nearly five millions more. If these burdens have to be borne when Europe is at peace, what must be the dread cost of war should it arise?

How surely the scourge of pestilence is treading on the heels of the famine in Russia is sadly shown in letters which Miss Hesba Stretton has received from Mr. Bezant, who has been relieving many in Samara. The writer states that typhus and black small-pox are raging among the peasantry, weak and worn through want and cold, both in city and rural districts. Sixty-six families are at present being supported under Mr. Bezant's personal direction, and for some of the men he has found work. He speaks warmly of the judgment and devotion to their mission of the representatives of the Friends. Miss Stretton states that the amount of her fund has reached £820, of which £800 has already been remitted to Russia.

Bishop Barry writes forcibly to The Guardian, deploring the renewal of the Kanaka labour traffic by the Queensland Legislature, involving, as this traffic too generally does, kidnapping, and an enforced labour not greatly differing from slavery, except that it is terminable at some period. It will be remembered by many how eloquently and pathetically the veteran Dr. J. G. Paton was wont to protest against the evils of this Kanaka traffic, which means the bringing, by force or guile, of natives of the South Seas from their own isles to labour on the sugar plantations in Queensland, many of them never to return home again. The Bishop writes :—

It is true that the Premier of the Queensland Government promises, and I have no doubt with the utmost sincerity, that the most stringent regulations shall be laid down to prevent all violence, fraud, and injustice towards the natives both in the islands themselves and on the Queensland plantations. But all who have the slightest knowledge of the past history and the necessary conditions of the labour traffic will agree with the veteran missionary, Rev. J. G. Paton, in the sad conviction that regulations, however carefully devised, are but too likely to be ineffective, and in the deep regret that the traffic, which, almost by universal consent, was given up, as practically an inhuman traffic—almost a slave trade—should be resumed.

We trust such a vigorous protest will be raised by Christians at the Antipodes as will put an end to the proposal to renew the traffic, or at all events ensure its being carried on with a due regard to the just rights of the natives concerned.

The New York Independent characterises the Chinese Exclusion Bill, that has passed the United States Congress, as "a shame and a disgrace"; and declares that it misrepresents the spirit of the people of America.

"The Riverside Visitor," from whose pen from time to time we have received graphic descriptions of how the poor have to live, has, in a recently-published volume—"The Pinch of Poverty" (Isbister and Co., 5s.)—given much prominence to the drink curse. In one passage the writer remarks :—

It is a terrible thing to say, but as true as terrible, that a large proportion of the English poor are born to drink just as the Esquimaux are born with a taste for food specially suited for an Arctic climate, or the Fijian to consider the shedding of blood not a crime, but a glory...They are born in a vitiated atmosphere, one of the especial effects of which is in practice found to create a taste for stimulants.

We would commend these words to the attention of all who may in any way be responsible for the delay in regard to the improved housing of the poor in the metropolis and other large cities and towns.

In a recent report made to the Board of Trade by Major Marindin, in regard to an accident upon the Midland and South-Western Junction Railway in which a guard lost his life, it is stated that the unfortunate man had at the time when he met with his death been on duty for twenty-two hours and sixteen minutes, and that during the last fortnight of his life he had been on duty twice for nearly twenty-four hours, twice for twenty hours, once for nearly eighteen hours, and once for sixteen hours. Another man, an engine-driver, had been on duty for twenty-six hours at a stretch; another was on for thirty-six hours out of forty-one, and others for almost as prolonged periods. Surely the subject is ripe for the interference of Parliament; but in the meantime are the shareholders free from responsibility for the deaths which must inevitably follow such fatiguing employment in dangerous occupations?

We are glad to observe that the action of the Wolverhampton Free Library Committee, in "blacking out" the columns relating to Turf matters in the daily newspapers admitted to the public reading-room, is meeting with the moral support of the general public. The proposal thus to disappoint the betting fraternity, by whom the papers were largely monopolised, with a result the opposite of improving or educational, was suggested some time ago, but not promptly acted upon. In following the example of Birmingham the important Black Country town has now helped to show other Free Library Committees how they may secure newsrooms from an outrageous abuse, and make them increasingly useful for legitimate and praiseworthy purposes.

It is important to guard the young against temptations to deceive. Mr. John Burnham writes to us, pointing out that in travelling to and from school by rail, young people over thirteen years of age are tempted to misrepresent their age in order to pass with a half ticket. He makes a practical suggestion :—

I believe there is a tacit understanding that children travelling to and from school are passed at half-price. If this is the case, might it not be well for railway companies distinctly to state it in their time-tables; and, to avoid imposition, make it a condition that schools shall furnish their scholars with a card to show that they are bond-fide scholars? Thus we shall avoid this risk of unwittingly cultivating in our children a spirit that is not strictly honest and transparently truthful.

Present-Day Dangers.

In an address recently delivered by Rev. Henry Batchelor are some remarks which are peculiarly pertinent to the present discussion in the Baptist Union as to association with Unitarians. The whole agitation there has arisen from an interchange of pulpits on a recent Sunday on the part of one of its ministers with a popular Unitarian; but Mr. Batchelor's paper covers a wider range, and one of considerable interest and importance.

He shows that in times of unsettlement in religious belief, such as that which is now upon us, there are two different directions in which men seek for help. The one is Sacerdotalism, the other Rationalism. "The Episcopalian seeks refuge in the past, and rehabilitates the declining prerogatives of the priest." The Free Churchman, on the other hand, is apt to set about the reconstruction of his beliefs with the aid of reason. He is not always satisfied with ascertaining what is, but presumes to dictate what ought to be; accepting the congenial, and refusing the distasteful, as he may be prompted by his natural sense.

It was said by Tertullian that there is a natural response to the main facts of the Gospel in the heart of man. But it is also true that there is a very strong dislike to those that savour more specially of the evangelical and supernatural. And we must therefore allow for a strong backwater, the tendency of which is to carry men, almost unconsciously and insensibly, from their moorings in "the Faith once for all delivered to the saints."

The only correctives for this tendency in the human heart are the maintenance of the authority in the Word of God, and the white heat of an intense religious life. When the principal impetus was given to the Free Church movements, of which we feel the effect to-day, there was no question on either of these two points. The supremacy of the Bible, and its authoritative verdict on all matters, were unquestioned by the Puritans; and modern Methodism was the product of as fervid emotion as has ever been kindled on the altars of Christian consecration.

At the present time, each of these factors is less marked than then. The higher critics, who are at least clever to destroy, and have seemed as men that lift up their axes on a thicket of trees, have brought a great unsettlement into Christian thought. Much of their influence has been in the direction of breaking down the old reverence for the authority of Scripture, with no attempt to give us something better. Without doubt there are counteracting benefits. Attention is being directed to the Old Testament, which had been greatly neglected. Sounder methods of interpretation will no doubt emerge. And the Old Testament will be more firmly established in the faith of this generation, as the New has been. But the effect just now is injurious.

Side by side with this, there is a great slackening of religious emotion. The hymns of Watts, and Wesley, and Doddridge are being superseded by slighter ones, that view life and truth more from the human standpoint and less from the Divine. The sense of sin is low, and in consequence men are content with superficial conceptions of the meaning of the death of Christ. And the professing Church, having drunk of the Laodicean potion, is wrapt in the golden haze of self-complacency, and indifference to the cry of a perishing world. Prayer-meetings are being given up for preaching services, whilst revivals are attempted by an elaborate system of advertisement, music, and machinery.

Under such conditions the churches are in grave peril of eliminating the evangelical and supernatural elements from their Faith, and reducing it to a philosophy, in the cold air of which spiritual life will die. We are in full agreement with the endeavour to reaffirm an evangelical basis, and to discountenance any and every association with those who deny the Evangelical Faith, so as to weaken its effect on the world or produce the impression that it is a matter of secondary importance what men think of Christ.

The past is full of warning. In the first half of the last century the Presbyterian body was eminent for its culture, its advocacy of religious liberty, its external activity. But there came, first a denial of man's sinful condition, followed by Arian ideas of our Lord's person, followed in turn by a denial of his propitiation for sin. It was out of that decadent body that the Unitarianism of the present century had its rise. We can only judge of the drift of the present by the experience of the past, and we do not hesitate to say that, in our judgment, there are tendencies which, if they are not checked in time, will inevitably work out to the same result. It was for this reason that we hailed with such satisfaction the protests of the late honoured and beloved Mr. Spurgeon.

The whole Church is strong or weak in proportion to the vigour or decay of any of its branches, and it is a matter of public concern that the Free Churches of England should still maintain that banner for Evangelical Truth, which God has so manifestly given them to display.

Their past history has been highly honourable. Representing the great masses of the middle-classes, they have contributed an important quota to the making of England. They have furnished some of the noblest leaders, thinkers, writers, and workers to their times. They have borne no inconsiderable share in the missionary enterprise of the past hundred years. But their strength has always lain in their undeviating loyalty to Evangelical truth, and it becomes them to watch with jealous care any advance towards that region of cold abstractions, which is represented by Unitarianism, and is invariably destructive of spiritual life and power.

GATHERED GOLD.

"To know the Lord." That is a bold aim for my finite soul, and yet my soul will be satisfied with nothing less. It is not by searching thou canst find out God, it is by following Him.—Dr. Matheson.

My principal method for defeating heresy is by establishing truth. One proposes to fill a bushel with tares; now if I can fill it first with wheat, I shall defy his attempts.—Newton.

And now my cross is all supported,—
Part on my Lord, and part on me;
But as He is so much the stronger,
He seems to bear it—I go free.
—Anna Warner.

CHRIST AND THE SINNER.

The sinner nothing; Christ everything. Christ before me. Christ behind me. Christ on the right hand. Christ on the left hand. Christ below me as a rock. Christ above me. Christ in me. Christ through me.

MAKING TALENTS.

"Made other five talents." By utilising what we have, we get what we have not. By doing what we can, we attain ability to do that which was originally impossible to us. The world is familiar with this law in the matter of money-making. The foundations of colossal fortunes have been laid in the taking advantage at first of little opportunities. The true method of increasing our sphere is to fill to overflowing that in which we are. The horizon will widen as we climb the hill.

FAITHFUL UNDER REPROACH.

NUMBERS xvi.

Few men have had greater experience of the ingratitude of their fellows than Moses. Here it broke out again, and this time in a formidable conspiracy led by Korah, with whom were associated 250 princes, men of renown. The special points were the position he held and the authority he exercised; and the revolt throws some interesting light on the manner in which God's servants should consider the position they occupy in his Church.

In the history of all workers for God there will come crises, when wrong motives will be imputed and unkind suggestions passed from mouth to mouth, even by those whose spiritual life has been due to their prayers and tears. Now it is jealousy of growing influence; then it is unwillingness to accept directions and fall in rank at the word of command; again it is the dislike of a carnal soul at the high spiritual demands which are in direct collision with its longings for milk and honey, fields and vineyards. Such disaffection begins with one discontented sensual soul, but it spreads as fire in prairie grass. There are many craven hearts ready enough to follow, who would not dare to lead, in an attempt to subvert some eminent and devoted servant of God. Sometimes the pretext is no better than in the case of the man who voted for the expulsion of Aristides, for no other reason than that he was tired of hearing him called "the Just."

At such times we do well to turn to this dark chapter in the history of the forty years' wanderings, and learn how men ought to behave themselves in the House of God, which is the Church of the living God, the pillar and ground of the truth.

I. LOOK ON YOUR POSITION AS GOD'S APPOINTMENT.—Korah and his confederates suggested that Moses and Aaron had taken on themselves the offices which they held, the one as king in Jeshurun, whenever the heads of the people gathered; the other, with his family, as priest. Why should these offices be exclusively vested in the two brothers? Were there not plenty of men as good as they? Was not all the congregation holy? And might not the presence of Jehovah be had by others as well as by them? It was a conspiracy of princes against the Leader and Prince, and of Levites against the Priestly family.

Instantly Moses fell on his face before God—his favourite attitude for meeting these outbreaks of popular hatred and discontent—like the heather which meekly bows its head as the autumn blast sweeps over the moor. But he made no further attempt to justify his position or Aaron's. He might have alleged his past services, his claims on the gratitude and loyalty of the people; he might have reminded them that their national existence was due, under God, to his faith, his prayers and tears, his intercessions and exertions on their behalf. But on all these points he held his peace, and took the whole matter into the Divine Presence, knowing the responsibility on his God.

First, he reminded the malcontents that their own position had been assigned by the appointment of the Most High. The God of Israel had separated them from the congregation of Israel, to bring them near unto Himself, to do the service of the Tabernacle of the Lord, and to stand before the congregation to minister unto them. It was strictly He who had brought them near, and all the sons of Levi with them. There was, therefore, no cause for jealousy. The places of influence and authority in Israel were not a lottery, where some men might happen to draw prizes and others blanks. Posts were assigned to men, and men to posts, by the distinct interposition of God. And they who had been so distinctly appointed surely should admit that an equally distinct Divine appointment had been made in respect to Aaron and himself.

Next, and as a result of such a conception of the true position of affairs, this ebullition of anger was shown to be really directed against God Himself. "Therefore thou and all thy company are gathered together against the Lord; and Aaron, what is he that ye murmur against him?" When men turn against us, we are too apt to run away from our position in panic, to make terms with them, or to throw down the reins in a pet. Any of these courses is a profound mistake, and quite incompatible with a right apprehension of our position towards God on the one hand, and man on the other.

There are many passages which show beyond doubt that our positions in the visible church are defined as carefully as of members in the human body. "The Holy Ghost hath made you overseers of the Church," said the Apostle on the sands of Miletus to the representatives of the Ephesian Church. "God hath set in the Church, first apostles...then helps," he wrote to the church at Corinth. The Ascended Christ gave some to be apostles, and some prophets, and some evangelists, and some pastors and teachers. Such was his message in his circular letter, dated from the Roman imprisonment. What was true in those first days is true always. Though you be only a joint or hinge, on which other members impinge and work, you must believe that your position was fixed by the All-wise and Almighty Disposer of all. Is it to be supposed for a moment that He who appointed the place where each star should shine in the bosom of night should leave the position of the stars of his Church to chance?

If, then, disaffection or dissatisfaction arise, they must not in themselves determine your course. It may be that they indicate that the time has come for you to go elsewhere. But this evidence is by no means conclusive. You must go to Him that sent you, whose servant you are, and ask if it is his will for you to vacate your post, and if so that He should make it clear. If He does not, then let nothing that man can do alarm or trouble you. You must stand to your post, as the lonely sentinel amid the falling lava of the eruption, till the commander of the Lord's host tells you that you may surrender your sacred charge. But if no such orders come, grace and patience will, and you must remain till relieved by death.

Lastly, Moses left the ultimate decision with God.—They were all to take censers, which were the ordinary prequisites of the priests alone, and having charged them with fire and incense were to present themselves before the Lord, at the door of the tent of meeting. It would be then for God to choose who should be holy, and who should be caused to come near unto Him.

What infinite rest would come into the lives of many of God's servants, if only they drank into the spirit of this heroic soul; so resolute to do the Divine will, at all hazards, and to remain at the helm though the fire of popular resentment crept along the bulwarks and blistered the skin from his hands. How often the face is worn with care, and the head streaked with grey, even if the course of the life be not deflected from the straight rule it should follow by thoughts like these—What will my committee, or elders, or supporters say? What will become of my children's bread if I thwart so influential a contributor? How shall I be able to withstand so strong a popular movement? Must I not yield to the suggestions of friends, or threatenings of foes? Alas! these questions are so often asked, and the course of life decided by the weighing of prudential suggestions, and the consideration of human policy, but with little or no reference to Him, whose slaves we are, selected and appointed for special work.

Let us act as Moses, the faithful servant did, and refer all to the decision of our Master and Lord, and in the meanwhile be at peace. It is such a profound mistake to carry the burdens of the Lord's work. When difficulties come, as they will, they are his quite as much as, or more than they are ours. We have no right to carry his anxieties and care for his cares. He asks us to do his work, to obey his behests, to fulfil his commissions, and to transfer all the weary pressure and burden to Himself. If the people do not like us, it is for Him to determine whether He will continue us in our position, and if He choose to do so He must keep us there, and give us favour with them. If our supplies fall off in doing his work, He must maintain us and our dear ones. A royal court is bound to support its own embassies. If our mission involve the assumption of leadership which is disputed by our fellows, we cannot recede from it, so long as we can say with Moses, "The Lord sent me to do all these works, and I have not done them of mine own mind." Thus pride and jealousy are alike impossible. We know we receive nothing except it is given us from heaven, and we refer all disputants to Him who has put us where we are.

II. CHERISH KINDLY FEELINGS TOWARDS THOSE WHO OPPOSE.—How nobly Moses dealt with this murmuring crowd. When first he heard their contentious voices he assumed the posture of intercession, and began to plead for those who despitefully used and persecuted him. When it seemed, on the following morning, as if God would destroy not the ringleaders only, but all the congregation who assembled with them at the door of the tent of meeting, he fell on his face and pleaded with the God of the spirits of all flesh not to punish all for the sin of one man. Dathan and Abiram, the sons of Eliab, were specially contumelous, and, when he sent to summon them, returned an insulting message, accusing him of betraying them with false representations, asking why he had not led them into the land of milk and honey. They went so far as to insinuate that they dared not come lest he should bore out their eyes. Moses was naturally very indignant and wounded by these bitter and undeserved reproaches, but he made no attempt to answer them, except in self-vindication before the Lord. And when bidden he did not hesitate to rise up, and go to them, with no trace of vindictiveness in his address.

And on the following day, when the people, unawed by the terrible judgments that had befallen, murmured against Aaron and himself, and accused them of having killed the people of the Lord, he again averted from them the judgment which was threatened, first by his prayers, and then by hastening Aaron to stand, censer in hand, between the plague-stricken and those as yet unreached by the sickle of death. How quick he was to know when wrath had gone out from the Lord! How eager to stay its progress! How generous to make such efforts on the behalf of those who had but an hour before launched at him their bitter reproaches!

This is the true pastor's heart. He drinks into the spirit of the Good Shepherd, who loved those who taunted Him, and pleaded for the forgiveness of his murderers. There is no more resentment in his heart towards those who oppose him than in a mother's towards the babe who, in its paroxysm of temper, smites her breast with its tiny hands. The grey-headed retainers, who resist the entrance of the mob at the palace gates, prepared to die that by their blood they may purchase time for their royal master's escape, do not take the malice of the bloodthirsty crowd as a mere personal matter, since they know that they are hated as his representatives, and are proud to suffer for him. Oh, for that chivalrous devotion to Christ, that we may only suffer in fellowship with his sufferings, die only in conformity to his death, identified with Him in all. It is, perhaps, the loftiest summit of devotion when we crave love only to pass it on to Him, and dread hatred only because it hurts the hearts that cherish it, and inflicts a wrong on the sweet and glorious Lord.

III. You may Expect God to Vindicate you.—"And Moses said, Hereby ye shall know that the Lord hath sent me to do all these works. If these men die the common death of all men, then the Lord hath not sent me. But if the Lord create a creation, and the ground open her mouth and swallow them up, then ye shall understand that these men have despised the Lord." "And it came to pass, as he made an end of speaking these words, that the ground clave asunder under them, and the earth opened her mouth and swallowed them up."

It was a terrible act of vengeance. It was essential to the existence of the camp that the mutiny should be stamped out without mercy. There was no help for it. The cancer must be cut out of the quivering flesh. The death would be painless for the little ones, and though cut off from life here, they would pass at once into the broad and blessed spaces of eternity, but for the rest the punishment was merited, and their extermination saved the camp.

Many have essayed to stamp out the Church of God, but, like Haman, have been hanged on the gallows prepared for Mordecai. Others have spoken against the servants of the Lord, but have suffered untimely and terrible deaths. The bears out of the wood have devoured. Herod has been eaten by worms. Persecutors have died in horrible torment. No weapon that has been formed against God's saints has prospered. Every tongue that has been raised against them in judgment has been condemned. "And the third angel poured out his bowl into the rivers and fountains of waters; and they became blood. And I heard the angel of the waters saying, Righteous art thou, which art and which wast, thou Holy One, because thou didst thus judge; for they poured out the blood of saints and prophets, and blood hast thou given them to drink. And I heard the altar saying, Yea, O Lord God the Almighty, true and righteous are thy judgments."

Trust Him, oh, suffering saints, doing his will in the teeth of opposition and hate. Fear not the faces of men, be not dismayed before their threats, He is with you to deliver you; they may fight against you, but they shall not prevail; their proudest threats shall fail of their fulfilment, as the sea-billow which flings itself on the boulder is dissolved into a cloud of harmless spray.

He loves his saints. They are all in his hand. But especially those are in its covert who are engaged in his sacred work. If only they are faithful to Him and to his behests, and live on his plan, there is nothing He will not do for them. When they call upon Him in their distress He will bow the heavens as He comes down to their help, riding upon a cherub, flying upon the wings of the wind. He will deliver them from their strong enemy, and bring them into a large place, because He delights in them, and they put their trust in Him.

LADY HENRY SOMERSET'S RETURN.

A great meeting was held on Thursday night at Liverpool to welcome Lady Henry Somerset on her return from America. The Association Hall was filled to its fullest capacity. Mr. A. Guthrie, J.P., presided.

Lady Somerset pleaded for close and world-wide unity in the effort for humanity, and the temperance battle would come to victory. In America every phase of liquor law reform had been tried. The one fact that filled her with hope of America was that they had an almost absolutely sober womanhood. After describing the women's work of America, her ladyship spoke of prohibition, which she was told was a failure; but when she went to Portland she found the liquor sellers in gaol, and the prohibition law was an immense success. The prosperity of the rural parts spoke for itself. The children at the schools had never seen a drunkard, and wherever prohibition had existed in America there were peace, happiness, and prosperity. These questions faced them in England, and until they went on to the end of the problem by legislation they were not going to remove the evil. She believed in the popular veto, and that the nation would rise and crush the drink traffic.

THOROUGHNESS IN CHRISTIAN WORK.

[We make the following extracts from a stirring address delivered at Mildmay, and reported in the March issue of Service for the King.]

When the Holy Spirit came upon the early Church, its one distinctive mark was "thoroughness." A judgment came upon Ananias and Sapphira for their want of thoroughness in consecration. Perhaps if the thoroughness of the early Church had continued, the Lord's coming would not have been delayed so long, and the Gospel would have been preached for a witness to all nations.

"Cursed be he that doeth the work of the Lord negligently" Jer. xlviii. 10. (marg.) These are solemn words in connection with our subject, for they just explain what want of thoroughness is—negligence. It is important to remember that "the eyes of the Lord are in every place, beholding the evil and the good" (Prov. xv. 3), and that when He comes He will bless according to the works (Rev. xxii. 12). In Bullinger's "Greek and English Concordance to the New Testament" the definition of thoroughness is, "put in perfect readiness for," and, as a secondary meaning, "ready in every way." It is a word in common use amongst us; we often speak of a "thoroughly reliable person," a "thoroughly good article," a "thoroughly good servant," &c. It is a word to which we cling intensely; and yet is there anything that pains our Master more than our want of thoroughness in our character towards Him and our work for Him? Contrast with this the thoroughness of his work for us. He came "to do his Father's will" (Ps. xl. 7, 8). "I have finished the work," &c. (John xvii. 4), and "It is finished" (John xix. 30). There was no half dying or half living for us. Look at his thoroughness also in the work of our individual salvation (Matt. i. 21). He came to "save his people from their sins"—not in them, as we so often read it. Compare this with Titus ii. 14.

Have you never wished you could read the Bible for the first time, without preconceived ideas, and taking these two verses, had been able to step out with the footstep of faith, and prove in your own personal experience what He could do for you?

He will keep us every moment, in every difficulty and every assault of the enemy; He will thoroughly plead our cause for us; and in so doing He unfolds to us more and more of Himself, and as we get nearer the Light we see more of the need of purging. We find He then undertakes to purge his people (Matt. iii. 12). If the past years have not been sufficient to get rid of the chaff of half-heartedness, let us put ourselves into his hands, saying to Him, "Deal with me as Thou wilt, and let thy Spirit come and purge out from me all the chaff." His reason for all this is that He may thoroughly equip his workers, that, by the medium of the Word, by the power of the Spirit, and by the working of the Holy Trinity, the man of God may be "thoroughly furnished unto all good works."

As He works so thoroughly, He looks for thoroughness in our love and loyalty to Him. He wants our hearts. Read Isa. i. and see how He considers all outside religion as nothing if the heart is not true to Him, putting away all evil. Josh. xxiii. 13 tells that the consequence of the children of Israel not driving out the heathen was, that they became "thorns in their sides," &c. It will be just so with us if we cling to anything contrary to God's will. It will help us in becoming more thorough in our love and loyalty if we study the account of the cleansing of the temple (2 Chron. xxix.). It was cleansed from the inside to the outside, and this is always God's way of working. We must be cleansed within before our lives without are clean (not as the Pharisees, who cleansed the outside first). We should earnestly pray, "Cleanse the thoughts of our hearts by the inspiration of thy Holy Spirit," &c.

Compare this with Ezek. xiv. He expects thoroughness in our work for Him; he does not want surface work. There should be no secondary motives, no desire to gain praise, no working better when another is looking on. If we lived more in his perpetual presence, there would be no taking offence at little things, no variableness, the enthusiasm of one day being replaced by coldness the next, no allowing slight hindrances to stand in the way of his work. There is often a great want of thoroughness in little things. In the study of God's Word let us be thorough. We must make time for the study; must He not be jealous that his own Word is not more studied? jealous too as to the way in which it is sometimes studied! We take our pet subjects and study them, but we do not read the Word as a whole consecutive book, considering by whom, to whom, and the circumstances under which each volume was written. The Bible ought to be read with the same intelligence and careful consideration that we should bestow on a book such as "Green's History of England." Without this thorough study of God's Word, we shall not be able to meet the Agnosticism, Atheism, and all the other "isms" of the present day. We ought each one to know why we call ourselves Christians and Protestants. In our own rooms, quietly, carefully, prayerfully, let us so acquaint ourselves with the truths we believe that we can stand by them, and if need be die for them.

Friendless and Fallen.

HOMES AND OPEN-ALL-NIGHT REFUGE.

During the past year 560 were admitted to the Homes, and 671 to the Open-All-Night Refuge. Amongst these almost every phase of sin and sorrow were represented. During 1891 60 obtained situations as servants; 150 were restored to relatives and friends. These belonged to seventy-one districts and parishes in this great metropolis and the provinces, from Thurso in the North of Scotland, down to Brighton on the south coast.

As in former years, the work has been greatly aided by voluntary workers; amongst these the co-operation of a large staff of lady helpers is acknowledged with grateful thanks. About three thousand Gospel services, temperance meetings, Bible-classes, &c., were held, with very many known happy results.

The year's ordinary needs were met by the year's receipts in donations and subscriptions. Mr. Edward W. Thomas, 200, Euston-road, N.W. received, and as far as possible acknowledges every contribution sent in aid of this mission of mercy.

Cage-lane Mission, Plumstead.

The annual meeting of this Mission was held on the 21st inst., in the new hall, which was well filled, Mr. T. A. Denny presiding.

Captain Tippinge, R.A., hon. secretary, read the financial statement, after which very useful and acceptable counsels were given by Rev. G. Elder and Messrs. R. Paton, J. Wood, and R. C. Morgan.

Next Rev. J. K. Quarterman showed how gracious God had fostered the Mission since it began, in a groom's cottage, more than fifteen years ago, and how that Colonel Travers, and other servants of the Lord, had laid the foundation of a work which has now become a power for good in the neighbourhood, the services being well attended, and frequented with blessed results, whilst 1100 children's names are on the Sunday-school books.

Then Mrs. Anderson (late Miss Russell), the founder of the Mission, in a few words acknowledged God's goodness in blessing her efforts, and explained that the old hall, opened in 1879, was replaced by the present building in 1890.

A copy of last year's report will be forwarded to any interested friends by Mrs. Anderson, 1, Thanet-view-terrace, Plumstead, S.E.

Adult Schools in London

On Saturday last the seventh half-yearly meeting of the Council of Delegates from Adult Schools in and near London, was held in the Memorial Buildings, Roscoe-street, Bunhill-row, E.C. The chair was taken at four o'clock by Mr. Reginald Ryley, of Croydon.

The Secretary read a very lengthy report, which dealt with the work of the movement for the previous year. He stated that six men's schools had been started, and six discontinued; the junior divisions remained as before, and the women's schools showed an increase of one. It was decided to drop the publication of the quarterly magazine, The Adult School, and to continue to publish the weekly record sheets of attendances. In the evening the twenty-fifth annual meeting was held, Mr. J. A. Baker in the chair, when speeches were delivered by W. Braithwaite (Bunhill), Dr. R. H. Fox (Stoke Newington), C. R. Parsons (Bristol), Henry I. Pole (Tottenham), C. Vivian (Penge), and others.

YOUNG MEN AT THE SEASIDE.—Arrangements have been made in connection with the Hackney Y.M.C.A. for young men to spend a fortnight's holiday in camp at Lowestoft and on the Norfolk and Suffolk Broads, from July 30 to August 13. Excursions will be arranged to neighbouring places of interest, and open-air services will be held. The cost will be £1 5s. for the fortnight, non-members of the Y.M.C.A. 5s. more. Details may be ascertained from Mr. F. L. Porter, Hackney Y.M.C.A., 2, Mare-street, N.E.

Christian Enthusiasm.

BY MAJOR SETON CHURCHILL.

A Christian negro on hearing a white man sneer at too much religious enthusiasm, said "Massa, is it not better that the pot should bubble over, than that it should not boil at all?" Of course there may be such a thing as ill-regulated zeal in a good cause, which sometimes brings danger to the cause espoused, but speaking generally Christianity does not suffer from excessive enthusiasm in this our matter-of-fact nineteenth century. Many hold up their hands in pious horror at the very word enthusiasm, and recount, whenever they get an opportunity, the one or two instances known to them, in which ill regulated zeal has done harm, by, at all events in their estimation, injuring the cause of religion; quite forgetting the enormous amount of good that has been effected in the world by enthusiasm. Owing to the prevailing lukewarm spirit in this fallen world of ours, the very word "enthusiast" is sometimes almost a term of reproach, and is applied most indiscriminately to every earnest Christian who has the least inclination to zeal in a good cause. The writer was once speaking to a lady about a certain Christian officer who was eminent in good works, and she said in a contemptuous tone, "Why, I look upon that man as a perfect enthusiast," as if the fact of his being so was, without any further accusation, sufficient condemnation. The writer could not help replying that he thought it would be well for all who professed and called themselves Christians, if they had a little more of the same complaint. And yet that lady was a true Christian, and undoubtedly loved her Saviour. She had, however, for so long been breathing the tainted atmosphere of a worldly form of religion, that she had at last come to think that zeal in the cause of Him whom she loved was something to be repressed and frowned upon.

Enthusiasm is described in the dictionary as intense interest or passionate zeal and is derived from the Greek word enthousiazo, which means "to be inspired by a god." Some have naturally the power of taking a more intense interest in a subject than others, and one has but to awaken this interest to call forth the latent powers of enthusiasm which they possess. Others who may not naturally be gifted with much power of enthusiasm can by careful attention cultivate it. The young, as a rule, have enthusiasm in a far greater degree than older people, and, generally speaking, no cause will succeed in attracting the energies of youth to its side that cannot appeal to its enthusiasm. One of the greatest mistakes that is made by a certain class of religious persons is to endeavour to suppress enthusiasm among the younger supporters of their cause. Nothing is more charming to the mind of most people than to see young men and young women, with all the freshness of youth, throwing themselves into the battle of life, into the conflict with sin, temptation, and evil in every form. As we grow older the tendency is for all of us to become more cautious and calculating. It is, therefore, the more charming to witness youth, in all the flush of a first love, dashing on with enthusiasm, regardless of consequences to the thick of the fight. Woe be to him who dares to throw cold water on the fires of enthusiasm burning within the breast of youth! Old and cautious heads are needed, it is true, to guide and direct youthful zeal, but no one is fit to be a leader of men who fails to recognise the value of enthusiasm, whether in the lives of older or younger persons. A thousand times better is it to see the pot bubbling over than not to see it boil at all, or to see a few mistakes made here and there by ill-regulated enthusiasm than not to see any of that noble God-inspiring quality in existence. Cold, calculating natures, useful as they may be at times, are not the characters that lead to victory. The general who is too timid to advance for fear of making a mistake is not the man to win many battles. A cause that is to triumph must have adherents full of enthusiasm, and, though a few mistakes may be made, the leaders need not be afraid so long as the spirit of enthusiasm is maintained.

Enthusiasm may exhibit itself in different ways, and it is just as real in the quiet, self-restrained, calm, devoted follower of a cause, as it is in the more emotional, demonstrative natures, and sometimes, indeed, more ardent. It is well, however, to recognise it in every form and to welcome it as an ally in the cause of truth. Powerful forces of this kind which move human nature, refuse to be produced to order, or to be forced into certain stereotyped grooves. The sacred fires of enthusiasm burn within the soul, and will not always regulate themselves as we would wish. Too often over-cautious leaders in the attempt to over-regulate enthusiasm, have only succeeded in quenching the fire altogether. It has been well said that one spark of true enthusiasm is worth tons of caution. One spark wisely treated will kindle into a flame, but over much caution acts like a damp blanket.

Were it not for enthusiasm, we should succumb to great difficulties more frequently than we now do. In going up, a few years ago, to a frontier station in Burmah, our fleet of fifty boats was brought to a standstill when they reached a certain shallow part of the river, and there they had to wait till an enormous tidal wave dashed up the river. When we heard the approaching wave in the distance, we put into some of the numerous creeks in the stream, for otherwise we would have been swamped. But no sooner had the wave passed, than every effort was made to take advantage of it, and so get over what had before been the shallow parts, and within a few minutes the fleet was floating on the deep waters beyond the shoals. Enthusiasm often plays the part of that tidal wave, and we see the results in both home and foreign missions. There are times in the history of the church when the fires of enthusiasm burn very low, and then overwhelming difficulties present themselves. We look at the dense masses of our home population, and ask ourselves how these are to be reached. Who is going to plant himself in the midst of the seething masses of humanity around us? Who will give up a pleasant country life, in the midst of lovely scenery and health-giving fresh air, to go and stay in the heart of any great, over-crowded city, so as to live in the hearts of the people, who exist and die in such an uncongenial atmosphere? But if the outlook at home is bad, how much more so is it abroad, where we see there such dense masses of heathenism, and where, added to unhealthy surroundings, there are so many other drawbacks.

Looked at from the human standpoint, the cause of home and foreign missions does, indeed, appear to be hopeless. The difficulties are apparently insurmountable. But waves of enthusiasm, sent by the great Head of the Church, sweep along from time to time, and young enthusiasts, reckless of all consequences in their ardent zeal for Christ, volunteer to take the posts of danger. "Soldiers," said Garibaldi, "I have nothing to offer but rags, poverty, and wounds, but let him who loves his country follow me." We know the result of that noble appeal, and how many thousands flocked to the standard then set up. A greater Captain appeals to his followers from time to time, but He does not, like the recruiting sergeant, paint in false colours the glories of the service. He holds out no worldly honours, no wealth, nor titles which men value. On the contrary, He points to the suffering, the hardships, the disappointments, and says, "Follow Me." To human eyes it appears a strange way in which to recruit workers, and there are seasons in the history of Christ's Church when the appeal is made in vain. But, thank God, there are other seasons when He blesses his Church, when the call appeals to all that is noblest and best in human nature, and young men and women, full of divine enthusiasm, respond, looking for no other reward but the Master's smile hereafter, accompanied by the words, "Well done, thou good and faithful servant,...enter thou into the joy of thy Lord."

Enthusiasm is infectious. A few enthusiastic spirits will soon arouse others to take a deeper interest in any cause they have espoused. There is a better nature within each one of us, which feels ashamed of itself when brought into contact with others bubbling over with ardour. We instinctively feel the painful contrast which exists between our apathy and their zeal, and so we lash ourselves on to increased exertion and effort. We often hear such devotional conferences as are held at Mildmay-park and Keswick sneered at by lukewarm Christians, and spoken of as mere talkee-talkee gatherings, where nothing practical is done, and where everything ends in talk. This, however, is a very superficial view of the question, for at those conferences are gathered together a very large number of earnest Christian workers, and it is absolutely impossible for some of the more lukewarm, average, every-day Christians to come much into their society without catching some of the spirit of life and enthusiasm which abounds. It would be well for many congregations if, instead of harshly criticising the preacher's sermons, and saying that they were wanting in spiritual life and tone, they would subscribe together to pay the preacher's expenses so as to enable him to attend one of these devotional conferences, where he could be brought into personal contact with other Christian workers, and thus catch some of their enthusiasm, life, and energy. The result in many parishes and churches would be increased work and spiritual tone.

The tendency of human nature, unless great use is made of the external aids that God gives us, is to degenerate into lukewarmness, which is a form of spiritual disease. Lukewarmness acts in a church in exactly the opposite way to enthusiasm. It is the damp blanket that smothers the fire. Half-hearted soldiers never win victories, and lukewarm Christians never play the part of heroes. Lukewarm people always see a lion in the way, and never attempt to overcome difficulties. Christians who have lost their first love, and feel the chilling waters of lukewarmness stealing over their souls, should be on their guard. The hottest iron when steeped in cold water will cool and harden, and the warmest Christians when surrounded by the chilling atmosphere of lukewarmness will soon grow cold, and cease to influence those around them. They will lose all enthusiasm for spiritual work, and degenerate into poor creatures who are always moaning and groaning and criticising others. In the most degenerate times of the Jews, we are told that "they that feared the Lord spake often one to another," and thus, doubtless, they helped to stir each other up, and were the better able to resist the depressing atmosphere of that age.

In this nineteenth century we cannot improve on that example. Contact with bright, enthusiastic Christians has a wonderfully good effect on our spiritual life. A speaker once told a story about a canary which sang very beautifully. The owner had a friend who possessed some sparrows, and he borrowed the canary to put into the cage with the idea of teaching the sparrows to sing like canaries. But the canary was afraid of the strange birds, and, instead of singing, stopped in one corner and was silent. The owner took back his bird, but still he found it would not sing, so the idea occurred to him of putting it into a cage with another of its own kind which also sang beautifully. This had the desired effect, and the canary regained its old note when it found itself in the presence of another that sang well. How many lukewarm Christians who have once been bright and enthusiastic would recover this joyous enthusiasm if only they would avoid the causes of their stumbling and again cultivate the society of others who are not ashamed to be full of Christian enthusiasm.

Sunday Work in Italian Ports.

An English merchant resident in Italy, where, in recent years, working cargoes on Sundays has been introduced at the instance of British merchants and shipowners, writes to the Missions to Seamen:—"It has now become the regular thing for British ships to work cargo at Savona on Sunday. It is really a downright scandal to see Greek, Italian, Danish, and Norwegian steamers in the port all quiet on the Lord's Day, whilst the English steamer's lying alongside are all at work. As far as we can learn, it is entirely the owners' fault. Men who have quite a reputation for piety at home seem to give their shipmasters pretty clearly to understand that if they do not work cargo on Sundays, when in foreign ports, it will be the worse for them."

The chief officer of a large mail steamer writes:—"I may say that we have not had many quiet Sundays, as that day has generally been our busiest at Brindisi." These mail steamers are timed by the Postmaster-General to discharge cargoes and baggage at Brindisi on Sundays, instead of on a week-day.

THE NATIVE AFRICAN CHOIR sang last week at Hawarden, Mr. Gladstone being one of the audience. In a brief speech of thanks, the right hon. gentleman referred to the great progress made during his public career in the development of Africa. Instead of treating the natives of South Africa as enemies, we now treated them as friends and, he hoped, as fellow Christians.

The Outlook in Ireland.

[BY OUR SPECIAL CORRESPONDENT.]

A paragraph has recently gone the rounds of the religious press, stating that Rev. Joseph A. O'Shea, D.D., had severed his connection with the Church of Rome. The announcement was unauthorised, but the statement is nevertheless true. Father O'Shea is a remarkable man. In The Catholic for May (Mr. Connellan's monthly, Macredy and Ryle, 49, Middle Abbey-street, Dublin), he states at length his reasons for leaving the Church of Rome. The narrative is deeply interesting, and is certain to be extensively read by Protestants and Roman Catholics.

Father O'Shea has been over a quarter of a century in the ministry of the Roman Church. He belonged to the Franciscan order, and ministered in Dublin, Cork, Limerick, Waterford, Drogheda, and Galway. He made hosts of friends in all these towns, and left the priesthood of his own free will. He holds documents from the General of his order, as well as from the Irish Provincial, showing that up to the time of his leaving the priesthood, some months ago, his record was faultless. For these reasons his decided stand on the side of pure Christianity must have a far-reaching influence within and far beyond his native land.

It is very remarkable that the Roman Breviary, so carefully compiled for the purpose of keeping clerics in darkness, was the instrument used by God to shake Mr. O'Shea's faith in his church. In reading the so-called "Divine Office" one day the following sentence from St. Augustine caught his attention and fastened in his mind: "Nescitis quia corpora vestra templum sunt spiritus sancti qui in Vobis est! Et ideo fratres caressimi quid nullis praecedentibus meritis per gratiam Dei meruimus fieri templum Dei." In these words St Augustine, treating of that text in which St. Paul declares the Christian to be the temple of God, declares that such a privilege is not merited, but is the result of God's grace. This was the beginning of Mr. O'Shea's doubts, and, having begun to think for himself, it is needless to say such doubts soon trod upon each other.

Mr. O'Shea spent six years in Rome, and sheds useful side-lights upon the condition of Italy under ecclesiastical sway. He says:

> I have at the period of which I write a distinct recollection of a convent of a certain religious order, which from its close proximity to the college of St. Isidore, where I then studied, was well known to me. Out of a community of two hundred men, 100 priests and forty lay brothers, probably a dozen of the former did all the church duties, whilst the lay band of this active household invaded the houses of the people, begging from house to house, and like so many locusts preying on the vitals of the Romans. Some of these priests, I feel positively sure, for months together never looked at a book, except their breviaries; seldom at a newspaper, their thoughts being specially directed to the quality of their food for dinner, and a desire for a glass of good Falernian wine.
> I shall never forget a conversation I once heard amongst some ecclesiastics of the type I now have been describing, the subject matter being railways as opposed to morality. One of them assured his hearers, amidst general applause that Pope Gregory XVI. was worthy of all praise for his wisdom in not allowing, during his reign, a railway train to enter the Eternal City. The speaker concluded that loss of the temporal power on the introduction of railways, with other minor calamities, pointed to the fact that Gregory was right.

It would seem that the scramble for ecclesiastical preferment in the corridors of the Vatican did not favourably impress Mr. O'Shea. He says:

> I afterwards witnessed, during my six years' residence in Italy, much of the intriguing and back-stairs diplomacy carried on at the Vatican. Candidates for dignities or places of emolument were obliged to stoop to flattery and prolonged hero worshipping. Even a cardinal's palm, I found, became all the smoother by greasing. The petty jealousy everywhere visible; the underhand attempts to undermine opponents, as well as the success attendant upon ignorance or incompetence, provided it came in golden apparel, reminded me of the intrigues at the Court of Elizabeth or Louis XIV. There was ample evidence of cunning, but unhappily hardly any trace of Christianity.

The entire paper is deeply interesting, and will well repay perusal. Mr. O'Shea has been for some time living with Mr. Connellan, and taking part in the missionary work which the latter is carrying on among Irish Roman Catholics. The prayers of the readers of The Christian are requested for these two men that God may strengthen and sustain them, and make them fitting witnesses for the truth.

The Irish National Teachers have been sitting in conclave during the past week, and the most notable feature in the proceedings is the fact that they have unanimously thrown over the Roman Catholic bishops. Their lordships recently met at Clonliffe, and passed a resolution condemning the Government proposal of direct compulsion. Archbishop Walsh has also been flooding The Freeman's Journal with communications warning the teachers to beware of the Education Bill. In the face of all this, the following resolution, passed unanimously by the teachers, is significant:—

> That having given our most careful consideration to the Education Bill now before Parliament, we give it our warm approval; and, while we recognise that it requires amendment in some particulars in the committee stages, we earnestly request that our Irish Members will use their best efforts in the passing of the Bill, as containing provisions calculated to confer material benefits on Irish national education and the Irish national teachers.

It would be impossible to conceive a stronger testimony to the decreasing influence of the Church of Rome in Ireland. When the teachers, three-fourths of whom are under the control of clerical managers, repudiate the Roman Catholic bishops as guides in educational matters, the handwriting on the wall must be very visible indeed. Another straw, showing the direction of the wind-current, is the election of Mr. D. A. Simmons as President. Dr. M'Allister, Roman Catholic Bishop of Down, compelled the late President, Mr. Ward, to resign. The reply of the Teachers' Congress is to elect a Protestant to the vacant post, so that clerical intimidation will henceforth be inoperative.

THE METROPOLITAN MUSIC-HALL.

The winter's campaign here was brought to a close on Sunday week, when Mr. Chas. Cook concluded his seventeenth year at the hall. The building, which seats about two thousand, was quite full, and it is important to note that while the services have been carried on for these many years past, the Gospel, aided only by the voices of a trained band of singers, has succeeded in filling one of the largest halls in the West-end. The season thus closed has been most successful and fruitful; distinct and remarkable cases of conversion having occurred, and at every service the many workers have been busy with anxious souls.

Among the most interesting services were those which were specially held for young men, and as many of Mr. Cook's workers live in the large firms close by, it is quite easy to advertise a service on "young men's night," when seats are specially reserved for them, and besides the ordinary congregation there has been a thousand young men for whom extra seats were provided. Many of these have waited behind to be dealt with individually. Among friends who have helped Mr. Cook this year may be mentioned Messrs. R. A. Elvey, J. H. Lydall, Geo. E. Morgan, and W. B. Wookey. The work is partly self-supporting, the expense being about £10 weekly; but £50 is needed to clear the present deficiency. Address: Mr. Chas. Cook, 6, Frithville-gardens, Shepherd's-bush, W.

SOLDIERS' HOME, AVENUE-ROAD, GOSPORT.—The work here has been carried on since September, 1888, by the Misses Ridout. The Home is situated conveniently for the barracks and forts, and the report just published states: "Many soldiers and marines, now scattered in all parts of the world, look back to it as the place where they first learnt to know Christ as their Saviour; their letters showing their affection for 'our dear little Home,' as they love to call it, are very touching. Gosport is really an important centre for this work. On one hand there are the troopships which every year convey thousands of our young soldiers to foreign shores, and on the other hand is the discharge depôt where the men who have served their time assemble on their return from abroad."

NOTES FROM NAMUR.

Namur, the gem of the Belgium provinces, the favourite of tourists who crowd in summer to the picturesque borders of the Meuse, is in a sad moral and religious condition. For the last thirty years a faithful colporteur has been at work carrying his satchel full of Bibles and the good news of salvation from hill to hill and from village to village. It is a work of patience and love, for the peasants, entirely in the hands of priests and landed proprietors, can only buy the book in secret and dare not come out openly for the Lord. Those who have ventured to do so have been deprived of their work and exposed to persecution and starvation.

The province lay heavily on the hearts of the Committee of the Belgian Missionary Church, but means were wanting, and Namur might still be uncared for, but for the generous help of a friend in Scotland, who in the summer of 1890 offered to pay the expenses of a pastor for the next two years. The right man for this arduous post was soon found in Monsieur Junod, a student of the Evangelical Theological School of Geneva, full of energy and zeal. He and his sister, a devoted Christian worker, settled at Namur, in October, 1890. Though alone, M. Junod set himself with courage to the task. The hall is crowded on Sunday morning and evening, and the space is so insufficient that the building of a suitable place of worship is becoming more and more necessary. Meetings have been begun on week-days in a very populous quarter of the town. With the sole charge of the evangelisation of this large town, M. Junod has not neglected the province. After many months of patient labour, God has blessed the work and greatly encouraged his servant.

A word may be added as to the many encouragements the Belgian Missionary Church has had lately in the manufacturing and mining districts. A fact that speaks for itself is, that six churches or meeting-halls ought to be erected to meet the most pressing wants. The five others are all more pressing than Namur, so that the capital of this large province may have to wait a long time before it has a single Protestant Church. We hope that some readers will feel led to contribute to the direct mission work, or towards the erection of some of these places of worship so urgently wanted.

REVIVAL ON "THE ROCK."

During the six weeks' stay of the Channel Fleet at Gibraltar the Soldiers' Institute was much used by the blue-jackets. "As well for the body as the soul" has been our motto, and we have done our utmost to provide safe moorings in this notoriously bad anchorage. Thanks to our good Governor, a disused guard-room was granted us, with a supply of bedding. Here twenty-five beds were fitted up, the walls adorned with bright texts and pictures, a good fire kept burning on the hearth, and a reliable blue-jacket installed in charge. Every general leave night this little "Bethel" was full, and many had to be turned away; no less than seven hundred were provided with beds during the stay of the squadron.

A fortnight's Mission was carried on at the institute by the sailors and soldiers, and proved a time of great blessing. These simple meetings which were entirely sustained by the men themselves, were well attended, and were marked by deep earnestness and fervour. Fourteen men of both services professed conversion, and many others were convicted of sin.

The last meeting before the squadron left will long be remembered by all who were privileged to be present. Those who had received blessing during the mission were urged to testify and four minutes were allowed to each. There was no holding back, and it was a soul-stirring sight to see the young converts jumping up two at the time to tell what the Lord had done for their souls. Although the meeting was continued for two hours and a-half, many were unable to speak. Several were moved to tears as they told how a mother's prayers had followed them around the world, to be answered on the "Rock."

Letters received from the Fleet report that the blessing is still being felt, one on board having remarked that "if they go on at this rate they will soon have the whole ship's company in."

Drink and Drugs in India.

In spite of the strong hold which the traffic in drink and drugs has upon the Indian Government on account of the large revenue it yields—which, no doubt, is the root of it all—yet it is some comfort to know that the efforts made by Christian philanthropists, both in England and in India of late years, have not been without encouraging results.

It is true that in this, as well as in all other reforms that involve a sacrifice, the leaders in the fight have had to bear no small amount of abuse. They have been stigmatised as hare-brained enthusiasts, and called by other such complimentary names; this the inevitable result of assailing a golden idol, which, like Diana of old, brings no small gain unto the craftsmen.

But a man who is not prepared to stand taunting and jeering, and even to be called a "devil," has not in him the stuff of which reformers are made, and he is not fit to enter the arena of conflict with evil backed up by financial interests. It matters not how vile and villanous any concern may be, if it is built up on the ground of gain and bound together by a golden chain, it is hard to abolish it. So it was with slavery in the West Indies; and so it was with the same evil in America; and so it is with the drink and the drug trade in India. When a huge monster of social and moral evil is gilded over with something like ten million pounds' worth of glittering gold, there are eyes which find it hard to discover its monstrosity, and those who dare condemn it are called "fanatics" and "fools." Be it so. Hard names break no bones, and as long as we can succeed to get our shafts to enter, now and then, beneath the golden harness of the monster, and hit him hard in some vital part, we may well bear the blows of nasty names which fall upon us. Yea, more, it is an honour to be abused for doing what we can to destroy that which is the destruction of others.

I wish to show the readers of The Christian that, in spite of strong financial interests, considerable progress has been made to uproot the upas trees of drinks and drugs in India. Some twenty years ago the contest went on in this country. But as there is no force of public opinion here, we found that little or nothing could be done or could be obtained by or from our bureaucratic Government in India. What they cared for was revenue. As the excise seemed to be elastic, pressure was put upon it, and certainly it yielded a golden harvest, while at the same time it impoverished and demoralised the people in millions.

The chief feature of this was found in the new system of excise introduced into Bengal under the name of "out-stills," by which a right was sold to the highest bidder at a public auction to open private stills all the country over, for a monthly rent paid to Government. These stills multiplied by thousands, and the rush for the new liquor was great. Drinking and drunkenness deluged the land, and the rents soon raised the revenue enormously.

The average excise revenue of Bengal was from £500,000 to £600,000, but the new system, by which the people were demoralised wholesale, soon doubled the Abkari income in Bengal, and the Government being in such pressing need of money, it was no doubt a great temptation to keep on such a growing source of revenue.

For years I strove to expose the ruinous system, but it seemed all in vain. My protests were like "a voice in the wilderness"; but at last the "voice" reached the ears and touched the hearts of a few kind and philanthropic friends in England, among which it is right to mention the names of such friends as Mr. Samuel Smith, M.P., and Mr. W. S. Caine.

Let me briefly notify a few of the results in spite of such powerful opposition; nor would it be fair to omit an allusion to the shuffling and shifting attitude of the official excise element in its strenuous efforts to foil and frustrate the imperative orders for the needed reform.

When God gave us a man who feared Him to rule in Bengal, the late Sir Rivers Thompson, there was some hope of reform in India itself. Chiefly as the result of our constant exposure of the evils of the new excise system in Bengal, Sir Rivers instituted an Excise Commission to inquire into the results of the whole system. This Commission (in 1884) came to the conclusion that the system had greatly promoted drunkenness. Sir Rivers therefore ordered a large number of the out-stills to be closed, and the result was a falling off of some £40,000 in the revenue in one year. This cheered our hearts, for it meant the saving of over £100,000 to the people, and a GREAT CHECK TO SOCIAL AND MORAL EVILS.

But, strange to say, no sooner was this Governor gone than new out-stills were opened, and the revenue again restored to its former altitude. It was at this crisis that our good friends in London organised the "Anglo Indian Temperance Association," through whose instrumentality the out-still received its death-blow, and a number of other reforms had to be introduced. Our friends at home who are interested in India may wish to know what these reforms are.

The first and greatest by far is the closing of the out-stills—a work, by the bye, which has not yet been fully done, for, under the plea that very cheap liquor is required on the borders of native States to avoid smuggling, and that people living far off from towns and cities require private grog shops amongst them, some 250 of these cheap liquor stills are still kept on, while about five thousand have been closed.

The next reform was the increase of duty imposed upon imported spirits. Cheap and nasty spirits came into India by millions of bottles beautifully decorated and called "good brandy." This used to sell at one rupee, or 2s. per bottle, and as it looked so tempting, and being "foreign" liquor, it was thought to be better and more "respectable" than the common native liquor, consequently the richer classes of natives went in for it largely, and it killed many. But we have got the Government to put on four shillings extra duty on all imported liquor, and the trade in this vitriolous brandy is greatly reduced.

Then we have succeeded in securing at least a tacit approval of the principle of Local Option. In several cases where liquor shops have been objected to they have been either closed or removed, and this is in accord with excise instructions sent out by the Secretary of State for India. We consider this from the former non-possumus reply, in case of any application for removal or closing.

Another measure of reform has been a promise made to abolish the "minimum guarantee" system, by which the manufacturers of liquor for Government were bound down to produce a certain number of gallons annually, and to pay so much duty on each gallon. This system, as it was subject to competition, inevitably compelled the contractor to push the sales lest he could not dispose of the quantity for which he was bound to pay duty to Government. This is chiefly confined now to Bombay, and even there it is to cease.

Then duty has now been levied upon Indian-made beer. We have a number of breweries in this country to brew beer chiefly for British troops. Until Mr. Caine moved in the matter no duty was put upon this Indian-made beer.

Since October last we have had an increased taxation on liquor in the North-West Province, and this extra cost of the retail price has greatly reduced the consumption.

Last of all, an order has gone forth to forbid licence to men who wish to carry on as before opium dens for smoking chundoo. So far, all the dens have not been closed, but it is now pretty sure that they will by degrees be abolished, as it has been decided that such places "demoralise the people."

I should also mention that it is now under serious consideration whether the sale of opium in Burmah should not be quite prohibited. The preponderance of official opinion seems to be in favour of abolition.

I have no room now to give you even a sketch of the various ways and means that have been, and still are, adopted to hold on, as far as possible, to the old systems in excise, which brought in the most grist to the mill of the State; that I hope to do on a future occasion, as I deem it right to give a full and a fair picture of the modus operandi of our Excise administration in India.

What we need, above all, is for the English public and the British Parliament to take a deeper interest in the social, moral, and spiritual well-being of this country, with its teeming millions of people, who are as much the subjects of the British Crown as the people of Great Britain and Ireland.

It is comforting to see a few of our statesmen waking up to their duty to this vast empire, and we hope the number of such Members of Parliament will go on increasing more and more.

THE YOUNG WOMEN OF INDIA.

During the past year the need has been felt by many for more definite work amongst English-speaking young women in India, and the attention of workers on the Young Women's Christian Association has been called to this fact. They are of three classes:—I. English from home; II. Eurasian girls in India; III. Educated native Christian girls. Missionaries spend all their time in work among the heathen, and all deplore the lack of workers for this important class.

Among the first are many young and inexperienced girls who come from school direct to the dangers of Indian life, and when not associated with church or missionary work, as they would be at home, find no congenial sympathy and interest such as the Young Women's Christian Association affords.

Eurasian girls are a large and growing community of girls, who need the training and stimulus that such an association gives. They often leave school early, with insufficient education and mental training, and a false estimate of the dignity of woman's work. They have no advantages in the way of libraries or educational classes, and need to be brought in touch with such Christian influence as the Young Women's Christian Association offers.

There is an ever-increasing number of educated native Christian girls for whom no provision is made in existing organisations. Brought up in Christian boarding-schools they go out into the world with an English education, but needing the further training and direction which the Young Women's Christian Association would give them.

Associations have been formed in a good many places in India, and they are making an appeal for ladies to come out to superintend and organise the work which they see needs to be done. Ladies of the resident English population, free to work, are constantly shifting about; therefore permanent secretaries in large cities and in many railway centres are absolutely essential to the success of the work. Calcutta, Madras, Lahore, Naini Tal, have already called for help. Our appeal is to the Young Women's Christian Association of America and England to send us out some ladies of experience and devotion who shall give themselves to this truly missionary work—one lady to begin with who shall seek to lead the Christians in name in this land to be Christians in deed and in truth, and help them to a higher spiritual life. If need be, such a lady, or ladies, must be supported. Two hundred rupees a month (viz., £200 or 1000 dollars a year) and travelling expenses would be required. A few rich Associations at home might undertake it.

In the name of many fellow-workers in India we earnestly ask you to make this appeal a matter of careful prayer and thought, and not to delay in sending us some one.

Miss Macpherson's Work.

On Thursday last a fine, bright band of boys and girls, numbering seventy in all, started from the Home of Industry for Canada, under the care of Mr. Merry and his son Edward. This, the 63rd party, consists mostly of big, sturdy lads, likely to find ready welcome on the other side. There are about twenty girls, gathered chiefly from a sad and neglected life. As a show of hands revealed at the Workers' Meeting, many of the little emigrants are orphans, having lost either one or both parents.

Miss Macpherson had, on the eve of their departure—which was also the evening of the Workers' Meeting—the company assembled in the lower room to greet visitors, and make sweet music. By-and-by, one or two others having spoken, our sister talked to the children in her own vivid way, telling them and the friends around something of the horrors of intemperance, as seen in East London during the holidays. Speaking of a public-house, which a hundred and fifty children were seen to enter in a few minutes, Miss Macpherson referred hopefully to the Bill for prohibiting the sale of liquor to children now before the House of Commons, and which, it is sincerely to be trusted, may ere long become law.

An Occasional Paper, just issued, gives an interesting outline of the progress of the work. Therein Miss Macpherson writes:—

"With much thankfulness we desire to tell how the Lord has upheld us, you who have so lately mourned and sympathised with us in our deep sorrow, in the sudden departure of our beloved sister, Mrs. Merry—called to enter upon her eternal rest in the many-mansioned home with the Lord Jesus. It is a blank in heart, home, and work, never to be filled, for, from the first rescued boy until the last little orphan girl she received, the day she told out most calmly that her work on earth was done, her motherly counsel, help, and yearning for their spiritual welfare never failed, leaving with us a glorious testimony that every step of her life had been marked by the Lord's goodness and mercy. She rejoiced that her five children were all witnessing for the Lord Jesus. The poor mourn for her as they would for a mother. Her death has, we humbly believe, led some who were halting to decide and accept the Saviour.

"In answer to your prayers we have, as a family, been most graciously enabled, day by day, to go forward in the work to which our loved sister had given her life, looking forward to a joyful reunion.

PRESENT SURROUNDINGS.

"Friends will be glad to know that the department of our work of saving the children—orphans, or destitute of one parent—goes on, having our Heavenly Father's smile. Mr. Merry, sen., sailed on April 21 with the sixty-third party. We now commence filling up vacant beds, and our second band will sail probably in June. We expect that four parties of children will be arriving at our Ontarian Home this summer. We are most grateful for the gifts of clothing already received, enabling us to complete the outfit of many a lonely little one, who never before knew what it was to have a comfortable change of garments. We train them to thank for each one, as a gift from the loving Lord Himself by the hands of his saints.

"The world does not become purer or better, and the histories of our sorrowful children we bury in his bosom day by day, otherwise our hearts would break. Wisdom from above (James iii. 17) tells us, that the less we say of the past, the sooner they are uplifted into the better fitting for the daily duties of life. We plead for your continued prayers for ten thousand young people, growing up and being influenced by one or another branch of our family in Canada. It would be delightful to go and end our days in their midst, but we esteem it a higher privilege to train younger workers to bear responsibility, using our health and remaining strength in rescuing and training, as the Lord wills from day to day, the sadly-bereaved, helpless children, assisted by a staff of honorary lady workers filled with zeal and devotion for his service, and always a number of youthful lady candidates, who will soon be doing like work among the young in China, India, and Africa.

"Since the opening, five years ago, of this new Home of Industry, our large, commodious halls have enabled us to double the numbers, and add to our home mission work many fresh devisings. A Sunday-school of more than a hundred rough boys, many of whom had imbibed infidel notions, has been reduced to order by the discipline of love, and now many a little Christian lad goes home, and reading daily his Scripture portion, influences his parents till they also are willing to come and hear the Gospel. Instead of saying there is "no hell or devil," they show by their lives that a change has been wrought in them.

"Although we have had a very sad winter—deaths very frequent, and many a poor one still frail, having had influenza—we have had a deepening of spiritual life and more decided conversions than ever before. For this we are devoutly thankful, and continually render unto the Lord our united praise. Two of our richer sisters in the country have had some of our delicate children in turns, feeding them almost from their own tables, sending them back to us with healthy, rosy cheeks. Another lady, whose delight is in giving books, has presented us with twelve hundred volumes for our Canadian protégés.

"Regarding funds, our faith may have been tested, doubtless to prove if our hold was upon our God's faithfulness; with deepest gratitude we record that He faileth never. Observing our usual economy, we have no debt, and go forward in absolute dependence upon the living God from day to day.

TRAINING FOR THE MISSION FIELD.

"We have twelve missionary agencies embracing work among (old and young) several thousands of the poor. Very many of our young helpers are now active workers in all parts of the world, having learned to win souls whilst in contact with one or other of the experienced workers, whose residence for many years with us enables them to assist those who are either young, or on untried ground. This week several young ladies have been accepted by the Missionary Societies, who had sent them to us that they might test their gifts in practical work." Several of the societies write as follows:—

Dear Miss Macpherson,—The Council warmly appreciate the help it is to our young sisters to have a few months at the Home of Industry. I esteem very highly the benefit derived from association with experienced workers. There is all the difference between "Go, and do it" and "Come and help me do it" in the beginning of Christian work.

Dear Madame,—We have been very pleased to hear, both from Miss W—— and her sister, that the training with you is one that they have derived benefit from. They seem to have taken an interest in the work which has helped to draw them out. I hope you have also been pleased with them. Miss W—— is en route to India, to take up work among children.

Dear Miss Macpherson,—I thank you for the very kind note about our two young friends. The Committee were much gratified that you could speak so well of them and their suitability for our work, and they were at once very cordially accepted. With all sincere sympathy with you in your very important and interesting work.

Detailed accounts follow of visits to the children in Canada by Messrs. Thom and Panzera, who report thankfully on the loving and happy homes found by most of them.

Dr. Neatby gave, at the Workers' meeting, a helpful exposition of Isa. xii. 1-3, showing that in having Jah-Jehovah as our salvation and strength there is sure comfort, perfect peace, fulness of strength, gladness of joy, and real usefulness in blessing to others.

Mr. Joseph Merry spoke with much emotion of what the Lord had been to him and his in the sorrow of parting with their dear one. He asked earnest prayer for the home work, the party crossing the ocean and entering on a new life, and for all the young people in Canada, that God may call many of them into his service.

Miss Gurney gave some details of her journeyings in America and Canada, and asked prayer for the work among the Police.

GEORGE-STREET MISSION, LAMBETH. — The workers have much need for Gospel and Temperance Tracts and papers, suitable for open-air work in Lambeth-walk, where thousands congregate on the Lord's Day. Last year 350 addresses were given at fifty-eight street-corner services, while sixty-five thousand tracts were distributed. Help should be sent to Mr. G. Goodman, 29, Princes-square, S.E.

JEWISH COLONIES IN PALESTINE.—The "Lovers of Zion" Society has bought a fine piece of land, about 2400 acres in extent on the east side of Jordan for a colony in which distressed Russian Jews may settle. This first colony of a series, which it is hoped will eventually be established and controlled by British Jews, is situate in the Hauran, a part of the territory which was of old assigned to the tribe of Manasseh.

THE LATE MISS CROSSLE, DUBLIN.

A Dublin correspondent sends us some interesting particulars of the life-work of this lady whose death was noted in last week's obituary:—

We remarked her at first taking a leading part in attending meetings promoted by the Dublin Y.M.C.A. for evangelistic work, specially undertaken by that society after Mr. Moody's second visit to Ireland. Lady Christian workers were needed by the Association to speak to and direct inquirers at the after-meetings. There Miss Crossle, while able, was always to be found, and being a well-read Christian and one "who knew . . . her Bible true," her services in this department were simply invaluable. She was also a member of, and a much-interested worker in, the Y.W.C.A.

Miss Crossle very soon turned her attention to other work of a practical and philanthropic nature. At the Free Breakfast and Ragged Sunday-school for boys and girls in the Metropolitan Hall, Christian Union-buildings, she was constant in attendance, unremitting in labour and most efficient in her teaching, until her health and the pressure of other duties prevented a continuous attendance there. She commenced in Dublin what may be termed a Sailors' Mission in which the writer frequently accompanied her on Sunday mornings, and sometimes in the afternoon to the North-wall and adjacent quays, where having carried with her a portable organ, several little services with musical accompaniment were started on board various vessels for sailors, who but for this means of grace, would have been practically neglected; at such times the services of the regular seamen's missionaries were fully occupied elsewhere. She was also instrumental in arranging for tea-meetings for these men of every nationality who visited the port, which were held in the Christian Union-buildings, Forbes-street, Mariners' Church, and elsewhere when the sailors assembled, were often cheered by her bright, sunlit countenance, and encouraged in "doing the right," and when the meetings did not break up without a stirring evangelistic address, which, indeed, was the main object with her.

About five years since, after attending one of the Mildmay Conferences, the Lord put it into her heart to try a mission among railway employés in Dublin. This work so developed itself that it may truly be said, the work in this department ultimately made a martyr of her. She, for a long time, was indefatigable in labour, persevering in effort, and systematic in visitation. Having at first combined the Sailors' Mission with this, she was ultimately compelled to admit that the claims of the railway officials so far overcame all others, and were of themselves so onerous and pressing, that she was obliged to devote herself exclusively to them, and it may literally be said, "Died in harness." Though this was so, yet she was most cosmopolitan in her labours, soldiers and children occupying much of her attention.

Besides the local claims of Dublin upon her she laboured at Inchicore, on the Midland line and the Great Northern line especially, and also at all seasons of the year and in all weather made tours of visitation to railway centres such as Crewe and Holyhead, where, when known she was always welcomed, and was instrumental under God, in opening many branches in several northern and other towns—such as Belfast, Armagh, Newry, Portadown, Lurgan, Enniskillen, Monaghan, Londonderry, Omagh, Aughnaclory, Clones, Greenore, Dundalk, Cork, Limerick, Clonmel, and many more. Frequently were these centres visited by her, and as a rule, with good fruit on every occasion.

Her services were eagerly sought after in England. She travelled sometimes four weeks in the quarter, and Crewe and similar places had often the benefit of her unceasing advocacy of "Christ for railway men, and railway men for Christ."

TEACHING STREET BOYS.—A society for teaching street-boys to knit and sew has been started for some months in a city of the United States. They make shirts, sew on buttons, and even work buttonholes, and are described as being very proud of their tidy garments they make for their own wear.

PRAYER FOR THE BLIND.—The thirty-sixth anniversary of the Day of Special Prayer and Thanksgiving on Behalf of the Blind, observed by those friends who take an interest in Dr. Moon's system of embossed reading (now in 419 languages and dialects), and in the establishing of Home-teaching Societies and Free Lending Libraries for the Blind at home and abroad, will (we learn) take place next Sunday.

For the Young.

A HIGHLAND LADDIE.

Some years ago a kind, unknown friend put a notice of the Children's Medical Missionary Society into The Quiver. A mother living in the Highlands read it, and her thoughts went at once to her own little son, her only child. He was not strong, and he was only seven years old, but surely he could do something for those who were less strong than himself, and who lacked the loving care that he so richly enjoyed.

Indeed he could! From that day parcels began from time to time to find their way from that Highland home to the Medical Mission House in London. Toys, books, and Christmas cards were found inside, but they were chiefly filled with warm woollen garments, knitted by John's, busy, helpful fingers. "What an example," the Children's Secretary used to say, "for boys on this side the Border!"

Good ideas grow, and the mother who had planned Medical Mission interests for her own little boy was glad to find him, in his turn, planning to draw other little boys of the neighbourhood into the work that he loved. Why should not they begin to help? None of them could knit or crochet, but they could learn. And so very soon John found himself the centre of a "Highland Laddie Band" of the Children's Medical Missionary Society.

That was at the beginning of the winter of 1890-1, and the result of that winter's work was a large and lovely quilt in German stitch for the John Bishop Hospital, Srinagar, Kashmir; an exhibition of the same at the end of the season; and many earned pennies from the boys for the Medical Mission cause. Such fun the laddies had, too, sometimes, when John's father found time to put them through half-an-hour's military drill.

"We hope to commence work next October, if all be well," the mother now wrote, "and, as we have more room, our Band, I think, will be added to. All the children in the district were delighted with the boys' work, and some of the grown folk would hardly believe it was the work of boys from seven to ten years of age. One lad is thirteen. I do hope that each of my dear boys may early give his heart to Jesus."

October came, and on the 9th, the second Friday of the month, the working parties began. John was delighted to secure a new member—a little fellow from a distance—calling upon the mother to arrange that Willie should have company home. And the friends at the Mission House thought of the laddies as at work again, and sent them something to read. A happy winter of work seemed before all the dear boys. And as for John, he had apparently outgrown his delicacy and was developing not only in physical strength, but as playfellow, home comfort, scholar, and unselfish mission worker.

"He has been so strong and well the past year," wrote the mother later, "and such a help to his father. In the morning before starting for school, he would go off with his little order-book, and take the orders for the day from customers, and feel such a man. The dear little feet were ever ready to run a message, and the dear hands always ready to be put out to help others and to carry their loads. One of the last days I was in Inkeld I met John carrying a large basket for a smaller boy. He could not see a beggar on the road without giving a penny, if he had it to give."

On Thursday, October 22, John and his mother went to Perth, and had a delightful day with the kind friends there. On Monday, 26th, he did not feel well, and stayed in bed. Sore throat, with intense suffering, set in, and when the following Sunday came he asked whether he would die. "I hope not," said the mother; "but would you be afraid?" "No," he replied. "Do you love Jesus?" And though he could speak but little, the mother's heart was gladdened by his "Yes."

That very day the Good Shepherd drew near, and folded his little lamb in his loving arms, more securely than even the tenderest mother could have done, from every fear of sickness and sorrow and sin; and John Lowe Borrie, "the life of the Highland Laddie Band," went to be with his Saviour, and to serve Him better than he had been able to serve Him on earth.

"I must tell you," writes his mother, "of the message we received from his own dear little hand after his death. Last September 3, his ninth birthday, he had the present of a writing-case, of which he was very proud. I was looking through it two days after he left us, when I came on the following lines, written out by himself:—

"God moves in a mysterious way
His wonders to perform;
He plants his footsteps in the sea,
He rides upon the storm.

"Judge not the Lord by feeble sense,
But trust Him for his grace;
Behind a frowning providence
He hides a smiling face."

Our Highland Laddie sees the "smiling face" on the heavenward side of the cloud which now overshadows those who knew and loved him; and light will arise in darkness to them as they carry on the work he loved—of cheering lonely hearts and aiding those in need for the sake of the Lord Jesus Christ.

This they are bravely seeking to do. Once more the Highland Laddie Band has been called together, and though it is not the merry band it once was, it is doing right-down earnest work. The boys have an object in view, and their labour is a labour of love.

For, just as a question arose as to how to connect John's name permanently with the work of the Highland Laddies a letter came from Dr. Lankester, of Amritsar, India, who has gone to help Dr. Henry Martyn Clark, and it said, "What shall I call the Children's Medical Missionary Society bed? What would you like?"

"Call it the 'John Lowe Borrie' Cot," was the reply.

And now the object of the Highland Laddies and of their friends is to earn or collect the whole of the £10 needed to support this cot in Dr. Clark's hospital. They have cards, and are to have an annual sale for this purpose. And Dr. Lankester has promised a letter about the hospital work and a photograph of the cot.

And so, in his earthly home and circle, and in the Amritsar ward, our Highland Laddie, though dead, will yet be speaking.

God grant that many of the boy members of our Children's Auxiliary may show the same gentle, manly, faithful spirit in their lives and work that our little John Lowe Borrie did.

Missionary Pence Association.

The notice of this movement in a recent issue has resulted in a considerable number of applications for membership, and has awakened a degree of interest that shows there is a work for it to do. There is much latent sympathy with Foreign Missions, and desire to help, that only need a definite channel through which to flow. It is to focus such interest that this Association has been formed. It appeals earnestly to church members, Sunday-school workers, Bible-class leaders, and, indeed, all Christians desirous of aiding the missionary cause.

Members are expected to give, and to get from as many others as possible, contributions at the rate of a penny per week, and they may specify any Missionary Society to which they wish the amount sent, specially prepared cards being provided for the purpose. All desiring information or willing to join, are invited to write to the hon. secretary, Mr. John Jackson, St. Martin's House, 1, Gresham-street, London, E.C.

CHILDREN'S SCRIPTURE UNION.—The following are the portions for the ensuing week:—Sun., May 1, Col. i. 1-17; Mon., May 2, Col. i. 18-29; Tues., May 3, Col. ii. 1-15; Wed., May 4, Col. iii. 1-15; Thurs., May 5, Col. iii. 16-25; Fri., May 6, Col. iv. 1-18; Sat., May 7, Judges i. 1-15.

ORPHAN APPRENTICE HOME.—This quiet work goes on, as we learn from the latest report, steadily and well: "The Home is now full, the trades to which the ten boys are apprenticed are bookbinding, carpentering, printing, and tailoring. We continue to feel the great importance of providing a Home where Christian influences are brought to bear on these lads during the years of their apprenticeship, and we endeavour to place them under good and conscientious masters. We purpose holding our usual sale of useful and fancy articles on May 3. Busy hands are at work in preparation for it. A few kind friends have volunteered to help us. It is hoped a few more will be found to follow their example, for we are most anxious that this year our deficit shall be wiped out. Parcels of left-off clothing are always a great boon, and will be gratefully acknowledged if sent to Mrs. Clarkson, Uplands, Bath."

THE CRY OF THE LEPERS.

Dear Sir,—The Mission to Lepers in India is receiving most piteous appeals for extension; but as the society is at present working to the utmost limits of its power it cannot entertain these petitions for additional aid unless it receives additional support. In order not to trespass unduly on your space I give only a few brief extracts from letters lately received:—

Rev. H. Uffmann, of the German Mission, Purulia, Chota-Nagpore, writes on March 14, as follows:—"Who are we that we can shut our doors and hearts against the cry of the poor and helpless ones? They will say, 'These are the homes built for us and for our purposes, so we pray you to admit us.' I, therefore, ask you for Christ's sake to allow me to receive as many as may come, at least up to two hundred."

Rev. G. M. Bullock, of the London Missionary Society, who has 122 inmates in the Leper Asylum at Almora in the Himalayas, says:—"Since the first of January I have positively refused to admit any applicants, and you cannot tell what a grievous trial this has been to me, especially in two very sad cases, where the disease had made very terrible ravages. There have been quite twenty applicants since the 1st of January, but I do not feel justified in admitting any till I find out how far the Church of Christ is willing to stand by me."

The native caretaker of the Almora Asylum says in a most touching letter (translated from the Hindustani):—"Many have come seeking admission, but have been obliged to go away again. We are grieved to be unable to help them. Some came who were very helpless, and could with difficulty move about; with tears they entreated of us to give them a place of refuge. One day a man came who was very helpless. He remained the whole night, in the hope of having his name entered on the books, and it was hard to send him away in the morning."

Of another institution for lepers a lady missionary writes:—"Is the Institution to be enlarged? You know there are more than five hundred lepers in this district alone, and the need for further assistance is very great. At present we are reducing rather than increasing, as we do not fill up the vacancies caused by deaths. Oh, dear, such piteous cases as have to be refused!"

Besides the above applications there are other places where extra accommodation is urgently needed. About £700 would meet all these pressing needs, and I should like much to be able to telegraph to Mr. Bullock: "Admit lepers, help coming."—Yours faithfully,

WELLESLEY C. BAILEY,
Secretary and Superintendent.

Dublin Prison-Gate Mission.

The annual meeting of the friends and supporters of this Mission was held on Tuesday week, in the Leinster Hall, Molesworth-street, and there was a very large attendance. Lord Plunket presided, and expressed in warm terms his appreciation and interest in the work. The report was read by Mrs. Edmundson, Hon. Sec., and showed that there has been a steady advance every year in the amount earned in the Mission. The total amount contributed during 1891, including sales of work and special donations, was £1635 4s. 3d. The sum of £2056 8s. was returned to the Mission, through the labour and payments of the women; thus showing the money returned to exceed considerably the amount contributed by the public.

Rev. Dr. Burroughs stated that at the sewing class the number of workers during 1891 was 12,814; at the laundry 19,470, while the number who availed themselves of the shelter of the Dormitory was 15,872; 450 fresh cases had been rescued during the year. The meeting was also addressed by Revs. T. L. Morron, Gilbert Mahaffy, and Mr. Fisher.

CHILDREN'S MISSION AT KILBURN.—A mission for young people has just been concluded by Mr. T. Lewes Sayer at Kilburn Town Hall. The assistant workers represented nearly all the churches and chapels in the district. Three addresses were given to young ladies, the committee-room on each occasion being crowded to excess. A White Cross meeting for boys was held, also a Scripture Union meeting, some forty names being added to the local branch. A Young Abstainers' Union meeting was held, and more than twenty new pledges taken. A magic-lantern service on "Pilgrim's Progress," in which Rev. E. H. Brown (St. Mary's, Merton), helped, was given. Many children professed to receive spiritual blessing during the mission.

The Accuser in Rev. xii.

You...now hath He reconciled, in the body of his flesh through death, to present you holy, unblameable, and unreprovable [UNARRAIGNABLE] before Him, if ye continue in the faith grounded and settled (Col. i. 22, 23).

IF JUSTIFIED, UNACCUSABLE.

In the last paper on "The Accuser Cast Out" (March 31) special attention was asked to "the necessity of discussion primarily on the ground of doctrinal truths upon which all are agreed, and not first with reference to the prophetic interpretation of Rev. xii., on which there is a large divergence of view."

In accordance with this principle we find Professor Agar Beet saying, in the current number of the Review of the Churches, "It is a good rule in all research to approach the less known through the better known."

It has been assumed that the Revelation from ch. iv. onward is all to be fulfilled after the present dispensation of the Church has passed away, and the saints of this age have been taken out of the earth. This is based on the interpretation given to ch. i. 19. But "the things which thou sawest, and the things which are, and the things which shall come to pass hereafter," are all contained in "the mystery of the seven churches." "The mystery" is obviously in apposition with "the things which thou sawest, and that are, and that shall be," and is governed by the verb "Write." The assertion, therefore, that all beyond ch. iv. 1 is future to this dispensation is, to say the least, a quite unproved speculation.

It may be added, that the Epistles to the Churches having dealt exclusively with their internal condition and discipline, it was to be expected that the condition of the Church in the world, and its relation to it, would also be brought under consideration. But it does not follow that those who think this to be actually the case should be committed to any system of historical interpretation. It is much to be desired that reverent readers of the Apocalypse should candidly seek to discover how far they see alike, and wait on God for further light. It is certain that no system of interpretation yet devised by human ingenuity commands, or can command, universal acceptance; but it is quite possible that a humble-minded endeavour to learn through one another, portions of truth revealed to each, would result in a harmony of spirit as yet unknown, and a unity of judgment as yet unhoped for.

Dr. Robert Anderson in "The Coming Prince," says on Rev. xii.:—

The only reasonable interpretation I have seen is that which regards the "man-child," who was to "rule all nations with a rod of iron," and who "was caught up to God and to his throne," as being the Lord Jesus Christ, and the woman as representing that people "of whom as concerning the flesh Christ came" (Rom. ix. 5). But the difficulties are considerable. First, past historical facts are thus introduced into a vision relating to the future. I am not aware of any other instance of this in Scripture. Secondly, the main features of the vision after verse 5 are not accounted for by the facts.

In response to the first of these difficulties I may quote the wise observation of Professor Milligan on this subject:—

We are [in the progress of the visions] on the verge of the seven last and most disastrous plagues. The moment is thus far more critical than any at which we have previously stood. The purposes of the Almighty are now to be fully accomplished. The whole mystery of his dealings with a sinful world to which He has offered salvation is about to end. No place, therefore, could be more suitable than the present for once more gathering together the elements of the conflict and the main features of the result.

The solution of the second difficulty depends on the interpretation given to the remainder of the chapter, e.g., it is said two thousand years are not a "short time"; but compared with Satan's probable past existence and with the coming eternity two thousand years would be a mere speck of time.

Dr. Anderson (himself a very candid writer) appeals to Dean Alford as "the most candid of Apocalyptic commentators." Alford emphatically and unreservedly affirms the view of the man-child which Dr. Anderson regards as "the only reasonable interpretation," yet apparently shrinks from adopting. The following is Alford's comment:—

And she bore a male son, who shall rule all the nations with a rod of iron.—These words, cited verbatim from the LXX. of the Messianic Psalm ii., and preceded by the ὅς of personal identification, leave no possibility of doubt who is here intended. The Man-Child is the Lord Jesus Christ, and none other. And this result is a most important one for the fixity of reference of the whole prophecy. It forms one of those landmarks by which the legitimacy of various interpretations may be tested; and of which we may say, notwithstanding the contradictions sure to be given to the saying, that every interpretation which oversteps their measure is thereby convicted of error. Again: the exigencies of this passage require that the birth should be understood literally and historically of the Birth of which all Christians know. And be it observed that this rule of interpretation is no confident assertion of mine, as has been represented, but a result from the identifying use of words of the prophetic Scripture, spoken of Him who will not give his honour to another.

In like manner Canon Fausset says:—

Rod of iron—for long-continued obstinacy, until they submitted themselves to obedience (Bengel), Ps. ii. 9—which proves the Lord Jesus to be meant. Any interpretation which ignores this must be wrong.

But if the Lord Jesus Christ Himself be the Man-Child, the Male Son, it follows that the Accuser was cast out of heaven at his ascension. And this, Alford, Canon Fausset, Auberlen, and others emphatically affirm.

My interest in this subject does not arise from any view which I wish to ventilate on the interpretation of prophecy; but from a desire to maintain the fact that the believer is absolutely, completely, and for ever justified from all things from which he could not be justified by the law of Moses. The presence of an accuser accusing us BEFORE GOD, in the presence of the Atoner, whom God has raised from the dead for (or because of) our justification, and who has gone into heaven, now to appear in the presence of God for us, would, I submit, contradict the Gospel, and be incompatible with our peace with God.

M.

[We are much obliged to several correspondents, who have written upon the assumption that Rev. xii. is entirely future. In this and the following paper the writer seeks to show that that is not a secure foundation to build upon, especially in contravention of the truth of justification. He will endeavour also to show that our having a Paraclete, an Advocate, with the Father, does not imply an accuser before God. We shall be happy (so far as space will admit) to insert any replies seeking to disprove these positions, provided they are sustained by Scriptural argument.—ED.]

Dr. Barnardo's Homes.

A VERY old friend of these institutions, who hides himself behind the nom de plume of "Beta," learning that the institutions, which now contain 4300 children, are short of funds, has sent a cheque for £25, and promises a further £25 if forty-nine others will each send a similar gift in aid of the funds of the Homes. He also promises a gift of £10 if ninety-nine others will do likewise. All gifts should be stated to be in response to "Beta," and addressed to Dr. Barnardo, 18 to 26, Stepney Causeway, London, E.

THE ZANZIBAR STRANGERS' REST, which was opened in August last, has not only been frequented by merchant seamen, but also by officers and men from H.M. ships, some of whom are always stationed there. Zanzibar has already two hundred thousand inhabitants, and is increasing in importance. Only a few weeks ago it was declared a free port, which will tend much to increase its shipping trade. Early this year it issued the first newspaper published in East Africa. Miss Hadland, who formerly laboured in East London, is one of the lady workers. Copies of the first report may be had from Mr. J. T. Isaac, Hon. Sec. Strangers' Rest, 163, St. George's-street, Ratcliff-highway, E.

MRS. WALL'S WORK IN ROME.

IN her report of work among the Roman poo during the past year, Mrs. Wall says: "Our meet ings for the very poor have been more numer ously attended than ever. In our hall close t the Vatican we have the men, while the wome still continue in Trastevere. On entering ou meeting, you would be surprised to see not only th very poor and aged, but many strong, able-bodie men, who not being able to find work, have com and begged us with tears to allow them to ente as they were almost famished. We often hea them say when they received the bread, 'This i the first morsel we have tasted since yesterda morning.' Their thin and hungry faces show bu too plainly their need, and we feel, if not assisted that when the work is found they will not hav strength to do it. Many of these have been re spectable tradesmen, but are glad to come though they have to stand all the time, mixing with the very poor, in order to get a littl bread to satisfy the cravings of hunger.

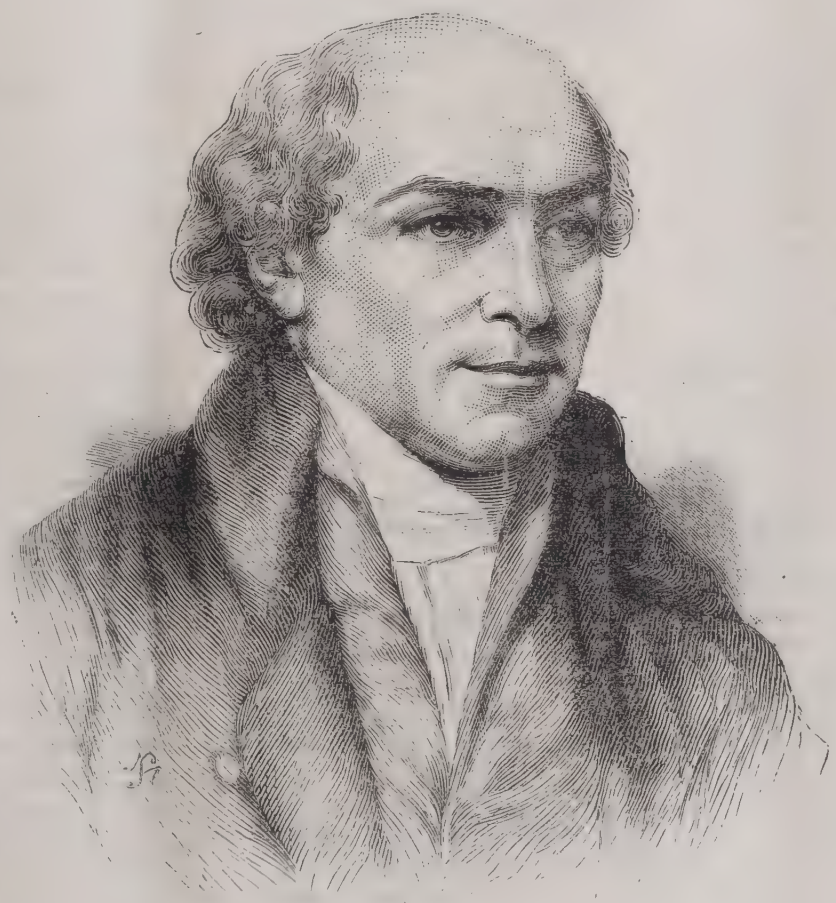
"In our visits to the large public hospitals w find many poor fathers, who have pawned al their warm clothes to buy bread, had nothing t cover them when the winter came, and the resul was congestion of the lungs, consumption, an death. One case of this kind was a fine-lookin man, a carpenter, who told me he did not min suffering, but what he felt most was the though of leaving his dear children and a good wife wit no one to care for them. We relieve their presen hunger as far as we can with bread and sou tickets, but then, what will they do on th morrow, and the days following? Many of thes sad cases we have helped by putting them in th way of earning a few sous. Several friends, see ing the great poverty among the workmen fo want of regular work, assisted us to begin a sou kitchen for this special class. The men wer very grateful, and when able, willingly paid fo the tickets. It was very pleasing to see thei kindness to each other; frequently one who ha a few sous would pay for two or three others. We always read with them a few verses from God' Word, sang some hymns, and offered a shor prayer.

"The number of people present at the meet ings for the poor during the year was 9712. I the consumptive wards of the hospital of Sant Spirito we have been greatly encouraged to mee with so many of the patients who recognised us having seen us at the different Medical Missions For several weeks I visited one who had firs heard of the love of Jesus at the Medical Missio in Via della Consolazione; there he had receive the Gospel of St. John, which he had read and re read several times. I found the truth was living power in the heart of this man. A fort night since, when I went to his bed, I found h was no longer there. He had died quite sud denly, and the testimony they bore of him wa very touching: 'We are all so sorry he is gone we feel we have lost a friend. He woul spend most of his time in repeating to us th hymns, or reading his little book. He woul not confess to the priest before he died, bu he told us all he was very happy.'"

The report shows in every page that the wor is being greatly blessed. One poor invalid tol Mrs. Wall how glad he was to have been so re duced in circumstances as to be obliged to atten the Medical Mission, where he learnt what Jesu had done for sinners. "It is worth being ill, he said, "to find such a friend as Jesus." Mrs Wall has of late assumed the responsibility of th Medical Mission started by Mr. Wall in the ha near the Vatican. Of the four Medical Mission three are under the direction of an Italian docto while Dr. Gason gives his time and services fo the one in Trastevere. The registered attend ances of all the Medical Missions during the yea amount to 15,646. Address, 35, Piazza in Lucin Rome.

MANCHESTER MINISTRY TO THE POOR.—Th annual meeting of this society was held on Monda week, Mr. John Dendy presiding. The report showe that the work of the two mission-stations in Hulm and Collyhurst had been carried on with good result during the past year, under the superintendence o Revs. J. Harrop and B. Walker. For nearly fif years the society has striven, by the quiet metho of personal influence, to bring the spirit of Christi love into the homes of the very poor. Religi worship, Sunday-schools, week-night classes, an various other activities are carried on in the missio premises, but home visitation continues to be th chief aim. Encouraging addresses were delivered i the meeting by Revs. E. A. Armstrong and Mr. G W. Jones, of Liverpool.

WILLIAM CAREY,



PIONEER FOREIGN MISSIONARY.

By Rev. Dr. James Culross.

NO name deserves to be held in more lasting remembrance than that of William Carey. He was born in the Northamptonshire village of Paulerspury, August 17, 1761. His father, Edmund Carey, was a weaver, who was appointed to the united offices of parish clerk and village schoolmaster when the boy was about six years old. He was a man of kindly nature and sound common-sense; and under his care the school won a good name in the district.

Young Carey was small for his years, and slightly built, but with an intelligent face, and a bright, indomitable spirit. Very early he manifested a passionate delight in natural history, and gradually stored the schoolhouse garden with choice plants. This love of nature never died out in him, and had much to do with the good health and geniality which made him known many years after as "the cheerful old man."

Books were scarce in the country, and not easy to be begged or borrowed; but he had "a hunger" for them, and such as fell in his way he was sure to master. When about fourteen years of age he was apprenticed to a shoemaker in Hackleton, nine or ten miles from his home. In any ordinary case this engagement would probably have determined the boy's future career, but the thirst for knowledge grew with his years, and made him dream of something beyond shoemaking. He was, however, a good workman, and his employer kept on view a pair of shoes made by him as a model of what shoes ought to be. There is no truth in the story that he could never make a pair of shoes to match each other, or to please the customer. There is no inconsistency between this and his retort to the general officer in India, who inquired of one of the aides-de-camp, when dining with the Marquis of Hastings, whether Dr. Carey had not once been a shoemaker, "No, sir! only a cobbler," no doubt alluding to Sydney Smith's article in the Edinburgh Review, 1809, in which he takes credit for "routing out a nest of consecrated cobblers."

About the eighteenth year of his age a revolution took place in his life. Though brought up a strict Churchman, and in due time "confirmed," he was a stranger to the love of Christ. "Stirrings of mind" he had often experienced, and good resolutions he had often formed; he was well acquainted with Scripture; he attended church regularly; but there his religion ended. Through the influence of a young fellow-workman with whom he often debated, he came dimly to see that what he needed was a new heart. It is impossible to trace the various stages of his experience, but the issue was a perception of the wonderful grace of God in the Lord Jesus Christ, and that vital inward change whence all newness of life proceeds.

In 1781 a small church was formed in Hackleton consisting of nine members. Carey's name is third in the list. About the same time there was a religious awakening in the district, and prayer-meetings and other similar gatherings were much frequented. He sometimes spoke at these meetings, "the ignorant people applauding," he says, "to my great injury," and tempting him to self-conceit.

On the 10th of June, 1781, he married Dorothy Plackett, his employer's sister-in-law, and soon afterwards succeeded him in business. He was very poor. On the occasion of an Association meeting in Olney, 1782, he attended all day fasting, because he had not a penny to buy a dinner. On this occasion he was introduced to some friends belonging to the village of Earl's Barton, which led to an engagement to preach to a little congregation meeting there. This engagement continued in force nearly four years, till the time when he was invited to settle at Moulton. Meanwhile, having accepted the doctrine of believers' baptism, he had been baptized by the younger Ryland in the Nen at Northampton. To onlookers, and to Ryland himself, it was merely the baptism of "a poor journeyman shoemaker." Ryland's morning text that day was unconsciously prophetic: "Many that are first shall be last, and the last shall be first." In Moulton, Carey sought to add to his meagre income by teaching a school; but the experiment did not answer; hence he returned to his former trade. Once a fortnight the little man, with a far-away look on his face, might be seen trudging to Northampton with wallet full of shoes for delivery to a Government contractor, and then returning home with a burden of leather for next fortnight's work. All this time, in poverty that would have crushed the spirit out of an ordinary man in three months, he went on with his studies and preached regularly on the Sabbath.

It was in Moulton that his great thought took shape in his mind. Reading Cook's Voyages and studying a map of the world that hung in the workroom, it came painfully home to him how small a portion of the human race had any knowledge of the Saviour. How was this? Had God's "set time" not come? Or were Christians to blame? He resolved to think out these questions in the light of Scripture, and arrived at the conclusion that means must be taken to send the Gospel to the heathen and that without delay. At first, with the exception of a few men like Andrew Fuller, he encountered indifference or opposition. To not a few his conclusion seemed to conflict with God's sovereignty. At a meeting of ministers, presided over by the elder Ryland, Carey proposed, as a subject for next Conference, "the duty of attempting to spread the Gospel among the heathen." Even Fuller held his breath at the audacity of the proposal, and Ryland peremptorily put him down, remarking, "When God pleases to convert the heathen, He will do it without your aid or mine."

In 1789, he removed to Leicester, to the small Baptist Church meeting in Harvey-lane. Here he became more than ever anxious that something practical should be attempted. He conversed, corresponded, preached, and at length published,* in the urgency of his soul that some step should be taken. Next year, on May 31, 1792, it devolved on him to preach the Association sermon at Nottingham. His text was Isaiah liv. 2, 3, and his two thoughts were "Expect great things from God. Attempt great things for God." That sermon really created the Baptist Missionary Society. The brethren were about to disperse without doing anything, when Carey seized Fuller's hand and wrung it, demanding whether they could separate thus. The imploring appeal stayed the breaking-up of the assembly, and it was resolved, "That a plan be prepared against the next ministers' meeting at Kettering for the establishment of a society for propagating the Gospel among the heathen." On the 2nd of October, 1792, this plan was presented, and the same evening, in the back parlour of Mrs. Beeby Wallis, twelve men solemnly pledged themselves to the undertaking, and subscribed the sum of £13 2s. 6d.; Carey declaring his readiness to embark for any part of the world that might be decided upon.

In April of next year Carey, and Thomas (a ship-surgeon and a very singular man*), started for India, having been commended to God at a solemn farewell meeting held in Leicester. Carey never saw England again. For years it seemed doubtful whether the enterprise would not end in failure. Hindrances and discouragements of all sorts faced the missionaries. The earlier attempts at settlement had to be abandoned, though the experience they bought proved afterwards of immense value. In 1796 Carey, then at Mudnabatty, supporting himself by managing an indigo factory, and doing all in his power to spread the knowledge of the Saviour, was joined by Mr. Fountain from England. Besides preaching, Carey very early recognised the importance of translating and circulating the Scriptures, and while at Mudnabatty he began the work. It was a work for which he had singular fitness, both by natural endowment and providential training. Not, however, till he left Mudnabatty and settled in Serampore in January, 1800, under the protection of the Danish flag, did he make much progress. Reinforcements came out—Ward, Marshman, Brunsdon, and Grant—but were not allowed to settle in the East India Company's territories. Grant died three weeks after landing, Brunsdon within twelve months, and Fountain about the same time; leaving at Serampore the famous triumvirate, Carey, Marshman, and Ward. Never did three men serve together in union so close for so long a space of time, with such unbroken harmony, such unselfishness and loftiness of aim, such thorough practical common-sense, and such marvellously-sustained resolution and enthusiasm. The idea which possessed them in common was this: The Gospel must be preached far and wide; the missionary must not wait until the people come to him, but must go forth into their midst; the Bible must be translated and circulated; the printing press must be made a power in the land; a Christian literature must be created; schools and colleges must be instituted; provision must be made for raising up a succession of native evangelists, pastors, and teachers. Before the close of the first year they gathered the first-fruits of the mission in the conversion of Krishnu, a carpenter, speedily followed by other conversions. In the course of six years, ninety-six native converts were baptized and received into Christian fellowship, caste being disregarded.

In 1800 Fort William College, Calcutta, was established by Lord Wellesley, the Governor-General, in which the junior civil servants of the Company were required to pursue their studies for three years, and Carey, as the one man in India most fully qualified for the office, was appointed teacher of Bengali, and afterwards of Sanskrit and Mahratta, with a salary of £600 a year. Later on he was raised to the status of Professor, with a salary increased to £1500. Thus he was enabled to give himself with redoubled ardour to the work of translation, where his special gift lay. Living in the simplest style, he devoted all he received, beyond what was necessary for bare subsistence, to the missionary cause. He prepared numerous grammars and lexicons, and made no fewer than twenty-four versions of Scripture, with comparatively little help from others, in tongues spoken by one-third of the human race. It must not be supposed, of course, that these versions were faultless, but they were an unspeakably valuable boon to India, and a starting-point for completer work.† Simultaneously with the work of translating and printing, that of itinerating went forward; and numerous stations were planted in the country, to which missionaries from home were appointed, and assisted by native agents. All this had to be done in the face of persistent obstruction from the East India Company, which, from dread of political consequences, did all in its power to keep the Gospel out of the country. By-and-by a fierce conflict broke out at home. The missionaries were accused of all kinds of enormities, and if scoffs and hatred could have done it, the Mission would have been exterminated. Sydney Smith, who coined the phrase, "a nest of consecrated cobblers," in The Edinburgh Review included the missionaries in the same category with "vermin that ought to be caught, cracked, and exterminated." As the time approached for renewing the charter of the East India Company, it became clear to all that the future of the Mission was in the balance. Carey wrote home that the fault in the existing charter lay in the clause which gave the Company power to send home "interlopers," and urged that every effort should be made to secure liberty to preach the Gospel, by a distinct clause in the new charter. After a prolonged and severe struggle, in which the whole country was aroused, the friends of missions succeeded in their aim, and, with certain troublesome restrictions, liberty to preach the Gospel was secured.

It would take a volume to describe the years that followed, the difficulties encountered and vanquished, and the wonderful progress of the Gospel. Carey continued to labour on, with a very lowly estimate of himself: "Marshman is a Luther; Ward enchains the attention of all who hear him; I alone am unfit to be called a missionary." Under the conviction that if India was to be won and held for Christ, it must be through native preaching, the college at Serampore was built at a final cost of £15,000, to aid in educating fit men for the ministry of the Word. In Carey's view, the college ought not to stand alone, but should be in living connection with the mission-stations, near and remote; the students being drawn from these stations, and, when educated, going forth to be teachers, evangelists, missionaries, and pastors, as the Lord might appoint.

While Carey and his coadjutors were going on patiently and earnestly with their self-denying work, unjust suspicions respecting them began to be scattered abroad in England. They were said to be living "in Oriental pomp"; they had "amassed for themselves and families" extensive property; their conduct was "consistent neither with truth nor common honesty." It was painful to bear; yet the fact was that, so far from making gain of their position, they had practised the severest self-denial, and had spontaneously given many thousands of pounds,* earned by their own toil, to the great cause to which they had consecrated their lives.

Gradually the old man's strength began to fail, and the end drew near. Among those who visited him in his last illness was Alexander Duff, the Scotch missionary. On one of the last occasions on which he saw him—if not the very last—he spent some time talking, chiefly about Carey's missionary life, till at length the dying man whispered, "Pray." Duff knelt down and prayed, and then said, "Good-bye." As he was passing from the room he heard a feeble voice pronouncing his name, and, turning, he found he was recalled. He stepped back accordingly, and this is what he heard, spoken with a gracious solemnity: "Mr. Duff, you have been speaking about Dr. Carey, Dr. Carey; when I am gone, say nothing about Dr. Carey—speak about Dr. Carey's Saviour." Duff went away, rebuked and awed, with a lesson in his heart that he never forgot.

The eternal gates were opened for him at sunrise on June 9, 1834. Next morning, under weeping skies, he was laid in the converts' burying-ground, by the side of his second wife. The small memorial stone bore this inscription, according to his own special direction in his will:—

WILLIAM CAREY,
BORN AUGUST 17, 1761; DIED [JUNE 9, 1834].

A wretched, poor, and helpless worm,
On Thy kind arms I fall.

Those who would trace out the life of Carey in its full current, and who would know what he did for India and the East, and what the whole Christian Church owes to him, under God, should read Dr. George Smith's masterly and most fascinating volume, "The Life of William Carey, D.D., Shoemaker and Missionary" (Murray). Dr. Smith places him where, he believes, the Church history of the future is likely to keep him—amid the uncrowned kings who have made Christian England what it is, under God, to its own people and to half the human race.

HYMN BY THE FIRST SERAMPORE CONVERT.

Krishnu's hymn is well-known in the translation which begins:—

O thou, my soul, forget no more
The Friend who all thy misery bore.

The following translation, by Mr. Rouse, of Calcutta, follows the original, both in sense and metre:—

CHORUS—He who gave his life to save thee, sinful as thou art,
Forget Him never, O my heart.

Forget, forget Him not,
But with Him cast thy lot;
Jesus his name, is God, He saves from sin.
All thine own works forsake,
His love thy riches make;
Let Jesus only dwell thy heart within.
Pity and truth and grace
In Him all boundless are;
Jesus for sinful man his life hath given.
How good and true a Friend,
His praise shall never end;
The name of Jesus brings me safe to heaven.

WORKERS FOR SOUTH-EAST AFRICA.

THE South-East Africa Mission is about to be reinforced by four lady workers—two of them the Misses Whitby, daughters of a once well-known Congregational minister at Ipswich, and who themselves conducted for many years a large scholastic establishment for young ladies at Colchester. A year or two ago they relinquished this work, partly for health's sake, and when wintering in Mentone often came into contact with Mr. Spurgeon, both in Bible readings in his hotel and when from time to time he felt able to speak a few words in the Presbyterian Church At one of these meetings in particular, Mr Spurgeon urged upon Christians that they should face the question of full consecration to Christ. Among others these two sisters responded to the call, and gave themselves unreservedly to Christ.

They then awaited the Master's indication as to the special work to which their energies should be devoted, and at the first it lay upon their hearts to seek the welfare of young women in connection with the Y.W.C.A., at Reading for more than a year and at Bristol more recently for several months. Being present at the last Keswick Convention, and hearing the appeals on behalf of the South-East Africa Mission, they resolved to devote themselves to the work as self-supporting missionaries. Along with two other ladies, they sailed for Natal on Thursday, April 21, from London Docks, in the Dunottar Castle. They will stay for a while at Capetown, and afterwards proceed to Durban, and thence, after learning something more of the work, to Maritzburg, where, it is expected, they will break new ground.

† The earliest attempt to translate any part of the Scriptures into any of the languages of the East was made by the Dutch. It is a translation of the Gospel of Matthew into Malayan, date 1629. A copy is in the Library of Bristol Baptist College.

* The books of the Mission show that up to 1826 the sum contributed to the work by the Serampore missionaries themselves amounted to nearly fifty thousand pounds. Subsequently to 1826 they added thousands more.

The Theatrical Mission.

For seventeen years the Mission to theatrical employés, founded by Mr. Courthope Todd, has been seeking to benefit this class of the community. Some good people seem to think that whenever a man or woman, girl or boy, goes on the stage in any capacity, he or she has gone beyond the pale of Christian effort and influence. Not so Mr. Todd and his energetic wife; they have proved by long experience that in the ranks at any rate of minor performers there are great numbers of honest, virtuous, well-meaning young people, who have taken to the stage simply for a livelihood, driven there, probably, more by necessity than by choice. Very few theatrical "stars," we imagine, come within the scope of the Mission's operations.

At the annual festival of the Mission, held last week in Prince's Hall, Piccadilly, some deeply interesting facts were stated, showing the appreciation with which the youthful frequenters of that mysterious region behind the footlights, regard the advantages of Macready House. The report of the Mission for the past year is entitled "Fairy Footprints," and is got up in very readable fashion; any reader who wishes to become acquainted with the wide ramifications of Mr. and Mrs. Todd's labours, and those of their helpers, should send for a copy to the headquarters of the Mission, Macready House, Henrietta-street, Covent-garden, London, W.C.

The Chairman at last week's festival was Mr. John Cory, of Cardiff, who has long shown practical sympathy with the work, and has recently become a trustee. In his brief presidential remarks Mr. Cory said that there were probably half-a-million persons connected with stage work in this country; and for the moral welfare of this class scarcely anything was done before Mr. Courthope Todd took up this work in 1876. Now Macready House has become a household word with thousands, and it is a constant centre of moral and spiritual power. The work is not merely philanthropic, but is distinctly evangelical. As putting in a condensed form the benefits that accrue to those who resort to Macready House, Covent-garden, during hours of leisure, the Chairman read the following extract from the report:—

Three large assembly halls are open daily from 11 a.m. to 9 p.m., so that the theatrical employés of both sexes and various nationalities—who may be in London—may find a safe and happy resting-place between rehearsal or matinée and evening performance. Many also out of engagements while waiting on their agents with a view to securing fresh work come in here, in the necessarily long and enforced intervals; and, if need be, they can remain all day. Luncheons and teas are served at a very low rate from the buffet, while other light refreshments of a temperance character are provided. The time may be pleasantly passed in games, while papers and magazines are provided. Two Christian ladies are with the adults and children, to engage in conversation, or assist with, or instruct in, needlework—plain and fancy; lectures, illustrated by experiments or dissolving views are occasionally given, and each week has its round of services, meetings, and classes, to which all are invited. None, however, are forced to attend, and it is one of the rules of the committee that disinclination towards the religious teaching is not to debar from any other privilege.

Mr. Cory also referred to the great boon conferred on many needy ones by the orphanage for the children of deceased professionals. Before sitting down he heartily commended the work to the sympathetic generosity of the Christian public.

A speech from the founder of the Mission, Mr. Todd, gave much information as to its operations. He said they made no disguise of their object to bring theatrical employés to a saving knowledge of Jesus Christ. A large proportion of this class are quite ready to respond to any Christian sympathy shown them. Everything possible is done to help those who are anxious to enter on a more healthy and desirable occupation, while at the same time no pressure is brought to bear on any to leave the stage. Jesus Christ is lifted up, and his Gospel is left to do its work in conscience and heart. Mr. Todd made very cordial reference to the invaluable services of the fifteen hundred ladies who act as regular correspondents with young women scattered about through the country and engaged in places of amusement. Some extracts from letters were read, indicative of the blessing experienced through this agency. The office at Macready House is often used as a place of inquiry by anxious parents and friends for missing children or relatives who have become "stage-struck," and who are frequently restored to their homes.

Another interesting feature of the work is the providing of copies of the Bible in professional apartments for young threatricals in large provincial towns. Owing to the prejudice that exists against employing those who have been on the stage, it is proposed to establish a Female Colportage Corps in London, which would be the means of circulating much good literature, as well as giving work to young women desirous of leaving the stage.

After a "gold collection" had been taken, earnest addresses, strongly advocating the work of the Mission, were delivered by Mr. W. C. Collins and Rev. Marcus Rainsford, Jun. The burden of their remarks was in support of a resolution calling on the Christian public to contribute an increased annual income of three thousand pounds, to meet the growing needs of the work.

Lady Millbanke kindly handed to a long array of young people prizes in books, &c., for regular attendance and attention at the classes in the Institute. A short speech followed from Hira Singh Puri, who pleaded for evangelistic work amongst the Parsee Dramatic Troupes touring in India, as well as the European dramatic artists in that empire. The collections, including gifts and promises, amounted to over £400; but, as the Treasurer, Mr. Joseph Peters, observed that £600 was needed immediately, Mr. John Cory promised £50 more, provided the balance was forthcoming.

REV. JOHN McNEILL IN GLASGOW.

The services during the past week have been well sustained. The preacher is drawing around him larger crowds, and is telling forth the "old, old story" with increasing interest. The afternoon meetings in St. Andrew's Hall are largely attended, though there are not so many "West-end" people coming as was expected. But those who do come go away much impressed. Several of the addresses have been very searching.

Special reference might be made to Mr. McNeill's exposition of Achan's sin. There was not one smile that afternoon. He sketched in graphic style Israel's defeat, Joshua's dismay, and God discovering the troubles of Israel. The use made by the preacher of one man keeping back the whole army was most telling; and he thundered at the hypocrisy of many in our churches, and showed how the blessing was withheld. Many of those who attended that meeting have spoken of the faithfulness and power of the preacher.

Hengler's Circus has been crowded to overflowing three times every Sabbath. The third Sabbath of the Mission was the spring communion in all the Presbyterian churches, and the gathering in the afternoon was almost entirely one of non-churchgoers. Few had hymn-books, and still fewer had Bibles. A large number showed deep impression at the close of the address, and indicated their desire to trust Jesus. All the addresses during the week have been good, but the two that were specially fruitful were "Samuel's anointing Saul" and "Paul's Shipwreck." In the first subject Mr. McNeill dwelt on these two points—first, "Stand still," and, secondly, "Bid the servant pass on." He showed how when a man was willing to stop and think about Christ the victory was gained. When he came to speak of the second head he called passionately upon the vast audience to let everything go for Christ. He illustrated the address with many telling stories from his own experience. One expected to see every unsaved person raise their hand in token of their willingness to surrender to Christ, but only between thirty and forty gave this indication. There were many dealt with at the close of the meeting

Paul's shipwreck was another memorable address. There was an unusually large number of men present that evening, and the preacher delivered his message with much unction. When he came to speak of lightening the ship, applying that part of his subject, his words told with powerful effect. He referred in scathing terms to the danger of moderate drinking, and called upon his hearers to banish wine and other stimulants from their homes. He also spoke of the evils of football as at present played; how young men over-exerted themselves on Saturday, so that they were altogether unfitted for the exercises of the Sabbath, and their one topic of conversation on the Lord's-day was the previous day's play.

We request special prayer for the last few days of the present mission, and desire to return grateful thanks to the Lord for the blessing He has given.

Mr. J. H. Burke sings with much effect at all the meetings. Last week he delighted the audience by singing a new solo, "From death unto life." W. M. O.

THE SALVATION ARMY IN FRANCE.

Commissioner Booth-Clibborn, in his brief report of the work of the Salvation Army in France and Switzerland during the past year, says: "France is a much larger country than is generally realised. The distances which separate our corps and divisions are very great. Our nearest corps to Paris (except one) is eight hours distant by rail. To visit this winter our fourteen corps in the south-west took me forty-six hours by rail, and fourteen hours by stage-coach, besides many hours on foot. The difficult character of the work renders it necessary for us to have much smaller halls than in other countries. Mostly shops and small warehouses, they hold, on an average, 180 people.

"During this visit to Staff-Captain Leuba's region, mostly among the Highlands of central France, I found a truly apostolic spirit everywhere among the officers. We had remarkable times of the outpouring of the Holy Spirit. The peasants march immense distances in these regions to come to the meetings, sometimes starting on foot at three in the morning, and arriving home again at three the next morning, tramping joyfully through the night. At Lyons, where we have three corps—mostly composed of converted Roman Catholics—the woman soldier who carried my hand-bag in the streets to the station, was one who formerly carried the red flag of revolution at the head of riotous mobs or Anarchist demonstrations. The fire of revolution runs in her veins—her father died a convict, and her grandfather was killed in a fight; but the Spirit of God has captured and enrolled her energies on the side of the saving revolution.

"Close to La Madeleine, the grandest church in Paris, and the famous Boulevards, are the headquarters of the Army of Salvation and Rescue. Rescuing the fallen has been going on very blessedly this year. Major Schlindler has been untiring in the work. Within a few weeks she sent no less than four cases from the Parisian maelstrom to our Nimes rescue home, begging their travelling expenses from people of all grades which compose our Rue-Auber audience. A most interesting case of conversion and rescue occurred lately during the series of the Maréchale's meetings—a refined and intelligent governess rescued from one of the most select maisons de rendezvous. It was the penurious condition in which so many thousands of institutrices are in France that first paved the way to her fall. So great is the rage in France to lift one's daughters above the seamstress life, and make them schoolmistresses, that there are about 40,000 too many of the latter in the land.

"In countries where the conscription does not reign, how little you know about the iron-handed exactions of the system! Each year we must bow our heads and see some of our most valuable officers in France leave us for three years. Thus, this year, young Staff-Captain Peyron, after very ardent and successful service in Paris, must answer to the call of legalised carnage under the sweet but delusive name of Patrie, and shoulder a gun for three long years. He appears in Salvation uniform in the long line of conscripts and then is marched off, shaved, and cropped to the regulation pattern, put into the red trousers and fixed up as a piece of the huge death-dealing machinery, which is warranted to grind any other sweet Patrie or Vaterland to powder."

After relating some of the hindrances and victories associated with the war in Switzerland, Mr. Booth-Clibborn says: "The work in Switzerland is now nearly entirely self-supporting. For dark, infidel France alone do we call for financial help. Here our need is great and urgent, and our claim is doubly justified by the fact that we are ever seeking—according to the true missionary principle upon which the Army has been established—to make the work become, as far as possible, self-supporting in money, as it has long ago become in men." Communications should be addressed to the Paris Headquarters, 3, Rue Auber.

ST. LOUIS.—Some kind-hearted ladies in St. Louis have started a diet dispensary for the benefit of the poor, in connection with the Protestant Hospital. It is intended to supply the nourishing delicacies which are needed by the sick, but which they cannot afford to procure.

The Baptist Union.

AN EVANGELICAL PRONOUNCEMENT.

On Monday afternoon, at the opening session, in Bloomsbury Chapel, of the Spring Assembly of the Baptist Union of Great Britain and Ireland, Colonel Griffin retired from the office of President, and extended a cordial welcome to his successor, Rev. R. H. Roberts, B.A., pastor of Ladbroke-grove Chapel, Notting-hill. The Presidential Address was entitled "The Witness of the Bible to Itself," and was at once a rebuke of modern naturalistic criticism and a plea for diligent individual study and more earnest public exposition of inspired and inspiring Scripture, which is (the President maintained) the inviolable charter and infallible standard of a living, Evangelical Protestantism.

Rev. T. M. Morris, of Ipswich, having been elected Vice-President, and other routine business transacted, Rev. Charles Williams, of Accrington, moved the following resolution :—

That, in view of the obligation "to contend earnestly for the faith which was once for all delivered unto the saints," the Baptist Union renews its testimony to the Deity of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ, to salvation through his mediatorial work and by faith in Him, and to his supreme and absolute authority in the Kingdom of God; that, while fully and gladly recognising the duty of cherishing good-will towards men of all creeds, and of co-operating with them in works of piety and mercy, when this can be done without disloyalty to conviction or to the Lord, the Union deprecates and disapproves any and every association with those who deny the above essential truths, which would weaken the force of our testimony or produce the impression that, in our judgment, it is a matter of secondary importance what men "think of Christ"; and that the Union, therefore, urges all the churches and pastors in connection with it jealously to "guard the deposit which is committed to them," and especially to secure in the public ministry of the Gospel clear and consistent, and constant witness-bearing to the Deity of the "one Lord" and only Saviour, Jesus Christ.

The Council of the Union had recommended the Assembly to adopt this resolution, which Mr. Williams presented in a vigorous speech, which was evidently listened to with general sympathy. He maintained the pressing need for affirming that the Union is one, not of Baptists merely, but of Evangelical Baptists, men who hold not only the one baptism, but the one faith, and allegiance to the one Lord. Without advocating an impossible uniformity, he held that, whatever might be the different theological views of members, loyalty to Jesus Christ is properly expected of all. Inasmuch as many men who have come to honour and done conspicuous service in the Church, were in their early days suspected of heterodoxy, so he now counselled patience with the younger men who are regarded as holding "advanced" views. Moreover, he called upon these in turn to be considerate, as well as conscientious, and not by thoughtless utterances to cause others to stumble. In conclusion, while willing to co-operate with Unitarians in merely human interests, he strongly deprecated any such association with them as would involve a weakening of Gospel testimony.

Rev. F. B. Meyer, B.A., who followed, was equally careful not to introduce personalities into the discussion. He said he felt that he could not have retained his position in the Assembly and Union unless he had taken that action which led him to second the resolution. Some might ask what would be done if, after the resolution had been adopted, individual ministers should exchange pulpits with Unitarians. He would be disposed to leave such alone, and not to assist them to gain notoriety. During recent years suspicion has been cast upon the adherence of the Baptist body to the Evangelical faith, and the present declaration would be an answer to such imputations.

A brief discussion followed, the first speaker being Rev. C. F. Aked, of Liverpool, who tendered his unhesitating, frank, and loyal support to the motion. Proceeding, he said it was to him a matter of unspeakable pain to have been, in this matter, the occasion of pain to brethren whom he held in high regard. He described what had occurred. A Unitarian minister, Mr. Armstrong, arranged a series of expository lectures in his chapel on Sunday evenings, and invited him (Mr. Aked) to set forth the principles and aims of the Baptists. The invitation was accepted, and the Divinity of Jesus Christ, as well as other doctrines, was set before the Unitarians. At the same time Mr. Armstrong, who, at the risk of his life, had investigated the lowest depths of Liverpool society, and had been the means of closing no fewer than eight hundred houses of ill-fame in twelve months, occupied the pulpit of Pembroke Baptist Chapel, on terms which excluded doctrinal discussion, and with the especial purpose of advocating the duties of Christian citizenship. Mr. Aked said he had not allowed Unitarian teaching in his church, and never would; at the same time, he would decline to refuse, in further co-operation with Mr. Armstrong in vigilance committee work, to kneel with him and ask God's blessing upon efforts for the purification of Liverpool society. He protested that there had been no weakening of his testimony through what had occurred. Taking the resolution fully and completely, in its plain, grammatical meaning, and realising its spirit and purpose, he gave it his hearty support, and was determined loyally to observe the principles laid down, and openly to recognise the mediatorial work and absolute authority of the risen Christ.

This address practically closed the "incident." After a few remarks by Rev. H. C. Leonard, M.A., and Mr. R. F. Griffiths, the latter maintaining that the resolution should have been much stronger, and more comprehensive, the resolution was adopted, only a few hands being held up against it.

A PROPOSAL FOR CHINA.

Mr. A. George Parrott hopes shortly to realise a long-cherished desire. In a pamphlet, entitled, "A Proposed Medical Mission to Si-ngan Fu, Shen-si, China," he states the needs of a million-peopled city, in which, up to the present time, no missionary has been permited to live. He writes: "During the last fourteen years, missionaries have occasionally visited it, and the Gospel has at such times been preached. I spent more than a week there in 1882, and had crowded audiences on the streets and in open spaces of the city. I was listened to attentively, and received from all parties the utmost respect; but, up to the present time, no missionary has been allowed to live there.

"Attempts made in 1883, and once or twice since, to rent premises and obtain a permanent footing inside the city have not been successful. The mandarins and gentry are exceedingly jealous and suspicious of the presence of strangers. The size and importance of Si-ngan, however, make it a most desirable field for occupation, and there is every reason to believe that a medical missionary would not only be allowed to reside there, but would be welcomed by the people."

Having explained that he does not wish this term to imply a mere philanthropic agency, but a systematic combination of the healing art with the preaching of the Gospel, in such a way as to make the ministry of healing subservient to the winning of souls to Christ, Mr. Parrott says:—"Six years of mission work in China, during which time I travelled extensively, and saw much of the work of other labourers, led me to see the great value of medical skill as a means of showing practical sympathy for the people; and I resolved, with God's help, to apply myself to the acquisition of medical skill as soon as an opportunity should occur. God has granted me the desire; and the time is now approaching when I hope to return to China with my wife and family. Si-ngan is the city to which we feel strongly drawn. For some years I have thought of the possibility of gaining a footing for the Gospel of Christ there; and we are resolved, by the help of God, and the prayers and sympathy of many of his people, to make the attempt.

"Our purpose is, therefore, if the Lord will, to return in the autumn of this year, by which time I shall have completed my studies and obtained my medical qualifications. Upon reaching Shanghai, we shall adopt the native costume as heretofore, and proceed to Hankow, the treaty port nearest to Si-ngan. There we shall say good-bye to Western civilisation and the society of our own people, and bury ourselves in the heart of China. A native boat will carry us, in the course of many weeks, to within 150 miles of our destination. At the end of the boat journey we shall hire mules to carry us over the Sin-ling mountains which divide the Shen-si province so completely into two parts."

Mr. Parrott hopes to establish a hospital with from 30 to 50 beds, a dispensary with Mission Hall attached, and to train a band of native medical evangelists. A Christian book depot, with a colportage agency, may be added. A sum of not less than £500 will be required to make a start. Those who are interested in this proposal may have copies of the pamphlet and learn all details by addressing Mr. Parrott, 10, Hawkswood-villas, Chingford, Essex.

CHICAGO NOTES.

We have been thrilled of late by the success of Gospel work among the Jews. Mr. W. E. Blackstone, of Oak Park, near Chicago, has made repeated efforts to gain a footing and home for the poor and unshepherded Israelites. On the west side of the city they are gathered by thousands, and, though industrious, have but a scanty supply of work. A home has at length been secured, religious services being held regularly. A Rabbi has been soundly converted, and is now ministering to his people. A paper has been started, a Sunday-school organised, and money is coming in to maintain the work. Mr. Blackstone is a man of some wealth, and is doing what he can for the spread of the Gospel among the Jews.

Among the French population a new church has lately been organised. One of the best missionaries in all the land has lately died. Their new man, Rev. N. W. Deveneau, has already won their hearts, and some marked conversions are reported.

There are forty thousand Bohemians in or near Chicago. They have six Protestant churches, with an average attendance of about two hundred. A thousand Protestants among forty thousand—what are these among so many? The work moves slowly among them; yet it is gaining. Two new converts have entered the ministry.

The Danish and Norwegian population of Chicago flourishes amazingly. New churches are rising, and several lately dedicated free from debt, show the spirit of the earnest Christian workers.

"The Temple," the finest building in all Christendom of the Women's Christian Temperance Union, is to be completed May 1, and is worth over a million dollars. It is claimed that the treasurer has money enough on hand to meet the first payment when the building is surrendered from the contractors. About one-half of the rooms have been rented at a very high figure.

The closing of the World's Columbian Exposition on Sunday is still a most interesting theme. Some of the stall-holders have given instructions that their exhibits shall be covered on Sundays. And just now the saloon men are moving to have the Fair closed on the Day of Rest, in order that the crowd of drinking men may be on the streets, and visit their houses. Verily Mammon is still active. One of the Chief Commissioners tells me that the public sentiment already created is having a good effect, and that probably when the final action is reached, the Exposition will be closed on Sundays. From thirty to forty thousand people go to Jackson-park every Sunday, to see the immense buildings going up as by magic. The premises have no equal on earth.

In temperance circles the greatest interest is still manifest in the "Bi-chloride of gold" cure. A large home has just been opened here. Rev. Samuel Small has gone back to Atlanta, Georgia, to open a home there; another has gone to California to establish a branch on the West Coast. Reports come in constantly of the grand success of the work.

The Pope's endorsement of Archbishop Ireland's position on the public school question has created quite a flutter in Roman Catholic circles. How much honesty there is in the movement — how much real love for this important feature of our Republic—how far they will go toward our welfare and then claim all for Rome—is a serious question among Protestants. Romanism is too wily to be trusted with great civil interests; her record is bad, the betrayals have been too frequent, and the lands where she has held sway for so many centuries show too much illiteracy for us to believe in her pretended "national welfare."

TRACTS WANTED.—The Open-Air Mission makes its annual appeal for tracts. Last year its agents and members circulated 1,050,890 tracts and other religious literature. Those messengers of mercy are specially needed at races, fairs, &c., 866 of which were visited last year in 643 towns and villages. Grants, or the means to purchase them, should be sent to Mr. Gawin Kirkham, Secretary, 14, Duke-street, Adelphi, London, W.C.

COLOURED MISSIONARY STUDENTS.—An estate valued at £40,000 has been left by Rev. E. J. Pierce, of Monmouth, New Jersey, United States, to Lincoln University, Oxford, Pennsylvania, for the education of young negroes to be ministers. If the supply of coloured candidates falls short, young white men are to be educated and maintained as missionaries in Africa, where the testator was himself engaged in mission work.

Notes on the Riviera.

SAN REMO.

Jutting out bo'dly from the town of San Remo, on the blue shore of the Mediterranean, in picturesque ruggedness, stands the old fortress, a stronghold of mediæval times, now used as the prison. After a visit to the Prefect, we were at once escorted over the quaint old casements of this interesting-looking place, where are situated the dormitories or dungeons containing the prisoners. About twenty men are confined together in each part of the building. Despite the fresh air blowing through the open windows, straight from the sea, there was the usual sickening faint smell always to be noticed where men are imprisoned on the old "association" system.

Here I found condemned and uncondemned herded together, young and old. Among the untried was an American who could not speak a word of Italian, and an Englishman who spoke it fluently. The charge against the latter was that he had left his hotel without paying his bill, and he had been awaiting trial nearly three months. These men were then shut up with no work to do, no books to read, and, of course, no one to visit them. A loaf of somewhat sour bread and a basin of very poor soup constituted their daily menu.

After speaking a few words of cheer, we gave to all who could read a New Testament and Psalms bound together. In each of the large wards we left five francs to be divided among them for the purchase of food. In the women's department we were pained to see babies in "durance vile." Only one man was in solitary confinement. This was the more bearable to him from the fact that a cat which had the run of the prison had chosen him as her companion, and persisted in coming through the bars of the window and making his cell her home.

The gaol, though close to the sea, has no drainage whatever, and the fœtid smells must seriously damage the health of all confined here. The officials said they "would be thankful if I could do anything to mend matters," and particularly asked me to see to the place being supplied with reading matter. In signing my name in the visiting-book I called attention to the unsanitary condition of the prison, and suggested an immediate inspection.

We were enabled also to supply the warders and soldiers with books and Scripture-rolls to hang in their quarters. It was tiring and saddening work, and tears of sympathy filled the eyes of the ladies who accompanied me through the dreary place.

MENTONE.

We drove through Ventimiglia to "La Mortola,' the residence of Mr. Thomas Hanbury. Everything in this neighbourhood speaks of the philanthrophy and liberality of this gentleman. The many schools prove a great blessing to the children who attend.

Hotel Beau Rivage is some distance from the town of Mentone, and is a very humble building. The salon used by Mr. C. H. Spurgeon has become historic. I asked one of the waiters how long he had been there, and whether he knew Mr. Spurgeon. "I have been here some years, and I knew him and loved him; he gave me his photo," he replied. Everything spoke to us of the loss of our esteemed friend. May his bright example be an incentive to those who are left behind.

BREMERHAVEN.—A correspondent writes: During periodical visits to Bremerhaven I am brought into contact with British captains and seamen, and am often asked if there is no seamen's institute or Bethel here. I am sorry there is nothing of the kind—in fact, no English place of worship. This is much to be regretted, as there are always a number of British vessels and steamers here, this being, next to Hamburg, the largest seaport in Germany.

THE NOTTINGHAM CONVENTION for the increase of spiritual life has been fixed for May 16 to 20, in the Mechanics' Hall. The invitation is signed by clergymen and ministers of various denominations. It is hoped that Mr. Robert Wilson, chairman of the Keswick Convention, will preside, and that addresses will be delivered by Revs. Evan H. Hopkins, W. Haslam, and J. Elder Cumming, D.D. Christian people in all Midland towns and villages where no such convention is being held are invited to attend. Additional information may be had from the Hon. Sec., Rev. C. Lea Wilson, Old Radford Vicarage, Nottingham.

A MOTHER'S TOUCHING LETTER.

Steadily and quietly the real rescue work carried on by the St. Giles' Christian Mission amongst discharged prisoners goes forward, with some discouragements and disappointments it is true, and with some trial in the matter of funds, but also with bright encouragement in the new and honest lives of men snatched from the very depths of crime.

An interesting illustration of the genuine results of the work is afforded by a letter, placed in our hands, and just received from a mother whose son went far wrong, and promised fair to become a hardened, habitual criminal. The Mission got hold of him at the prison gate, induced him to listen to words of warning, led him to see the error of his ways, was the means of leading him to the Saviour, and then afforded him a fresh chance in life by sending him abroad. The grateful mother writes as follows to the Secretary of the Mission, Mr. Wheatley:—

"I have received a letter by this mail from my son, who sends a message to you, which I am only too happy to transmit, with a further expression of my own gratitude which can never die. He says:—'Tell Mr. Wheatley, dear mother, that I never forget him at the throne of grace. I carry my remembrance of his kindness to me there, and ask God to bless the Mission abundantly, which, together with remembering his good advice, is the only way I have of repaying the debt of gratitude I owe him. Tell him, please, that I find the warm clothing he provided most serviceable, as the weather, though bright, is intensely cold, and that I look back upon all his kindness to me, his advice during my stay in St. Giles' Christian Mission, as being direct mercy from above. As my miserable and pitiful pride caused my fall, so, perhaps, nothing could have been more salutary than the lessons I received, one way and another, in the Home.'

"I am greatly comforted by this letter, as, if he—my boy—will only trust to the strength that will never fail him, what more can I wish? Most sincerely I pray with him for every blessing for you; my undying gratitude is yours.

"S. B."

This is but one out of many who have cause for profound thankfulness that the St. Giles' Christian Mission has been the means of saving those dear to them from paths of sin. But such work must involve cost, if really helpful aid is to be rendered at a critical time. Communications should be made to the superintendent, Mr. George Hatton, 4, Ampton-street, Regent-square, W.C.

The Anti-Gambling Crusade.

Dear Sir,—The National Anti-Gambling League has finished its second year. The report will be out in a few days and my colleague, Mr. Fold, will be delighted to send a copy to any friend who is interested in the movement. We have distributed, on racecourses and elsewhere, hundreds of thousands of our publications, we have held meetings in most of the large cities, we have formed several flourishing branches and taken a large number of pledges. All this has been achieved for little more than one hundred pounds. It is, of course, quite impossible to conduct a great campaign upon such an income, and it is only by a large amount of honorary effort that the work can be sustained. I therefore appeal for the generous support of all who desire to see their country delivered from a great and demoralising evil.

We have arranged to hold a great demonstration against gambling in St. James' Hall on Sunday afternoon, May 8, at 3.30, when addresses will be delivered by the Ven. Archdeacon Sinclair, and Rev. Hugh Price Hughes.—Yours faithfully, Frederick A. Atkins.

CRUSADE AGAINST LATE SHOPPING.—The Early Closing Association held quite a field-day last Thursday. In East London upwards of 3000 persons were present in the Great Assembly Hall, Mile-end, when appeals to abstain from shopping after half-past eight were made. The success of the Thursday five o'clock closing movement in Camden and Kentish Towns was demonstrated by a free concert at Modbury Hall. With a view of securing further public support to the Thursday five o'clock closing in Edgware-road the society's band paraded that neighbourhood.

ORPHANS OF SCOTTISH SAILORS.

It is now over three years since the sad condition of many women and children, left widowed and orphaned by the loss of life at sea, so pressed on the mind of the late Mr. and Mrs. Alexander Allan that, acting in co-operation with Messrs. George Smith and R. H. Hunter, they were the means of forming the Sailors' Orphan Society of Scotland. This fact, recalled pathetically by the death during the past year—first of Mrs. Allan and a few weeks later of Mr. Allan—was referred to in touching terms at the annual meeting of the society, recently held in the Religious Institution Rooms, Glasgow.

From the Report, presented by Mr. Hunter, it appeared that although a receiving house has been happily added during the past year, the society has not, and does not intend having, any orphanage, its plan being, in the case of a widow with children, to enable her to support and educate her own little ones, and in the cases where there is no mother to board out the wee orphans with respectable and trustworthy women. The committee say:—"Immediately on hearing of the loss of a sailor we try where possible to find out the family, and if there are young children left unprovided for, we consider how best the widow is to be helped into a position whereby she will be able to support her family, and by this means many respectable families have been saved from sinking in the great struggle which follows the loss of the bread-winner. If these families were left alone, in the majority of cases they would certainly sink, the household effects would be disposed of, the widow probably lose her health, and, as a last resource, when all her efforts were exhausted, she would apply to some institution to take her children from her. The families we have helped are nearly all of the better working-class, where, as a rule, it would not be right or wise to break up the home if it can be avoided; and our plan is, if the widow is a respectable, well-doing woman, who is likely to bring up her children well, to make her a monthly grant for one or more of her children, so as to supplement what she can earn herself, and thus enable the family to live in comparative comfort. This plan cannot pauperise, as we make it a condition that if able the mother must earn something, and what we give saves the family from that state of semi-starvation which they would otherwise endure.

"Then, again, the cost of each child is very much less than in Institution life, or when boarded out; for in providing for a child, the cost of rent, supervision, and many other items do not require to be considered. Occasionally circumstances arise which make it necessary or desirable to assume entire control of the children, and this is done by taking them into the Receiving-Home where they are kept for a little time and then boarded-out in good homes."

As to this Receiving-Home and the statistics of the past year, the report proceeds:—"We felt the time had come to have a receiving-home in Glasgow, and the matter was made a special subject for prayer; where it was to come from, or who was to have the honour of providing it, we knew not, but we felt sure it would be given. On June 16 we were greatly cheered by receiving from a friend, who desired to remain unknown, a cheque for £500 towards providing the home. We then set to work to look out for such a place, but it was not until the autumn that a suitable house was found. It was purchased at a cost of £1200, and the friend who had given the £500 provided the other £700 necessary to purchase it. We stated that it would require over £200 to furnish it and make the necessary alterations and repairs, and that sum was all provided by the opening day. The Home is under the care of Miss Robertson, the matron, and at present only fifteen beds are fitted up. It is now open to receive the orphan or fatherless children of seamen from any part of Scotland. At the beginning of the year the children for whom the Society were responsible numbered 155, other 102 have been received during the year, making 257 in all. But while these 257 have been provided for, some for a shorter or longer period, the other children in the families represented by them number 470, and they, too, have derived substantial benefit."

Communications should be made to the Secretary, Mr. Richard Hunter, 2, Park-circus, Glasgow.

LIGHT IN KURDISTAN.

Rev. R. M. Cole, American missionary, writes from Bitlis, Turkey, in Asia:—Coming up from the capital last autumn, we had good opportunities to observe matters in our old Erzeroum field, with which we were connected sixteen of our twenty-three and a-half years in Turkey. We found the macadamised road up from Trebizond in bad repair, the first sixteen miles being wholly impassable for wheeled conveyances, owing to recent rains. But inured to every hardship of travel in such a land, we are not disposed to dwell upon this. Passing along the road, I could not but call to mind the forced march which Captain McCalmont, of General Sir Arnold Kimball's staff, and I, made up from the coast over this same road in the April of 1877, during the Russo-Turkish war. We are glad to champion peace for these parts now, so far as earthly conflicts go. With no clash of arms, victory perches on the old Gospel banner. With a Protestant congregation of 300 in Erzeroum city, and two high schools for boys and girls, with work in nearly a score of out stations, from Erzingan city on the west to Mount Ararat on the east, there can be no doubt but that the Lord's cause is making itself felt on the thick darkness around.

But many as are our friends here we must push on to Bitlis, the field of our choice for the past seven years. Passing over the Anti-Taurus Mountains, upon the top of which the Turks are at their everlasting business of getting ready for war, we forded the Araxes, which by some is thought to be one of the four rivers spoken of in the Bible as flowing from Eden. Strange to say, near to its head, and off to our right, is a high table land, which the people call Trakht (Paradise) or Bingol (thousand pools), from the great number of springs, among which are many varieties of beautiful flowers. Not far away stood an old city called Abel's, but long since in ruins; while over on the opposite side of the plain rises the mountain of the 'mighty hunter'—Nimrod, that extends on near to Bitlis—so mighty, by the way, as to have harboured a gigantic volcano not many centuries back, as the formations about, and its splendid old crater, with a pond of hot water, still testify. Having forded the eastern branch of the Euphrates, we advance to Bitlis city as fast as our primitive conveyance and old horses will allow—the journey of 170 miles occupying nine days. Our people, to the number of nearly two hundred, come out in groups to welcome us, and the chapel bell, which, like ourselves, came on a mission to this land from distant America years since, but only to be muffled some time because of the fanatical opposition of the Moslems, sends out its cheery notes as we approach, and take our place again in our Eastern home.

Bitlis is a unique old town of some thirty thousand inhabitants, its houses being scattered over the hillsides, as if dropped down from the clouds haphazard. There are no built roads to facilitate passing from one house to the other. The Gospel work was begun by our veteran associates, Rev. and Mrs. G. C. Knapp, in 1858, and has made good progress. Of nearly fifteen hundred Protestants in our station-field, 475 belong to this city, and the average Sabbath congregation is 350, with a church of 175 members. We have two high schools, one for boys and one for girls, with nearly one hundred pupils in each, including all departments. Then, in the various ward schools here, that are nearly self supporting, there are 439 children under instruction, while upwards of five hundred pupils, as well as other listeners to the Truth, gather in the schools and congregations of centres in seventeen outstations throughout this great parish of ours, which is almost half as extensive as England, and with more than three hundred thousand for a population. This affords a glimpse of the Lord's work among the inhabitants of the mountains of Kurdistan, the darkest of the dark places in poor darkened Turkey.

ZULUS AND PRAYER.—Rev. Robert Shemeld, missionary, writes:—At the close of the service, on Sunday, March 13, at Bethany Zulu Mission, Estcourt, Natal, several heathen Zulu women asked the missionary to pray for rain. A few remarks from the missionary's wife as to our duties to God in connection with the fulfilment of his promises to us for temporal blessings followed, after which all united in prayer for rain. The Sunday following the same parties returned to offer thanks for the plenteous showers which had fallen during the week. It was gratifying to the missionary to learn that these parties had not, as on former occasions, petitioned the Queen of Heaven (Jer. xliv. 16.).

A NEW CALL FROM THE TELUGUS.

Dr. Clough's mission to raise fifty thousand dollars for enlarging the Telugu work and securing 25 men for its re-enforcement has been completed; the money has been pledged, and the men are nearly all in view. Dr. Clough, having thus accomplished his object, was beginning to plan for a return to his work in Ongole, when a petition was received at the rooms, signed by the leading men of Ongole, praying that the Union would raise the Ongole high school to a second-grade college. We have now not far from fifty-five thousand Christians, and a population under Christian influence of at least two hundred thousand more, who reasonably look to us for the means of an advanced education. There is now no collegiate school for Baptists in all India, and the need of such an institution has been pressed home on the missionaries and the people.

The Executive Committee has therefore resolved to avail itself of the present opportunity for creating such an institution. For the attainment of this end the committee has resolved to grant the request of the people of Ongole, and to provide for the growing need of the people in India. They have therefore asked Dr. Clough to remain in the country for the purpose of raising fifty thousand dollars, as a partial endowment for the collegiate school to be established. He has consented to stay and raise the money, which will be included in the centennial fund of one million dollars for the general enlargement and improvement of the missions of the Union.—Missionary Review of the World.

UNITED METHODIST MISSIONS.

The anniversary of the United Methodist Free Churches Missionary Society was held in Exeter Hall on Monday evening, when Rev. George Turner presented an encouraging report.

The Mayor of Rochdale, who presided, reviewed the progress at home and abroad, in Africa,—East and West—China, and various colonies. He then dwelt earnestly on the spiritual needs of the masses in the great cities.

Revs. M. T. Myers (President of the United Conference), and Dr. Stephenson (President of the Wesleyan) spoke vigorously, the latter maintaining that both churches were mindful of the fact that their mission was as much to the rich as the poor, and that Belgravia needed Christ as much as Whitechapel; for, after all, when a man got below the surface—no matter what he was—there was always the same sinful human nature which needed the same Saviour. He congratulated the Free Methodist Missionary Society upon having foresight enough to see that the Mongolian race was destined to play an important part in the future, and he was glad to read of the very successful mission they had in China.

The Preacher's Self-Culture.

An admirable address on this subject was given at the monthly conference of the South London Auxiliary of the Open-air Mission by the Rev. W. Mottram, on the 19th inst. He first dealt with the voice, as an instrument capable of producing such astounding results. It was worth training. Passing on to the culture of the mind, he advocated extensive reading, especially of anything which would help in preaching, but warned against wasting time over newspapers and magazines. But after all, the training of the heart was the main thing. Devotional habits must be cultivated, and compassion for souls must ever be foremost among the preacher's desires. Only fellowship with Jesus could accomplish this.

UGANDA AFFAIRS.—The Standard on Wednesday week had a telegram from Zanzibar, announcing a revolution in Uganda, the deposition of Mwanga, and the nomination of Captain Lugard as king. No confirmation has, as yet, been received at the Church Missionary House.

FARNBOROUGH.—On Easter Sunday Mrs. H. Wiggin, of Queen's-park Tabernacle, preached the anniversary sermons of the mission work carried on here by Mr. G. Musselwhite. In the evening the Town Hall was packed, many being affected as Mrs. Wiggin spoke to the young soldiers present. On Monday evening a public tea was provided when nearly two hundred sat down. A public meeting was afterwards held, Mr. W. F. Archibald, Master of the High Court of Chancery, presiding. The report for the year showed that steps had been taken to purchase the Town Hall, and half of the purchase-money raised already. The Sunday-school, Band of Hope, and other adjuncts are well attended.

ON THE CHINESE FRONTIER.

In sending a brief account of a recent trip taken by himself and his wife to the Chinese frontier, Mr. Thos. Selkirk, of the China Inland Mission, stationed in Bhamo, writes:—

The evening of our first day on the mountains we rested at a deserted 'Ka-chin' village. The 'Ka-chins' are very numerous on the hills especially in the country north of Bhamo. They are resisting to the utmost the onward march of our soldiers in the north, and have shown great bravery. They have a language of their own but have no written character. The American Baptist Missionary Union is doing a good work among them.

When the State railway in Upper Burma is completed, the journey from Rangoon to Bhamo can be done in three or four days, and the caravan people say that Tali-fu is about twenty days' travel from Bhamo. About five or six days of hard mountain travelling is included in this. No foreigner has crossed these hills in this part since our Mr. F. A. Steven came over, five or six years ago. The officials inform me that the Frontier Commission will probably assemble next dry season, and they hope to settle the boundary line to the satisfaction of both countries. I have not yet been able to procure a passport to travel in Yuinan when the boundary matter is definitely settled. I trust the necessary permit will be furnished.

I sincerely hope the millions in Western China will soon be more easily reached than they are at present, and some very interesting aboriginal tribes will be more accessible. When resting beside the stream at Nam-pung, some Chinese soldiers came over beside us, and permitted us to inspect their weapons. We told them the Gospel story, and gave them some tracts to convey to their comrades.

We are having much encouragement in our Bhamo Chinese Church. We have had some earnest inquirers, but many Chinese come here and remain a few months only. The caravan people are very busy when here, and have little leisure to listen to us. We regularly visit the English soldiers with tracts, and hold a weekly meeting for them, which God has greatly blessed. We shall be glad to be remembered in prayer by your readers.

MR. THORNE'S MISSION AT EALING.

With devout thankfulness we record God's mercy to us in a fortnight's mission, conducted by Mr. Henry Thorne. The mission was under the joint auspices of the Y.M.C.A and Y.W.C.A. and the meetings were held in the hall of the former Association. This did not allow of very large congregations, excepting on the evening when Mr. Thorne gave his address on the story of his life; the large Victoria Hall was crowded on that occasion. The interest was well maintained throughout; the missioner and workers had the joy, night by night, of pointing inquiring souls to the Saviour, and helping backsliders to return. On some of the evenings quite a considerable number came out as inquirers, and subsequently testified to their faith in Christ.

Our brother's cheery teaching and very instructive Bible readings have proved an inspiration to many workers, and we are earnestly trusting that the mission will result in greatly deepened consecration to the Master's service.

THE METROPOLITAN TABERNACLE.—At a special church meeting held on Friday evening Dr. A. T. Pierson was invited to return from America and occupy the pulpit for a year. Rev. Thomas Spurgeon, who is expected to arrive from Auckland, N.Z., early in June, will fill the pulpit, it is hoped, for three months.

PROGRESS IN CUBA.—Pastor A. J. Diaz writes from Havana, Cuba:—"We have nine preaching stations, three organised churches, three large schools (both daily and Sabbath), with a regular good average attendance. Our missionaries number twenty-one, and we contend against all manner of obstacles. Since October last we have opened a female college, and thus far it is well patronised. There are seven teachers, and an attendance of over ninety pupils, mostly very poor children. We cannot receive any more until the Lord sees fit to provide us with sufficient means to carry us through. There is another school where the average attendance is 120 daily. The prospect is encouraging, although we encounter severe trials and persecutions, our worst hindrance being the extreme poverty of our members and the people who attend."

NOTES ON DAILY READINGS.

SUNDAY, MAY 1.—GENESIS XII.

It is to the separated soul that the choicest promises are made. Withdrawn from the society of man, it is drawn close to the bosom of God, and things are said to it which had not entered the heart of man to conceive. Abraham is pre-eminently the type of the separate life. "He dwelt in tents." He separated first from his country, then from his kindred, then from the gains of Sodom, then from his own methods of obtaining the promises. Lot, Hagar, and even Isaac were left in order that he might walk alone with God. Too many reverse the true order. We cannot be really *un*worldly till we have become other-worldly. The tent life is only possible to those who have seen the City which hath the foundations. Longing for the home is ever coupled with trust and love towards the Father, whose love has built it. The true pilgrim is always a worshipper. Abraham failed before adverse circumstances and beneath the fear of man, but he returned to the altar, and God forgave and restored him, and delivered him from the consequences of his sin. Saints are not matured in a day.

MONDAY, MAY 2.—GENESIS XIII.

It is best to let God choose. "He shall choose our inheritance for us." Choose God as the portion of your inheritance and of your cup, and then leave the choice of all beside in his hands. Men of the world, who are ever trying to do the best for themselves, like the "landgrabbers" of new territories, may seem to prosper, but they fail to secure for themselves a permanent heritage, and their names are like those which children write on the sea-sands; whilst the meek, who hand their lot over to God, though at first sight they lose all, really win all, for they inherit the earth. Abraham was the child of faith; God had promised to give him the land, there could be no doubt as to that. And thus, when it became evident that he must part from Lot, he was able to give him the right of choice. "Take which you will; but let there be no strife between us or ours." Only let God be glorified. Here is the abandonment of faith. Lot lifted up his eyes and saw the plain of Sodom, and chose, and probably congratulated himself on his cleverness. But when he had gone, Abraham lifted up his eyes at God's bidding, and saw the Land of Promise. The one had rich and watered lands, but finally came out stripped of everything. The other had but a tent, and a temporary use of the pasture-lands, but ultimately the whole land came into the possession of his seed, and will yet be theirs again. "My soul! Wait thou only upon God, for my expectation is from Him."

TUESDAY, MAY 3.—GENESIS XIV.

The most perilous time in our life is not the hour of failure, but of success and victory. When we return from the slaughter of the kings, bearing the spoils, then it is that the king of Sodom is likely to be lying in wait, and it is then that we are most liable to fall victims to his seductive bribes. What chance would Abraham have had of peace or freedom if he had taken of the tainted spoils of Sodom? How could he have lived as a pensioner on the providence of God, if he were feathering his nest with ill-gotten wealth? Surely such expenditure as his demanded some recompense? And was there any harm in taking all that was freely offered? Any one else who had done as much would have presented a much heavier bill for payment. So we are apt to reason about the bribes of ill-gotten or questionable gain, which the world endeavours to slip into our hands. But there is one who anticipates the tempter. Our great High Priest, the true Melchizedek, comes with the bread and wine of his flesh and blood, with the blessing of God, and a newly-revealed name of God, which will stand us in good stead afterwards. See how Abraham quotes in his answer to Sodom the new name for God, which he had just learnt, "the Possessor of heaven and earth." Thus fortified, the tempter can find no foothold in us.

WEDNESDAY, MAY 4.—GENESIS XV.

Why did God come near his child in accents so tender and reassuring? Evidently there was something that had caused him fear, and God's voice answered the silent questioning of his soul. Unspoken by him even to Sarah, unguessed by those who met him daily, unknown by Eliezer, he was haunted by a secret dread! But God knew it, and said, Fear not. "Thou drewest near in the day I called upon Thee; Thou saidst, Fear not." If his heart misgave him, as he saw the rewards of this world slip past him, as water-lilies elude the grasp of the child reaching from the hurrying boat, God Himself would supply all he needed, and be his exceeding great reward. His seed would be numberless as the stars, and the land was already made over to him by Divine deed of gift. Yea, in order to place his ownership beyond dispute, God conformed to the legal forms of the time, and passed as a lamp of fire between the parted remnants of the sacrifice, ratifying his promise by his oath—two immutable things! And Abraham believed God; and on the ground of his faith, God dealt with him henceforth as a righteous person.

THURSDAY, MAY 5.—GENESIS XVI.

Poor Hagar! What contrasts met in her life! Slave-girl, bought in some Egyptian slave-mart, but destined to be the mother of a great people! She is not the last who has suffered through the mistakes and sins of one of God's children, but has been abundantly recompensed afterwards. It was a great mistake that Abraham should take her into marriage union with himself. It was a stroke of human policy, suggested by the unbelief of his wife, but it was a mistake and a wrong. God's way can never contravene any of his own institutions and laws, and especially the law of marriage, which gives one woman to one man. How remarkable is the advice given her by the angel: Return and submit. Does not the child of God often seek to run away from his cross? "Let me but get away from this other life with which I am linked, this business I am obliged to follow, this sorrow I have to carry." We evade the unwelcome Sarah. But God meets us. "No stranger He to all our wanderings wild." And He bids us take up the cross, and acquiesce in his way and will. God will allow us to go out, but not till we have learnt the lesson perfectly. Meantime, He promises we shall be rewarded by an innumerable progeny. Out of our own bitter griefs we acquire the grace and power to bring others to Jesus.

FRIDAY, MAY 6.—GENESIS XVII.

A covenant is a promise of one to another, in which the first party binds himself to do certain things for the other on certain conditions being observed. And of this agreement some object or act is selected as a memento or sign. What a marvel is here that El Shaddai is willing to bind Himself to be a God to a mortal man and to his seed for all generations, and to give them a land for an everlasting possession! That covenant is extended to each of us if we are by faith the spiritual children of faithful Abraham. Our blessed Lord has fulfilled for us the provisions of the covenant, which were altogether beyond our reach, and now waits to fulfil them in us. He only of all who were ever born of woman has walked before God the Father in absolute uprightness and perfectness of obedience; but He is willing to live in us and walk in us, conforming us to his own perfect standard; and there is no hope of our approaching it, however remotely, until we have thrown open our entire nature to his indwelling and inworking. It is also his province to administer, though without hands, the rite of spiritual circumcision, in putting away from us, once and for ever, "the body of the sins of the flesh." This, after all, is the true sign of our being in the covenant.

SATURDAY, MAY 7.—GENESIS XVIII.

What blessedness was there. To receive God into the home as a guest; to provide entertainment and provision for his need; to receive promises warm and living from his lips; to be entrusted with his secret purposes about the future; to be able to win deliverance for others—all these were memorable and wonderful privileges conferred on a man like ourselves. Is not this what the Psalmist intended when he spoke of the secret of the Lord having been with them that feared Him? Why should not we know more of these things in our daily life? Did not the Lord Jesus promise that the Father and He would come and take up their abode with the man who kept his words? But we must show ourselves worthy of such intimacy, ere we can be honoured by its being bestowed. There is a condition to be fulfilled. "I have known him, that he will command his children and his household after him that they may keep the way of the Lord." There was no fear of this noble soul wavering or waning in his loyalty or obedience. He would be true to his trust so long as he lived, and would commit it to the custody of his sons. Perhaps family religion is a closer test than any other of our intrinsic character before God.

International S. S. Lessons.

SUNDAY, MAY 8.—Psalm lxxxiv.

There are many differences of opinion as to the authorship of this Psalm. If David was the author, as not a few still believe, it was probably written in connection with his flight from Jerusalem because of the rebellion of Absalom. The Sons of Korah were appointed by David to lead the temple music (Chr. vi. 16, 22; 2 Chr. xx. 19).

Mr. Spurgeon has the following helpful note in introducing this Psalm:—"Pilgrimages to the tabernacle were a great feature of Jewish life. In our own country, pilgrimages to the shrine of Thomas of Canterbury, and our Ladye of Walsingham, were so general as to affect the entire population, cause the formation of roads, the erection and maintenance of hostelries, and the creation of a special literature; this may help us to understand the influence of pilgrimage upon the ancient Israelites. Families journeyed together, making bands which grew at each halting place; they camped in sunny glades, sang in unison along the roads, toiled together over the hill and through the slough, and, as they went along, stored up happy memories which would never be forgotten."

The three Selahs suggest the best division of the Psalm.

1-4.—Distance does not cool the Psalmist's affection for the House of God. "By the want of ordinances he learns the worth of them." The plural (tabernacles) is used to include the holy place and the most holy, and the outer court as well. How amiable—as though he had no language to express his sense of their beauty and value. The outer covering of the tabernacle was probably not attractive. It needed a heart acquainted with the glory within to speak of them thus. (2) Spirit, soul, and body united in this intense longing. The ordinances of God are only valuable, as they lead us to the God of the ordinances. Not in them, but in Him does our whole nature find satisfaction. (3) Probably the Psalmist means that he had found the House of God to him what the nest is to the bird, hence his longing to return. Altars there were two—one for atonement, the other for intercession. Our sin is put away at the first, our prayers are made acceptable at the second (Rev. viii. 2, 3). (4) Dwell—not only have access to it, but are occupied with its service, as were the priests and Levites.

5-8.—We have here the character, the influence, the progress, and the end of a godly man. There is a twofold description of his Character. (5) His strength is in God—which means that he is consciously weak in himself. No one trusts implicitly to the strength of another who has any confidence in his own. Note who are strengthened by God (Isa. xl. 29; 2 Cor. xii. 10.). The other phrase probably means: "In whose heart are the highways of the Lord." "Naturally, the heart of man is a pathless wilderness; the Holy Spirit opens out in it the highways to God of repentance and faith." Note that this twofold description applies to the godly man as he goes to worship at God's house.

His Influence (6).—The valley of Baca probably refers to a dry and parched place, in which the pilgrims, as they pass through, dig pools, which the rain fills with water. God intends every child of his to exert a similar influence in this wilderness world. His Progress (7).—He does not grow weary because of the tediousness and difficulty of his journey. His End (7).—Not only the earthly Zion, but the heavenly.

This picture of the blessedness of those who do enjoy the privileges of God's house strengthens the Psalmist's longing, and prompts his urgent cry (8).

9-12. Behold.—That is all his people need ask. When they bring their distresses under God's eye, He will not be slow to relieve (Exod. ii. 25; iii. 7). Our shield (see Gen. xv. 1). Though absent from the means of grace, the Psalmist claims the protection of the God of grace. Thine anointed. In New Testament language this means, "Look upon thine anointed and exalted Son." It is because God looks upon Christ that He becomes a shield to us. (10) The joy of communion with God is so great that a brief experience of it is better than the most lengthened experience of the pleasures of sin. A doorkeeper. The lowest position in God's house is preferable to the highest position elsewhere. (11) Here are three things:—What God is. Sun, to enlighten, to enliven, to direct (See Isa. lx. 19, 20; Mal. iv. 2; Rev. xxi. 23). Shield, to defend. Both were needed by Israel in the wilderness, and the Pillar provided both. The Christian is well cared for; from above the sun of God's love ever shines, and if enemies are around, he is secure with God as his defence (Psa. xxvii. 1). What God gives. Grace now and glory hereafter. Between these two, every good thing is secured to us. What is withheld is not good, however desirable it may appear. Whom God favours. Walking uprightly is not the price that purchases these blessings, but the evidence of our possession of grace. The Psalm shows us the blessed life, how incomparably better it is than a life of simple pleasure.

LORD'S DAY OBSERVANCE.

Dear Sir,—In the discussion on this subject in your columns, there has been much human argument but little scriptural quotation. The following passages should be prayerfully pondered by Christians who desire to know the mind of the Lord in the matter:—Matthew xii. 10-13; Mark iii. 1-5; Luke vi. 1-11, xiii. 10-17, xiv. 1-6; John v. 5-19, ix. 14-16; Romans xiv. 1-6; Galatians iv. 9-11; Colossians ii. 16, 17. Compare also Matthew xxviii. 1; and Mark xvi. 1 with Luke xxiv. 1 and John xx. 1.

If there is, in the New Testament, one passage where our Lord and Master, or the Holy Spirit by any of the apostles, inculcates or approves either Sabbath or "Lord's Day" observance, by all means let it be brought forward.—Yours faithfully,

J. McC.

Venice, "Easter Sunday," 1892.

Dear Sir,—I am glad to see the correspondence upon Sunday travelling, and hope that it may, with God's help, result in a clearer light upon the subject being held up by preachers and teachers.

May I offer a word of help to "Exhorter"? Will he ask his seniors to read to the close of the argument in Rom. vi., 14, 15: "Ye are not under the law, but under grace." "What then? shall we sin," &c. "Under" must be taken in the sense of "In slavery to." Surely the law is written in the Christian's heart, and its principles enforced by our Lord in Matt. v. 17-20.

Your correspondent, F. W. Pitt, errs in his statements "the whole of the teaching is deduced from passages which relate solely to the Jewish Sabbath," and that "there is no general teaching" in the New Testament upon the subject. Being in the dispensation of the Spirit, we are not treated as children and taught by ceremonial picture. This has been done in the Jewish nursery of the Church, so to speak. A young man is not in the habit of receiving details of his father's will as when a boy; but is supposed to know it in general principle. (Gal. v. 14, and vi. 2.) This, it seems to me, is the reason of the comparative silence of the New Testament in special rules.

To "Relieve the Oppressed" is so bound up in the Gospel that the practice of preaching it at the expense of imposing any additional burden upon our neighbour thereby cannot be rightly defended.

A. M. R.

Sir,—If with regard to travelling on the Lord's Day, the Christian is free from the Jewish law as touching the Sabbath, yet he is not free from that law which is as binding—the law of love. The Lord Jesus came not to destroy the law, but to fulfil it; and gave unto us the sum total of this all-comprehensive law: "Whatsoever ye would that men should do to you do ye even so to them, for this is the law and the prophets." Let those who advocate travelling on the Lord's Day occupy the position of a servant on the railway, the driver of a tram-car, cab, or omnibus, and the case would soon be altered. Those who have thus to labour are not in favour of the law which somewhat binds them, and justly condemn those who are the cause, especially those who do not practice what they preach.

In fulfilling this law of love and liberty, which should be written upon the hearts of every true Christian, even though we have liberty for Sunday travelling, &c., we have to consider the conscience of another. It would be well for us to weigh well the words of the Apostle Paul, Rom. xiv. 13-23; 1 Cor. viii. 9-13. Besides the call to this negative duty, there is the positive one of letting our light shine; in other words, setting a good example. It is well known that the traffic on the Lord's Day is chiefly for pleasure-seekers, those who are lovers of themselves, and not of God. In riding, we are not in the true position of a witness; our testimony is not likely to influence such for good, nor can we in any way protest.

If Christians assembled and worshipped according to the will of God, there would be no need of preachers travelling on the Lord's Day to fulfil engagements. The promise is that where two or three are gathered together in the name of Jesus, He is in their midst.

North Newington. C. W. W.

Dear Sir,—As a Christian I greatly value, as all Christians must value, the "Lord's" Day. Rightly or wrongly, I do not like the term "Sabbath Day" applied to it. It savours too much, I think, of legality, and Christians are not under the law, which said "thou shalt do" (which man could not), or die. The Lord's Day, or the first of the week, is not "the Sabbath," and I think Christians should observe it, not as a legal institution, but as a glorious privilege, as a day for specially remembering the Lord's death and resurrection, and communion with God; not because "thou shalt do so," but because our love to Christ makes us long to do it.

I would be sorry to write anything that would seem to detract from, or imply an underestimate of, this precious day, especially as some consciences are weak, but on this account it may be a great benefit if some abler pens than mine would deal with the question I am raising. I see no allusion to the Sabbath in the New Testament after our Lord's death, and our Lord only mentioned it as a Jewish institution. If the Lord's Day is to be regarded as "the Sabbath" are we not bound to observe it as such, with all the strict rigidity of the law, as contained in the Old Testament? If not, it seems to me that its compulsory observance cannot be upheld.

May it not be that, under the Christian dispensation, and seeing that there is no reference to it in the New Testament, God did not intend the Lord's Day to be regarded as was "the Sabbath" under the Jewish dispensation? From this point of view, the objection to investments in railway and other companies, not sinful in their character, would I think fall to the ground. But it would be well that tender and weak consciences should prayerfully and intelligently study Romans xiv., and act accordingly. To the Christian, all days are, in an important sense, alike. Our Lord said the hour had come when they that worship God must do so in "spirit" (which I take to mean not in the "letter") and in truth, not in mere form.

I am suggesting in the foregoing what occurs to my own mind, and will be very glad if, through your courtesy, the matter is further opened up.—Yours sincerely,

J. P.

Crouch Hill, N.

Sir,—In your issue of April 7 several writers dwell upon the subject of the Day of Rest for man and for horses. Without doubt they are right in advocating rest for the weary. Our God is very tender in this respect, having given in his beneficence, both to man and to animals, the right for rest after the day for labour.

But as for a day specially set apart for rest, where, in the New Covenant, do we find such an enactment? In the old dispensation there was distinct command upheld and enforced by dreadful penalties. The seventh day of Creation furnishes the basis of the enactment. It was specially the Day of Rest, the Sabbath. It stood on the same footing as the other commands of the Decalogue; any infringement involved the punishment of death. Had Israel changed the seventh for any other day of the week it would have been a great iniquity. Our Lord, when on earth as an Israelite, had to keep holy the Sabbath, to enforce it as well as the other Mosaic institutes, the new dispensation, not having begun until his death and resurrection. Until then it was not "Live and do what I tell you"; but "Do this and Live"! Did He not set aside the obligation of the Decalogue, nailing it to his cross? As to the nine other the moral commands, they were all re-enacted in the writings of the Apostles; not, however, under the previous penalty.

Moderns have committed two blunders in re-establishing the old law, written on stones, with many modifications of their own, which law, the Apostle tells us, was ready to vanish away. The other, in substituting the first day for the seventh—a sacrilegious act, desecrating the seventh, and sanctifying the first day. The early Disciples did come together on the Sunday, as they might have done on the Monday, or any other day; but there was never any Divine injunction to keep it holy, or to exalt it above any other day.

The passage Rom. xiv. 3 to 5 does not relate to any human traditions or fancies, but to the condition of the early converts brought up under the Mosaic Law and its observances, who might well entertain a doubt whether the new faith they had embraced exonerated them from the Law, since that was ordained by God.

In addition, it may be noticed that the Apostle John (Rev. 1-10), writing from Patmos, does not speak of any particular day of the week on which he wrote, but that his whole soul was so engrossed with the grand topic—the great Day of the Lord, so often dwelt upon in the Old Testament. Thereupon the Lord was pleased to communicate to him the instructions relative to that Day of Days which form the contents of the whole Book of Revelation, which is neither to be added to nor to be abridged under the direst penalty.

CONSCIENCE AND INVESTMENTS.

Dear Sir,—With reference to the letters which have appeared in the The Christian under the above head, allow me, as an old railway servant, to remark that if it be wrong for Christian shareholders to receive a dividend which is partly derived from the proceeds of Sunday travelling, it must be equally wrong for Christian railway servants to receive wages which are also partly derived from the same source.

It appears to me, however, that the first point to be settled is whether there is any Scriptural authority for transferring the obligations of the Jewish Sabbath to the first day of the week or the Lord's Day. This question was, I believe, asked in the House of Commons, many years ago, and no reply was forthcoming.

While, for my own part, I have been unable to discover any Scriptural ground for regarding the first day of the week as the Sabbath, the Lord's Day is, to me, the most precious day of the week, and as a railway servant I should rejoice to see all our railway companies imitating the noble policy adopted by the North Western Company more than fifty years ago, when the directors of that company passed a resolution that, as far as possible, Sunday was to be observed as a day of rest for their servants, and this resolution has, I believe, been faithfully adhered to ever since.—Yours faithfully,

W. Cornfield.

Stoke Newington, N.

Dear Sir,—I have read with interest the correspondence on this subject, and venture to add the result of my experience as to investments for Christian people. I have long ago formed an opinion that all Christians will do right in refusing to hold the ordinary shares of railways or other trading companies which earn dividends by traffic on the Lord's Day, or by any other method contrary to the revealed Will of God.

It is open to argument whether the same strong objection can be raised to investments in the debenture debt of such companies, which may be regarded as a loan, carrying a fixed rate of interest, and not dependent on the amount of business transacted on weekday or Lord's Day. A Christian may, perhaps, be allowed liberty to lend his money at interest to a trader, or a body of traders, while not approving of their religious principles. He does not constitute himself a partner, or participate in profits. I do not press this view of the case, and, personally, I decline to hold any kind of investment in a railway company. But I think it right to point out that there is a distinction between lending capital at a fixed rate of interest, and sharing profits.

Some years ago, after frequent solicitations from my friends who desired to find a suitable mode of investing money, I arrived at the conclusion that the purchase of good houses in London afforded the safest kind of investment on a large scale, besides presenting some opportunities for benevolent enterprise. I joined some other friends in forming a company for that purpose; and after twenty-one years' experience I find that it has attained very large dimensions, and has fairly answered all requirements. Its rental, from more than four hundred houses, exceeds £41,000 a year (the average rental being £100 for each house). It has paid an average dividend of more than six per cent., annually, on its ordinary capital from the commencement. Its shares are now, and have been for several years past, at a premium; and amidst many thousands of business transactions this company has never yet been defendant in an action at law; nor, as far as I remember, has it ever been threatened with legal proceedings. Such an experience in regard to litigation is, I believe, quite unique in the history of joint-stock companies.

AMERSHAM HOLIDAY HOME FOR CHILDREN.

Sir,—It is on our hearts at Abbey-road Baptist Church, to establish a country home, where the poor children of the surrounding districts may be sent for a few weeks' change of air and scene. Often after a long, trying illness, the doctor's advice is "change of air;" but alas! too frequently the relatives cannot provide the longed-for change, and the little sufferers are left to pine away. Our hearts have often ached for many of the children whose pinched, pallid faces appeal to our kindly sympathy.

In order properly to establish the Homes it will be necessary to raise about £500 or £600, which would enable us to purchase and furnish two freehold cottages. The homes, although essentially Christian, will be entirely unsectarian and managed by a committee, on the principle of selecting the most needy cases first. All funds contributed will be vested in trustees, and any further information will be gladly given by Pastor H. E. Stone of 14, Abbey-road, N.W., who is heart and soul with us.—Yours faithfully,

Gilbert Lane.

MAY WE EXPECT A REVIVAL?

As one who has long borne testimony to the urgent need for spiritual revival I thank Mr. W. A. Blake for his letter in last week's Christian. Men like him (and they are everywhere) are themselves certain prophecies that God is coming in the power of his Spirit. The intense longings, which have seized many hearts, are from God; and He will fulfil them.

But the reading of Mr. Blake's paper should be followed by the reading of Mr. James E. Mathieson's faithful letter, in the same number of The Christian, on "God's Controversy with England." Spiritual revival is being hindered by our national sins. One of the most imperative duties of the hour, therefore, is repentance and humiliation. God's praying people, imitating the example of Nehemiah and Daniel and others, should take the grievous sins of the nation upon their own heart, and confess them, and should band themselves together also, and demand that the legislators and rulers of this professedly Christian land should, at whatever cost, abolish the evils that are cursing so many lives, and ruining so many souls, and that are bringing upon Britain the Divine displeasure and anger.—Yours faithfully,

William Crosbie.

Nature's Call.

In every well-regulated English home there is house-cleaning at this time of year.

The dust, the smoke, the grime of the winter fogs and storms, have permeated every nook and corner.

Nature calls for renovation, too. The whole system becomes clogged and congested with the impurities which settle in the blood, in the liver, and are plainly visible in the skin.

With the return of warm weather comes that tired feeling, that listless, indifferent, dragging experience familiar to us all.

To freshen up the health and purify the blood, nothing equals Guy's Tonic. Its action is peculiar—in fact, we know of no other medicine like it.

There is a noticeable absence of shock to the system, for it is not strong and violent in its action—indeed, it can be taken with impunity by the most delicate persons.

Pleasantly, speedily, and surely it effects a radical change, restores the appetite, cleanses the system, brightens the eye, freshens the complexion, and makes a new being of you. Guy's Tonic will be forwarded post free for 2s. 9d., by the Guy's Tonic Company, 4, Ludgate Circus, London, E.C., and of all chemists.

OBITUARY.

REV. JOSEPH STEER.

This faithful servant of Christ passed away on Sunday, April 24, after a long and painful illness. To many he will best be known as the father of Miss Steer, of the Bridge of Hope. Entering as he did the Congregational ministry in 1844, he has laboured forty-eight years, many of these at Sudbury, Suffolk.

MRS. W. DE R. POS, OF CALIFORNIA.

We hear that on April 8 the wife of Rev. W. de R. Pos, of Orange, California, passed away. She had served the Master for many years in East London, in Paris, in Miss de Broen's Mission, in the North African Mission, in Colorado, and everywhere she won the affection of all as a devoted and thoughtful Christian woman and worker.

REV. JOHN COOK, D.D.

The death of Rev. John Cook, D.D., removes one of the most distinguished ministers of North America. Born in Dumbartonshire, eighty-seven years ago, he devoted his life to work in the province of Quebec, taking an active part in the union of the various Canadian Presbyterian bodies into one national Church, and twice holding the office of Moderator in the Assembly of the Church of Scotland in Canada.

MR. ROBERT MADDOCK, DUBLIN.

Much regret is felt in Dublin at the death of Mr. Robt. Maddock, aged 84, who for half a century took an active part in many of the great religious movements of the Irish metropolis. He was a member of the Committee of the Church Missionary Society, the Scripture Readers' Society, and many other organisations. He was also a member of the Diocesan Synod, and was a liberal supporter of philanthropic work.

MR. EDWARD SHRUBSHALL.

We regret to learn that this evangelist, whose name and work have frequently been mentioned in our pages, departed to be with the Lord on Saturday, April 9, at the age of sixty-seven years. Mr. Shrubshall, having spent some years in service for the Lord in and around Brighton, afterwards made Shoregate his centre, where for the past eighteen years his labours in the Gospel there, and in many of the surrounding villages, have been much blessed. His counsel and fellowship will be greatly missed by many. He leaves a widow and one son and daughter; the son, Dr. Shrubshall, is now labouring for the Lord in China.

MISS CATHERINE CUNNINGHAM, OF CULLYBACKEY.

The Irish Presbyterian Church has lost a devoted member in the death of this lady, who has just passed away at the age of 80 years. Twelve years ago she built the Presbyterian Church at Cullybackey, at a cost of £2500, and always took the deepest interest in the religious education of the young, and up to the last visited the Sabbath-school every Sunday. She was exceedingly kind to the poor, and a generous supporter of Presbyterian Missions, and of every important department of the Church to which she belonged. Gentle and unobtrusive in manner, her life was one of consecration to the service of the Master whom she loved.

PASTOR C. E. L. GOOD, OF THE FALKLAND ISLES.

On February 13, when sorrowing hearts laid the great preacher to rest at Norwood Cemetery, one of his college-men, C. E. Lawson Good (son of Mr. Alfred Good, late principal of Good's Academy, Droitwich, now of Cardiff), entered his rest. Having been converted to God at the age of sixteen, he early became a worker in the vineyard; and at nineteen accepted a call to undertake the Lord's work at the Priory, Abergavenny, where he laboured until he was received as a student of the Pastors' College, in September, 1888. During the latter period of his studies, his health not being strong, at his revered president's wish he sailed for the Falkland Islands, to take up the work commenced by Mr. Harris. The Master richly blessed the young pastor's labours, and when those who loved him were looking for his return, in the present year, Rev. J. A. Spurgeon received a telegram stating he had "passed away." Six weeks later, the mail brought the intelligence that Mr. Good's last sermon on earth was preached at Stanley Tabernacle on January 31, and that he worked almost to the last. He received his Lord's "well done" in his twenty-sixth year. He was beloved in all the relations of life—as son, brother, pastor, and friend.

BISHOP BUTLER'S DEATHBED.

A mighty prelate on his deathbed lay,
Revolving the dread themes of life and death
And their stupendous issues, with dismay. [one saith,
His marvellous powers nigh quenched. "My Lord,"
"Hast thou forgotten how Christ came to be A Saviour?" "Nay," the Bishop made reply,
"How know I He's a Saviour unto me?"
The chaplain paused, then answered thoughtfully,
"'Lo, him that cometh unto Me,' Christ said,
'I will in nowise cast out;' need we more?"
The Bishop slowly raised his dying head:
"I've read a thousand times that Scripture o'er,
Nor felt its truth till now I near the tomb;
It is enough. O mighty Christ, I come!"

CHARLES A. FOX.

Evangelistic Notes.

Mr. T. Moreman, a blind evangelist, has held a stirring mission at Rodney, Farsley, with tokens of awakening.

New Tredegar.—In this busy town in South Wales an interesting revival has just taken place, and not a few profess a saving change.

Rev. Richard Leitch has been conducting a mission in Walsall. The Bible readings have been full of interest and the evangelistic services most encouraging.

Mr. William Forbes has held a short mission at the Lichfield Soldiers' Home. The meetings were well attended, and several have professed to become soldiers of Jesus Christ.

Barnstaple.—Mr. Thorley has been prosecuting excellent work around Barnstaple. He has lately concluded a fortnight's mission at Marwood, where blessing has been granted.

Barking.—A week of special Gospel services has just been held in connection with the Park Hall, Barking. A number professed conversion, and believers were revived. The services were conducted by Pastor D. M. Cameron.

Mr. Merton Smith, whose work in the North has been much blessed, has paid a flying visit to London. He led the workers' meeting at the Edinburgh Castle on Sunday, and has engaged to take meetings there from the month of October next. His address is Rosmor, Sandbank, N.B.

Ireland.—Messrs. Peatt and Crozier, of the Irish Evangelistic Society, have been holding, during the past four or five weeks, a series of Gospel services at Killyleigh, co. Down, which have been very successful, and during the past two or three months Revs. Wm. Maguire and J. M. Alley have held no less than seven Gospel missions, lasting from ten days to three weeks each, on the Armagh circuit, with most encouraging results.

Smethwick.—In this busy suburb of Birmingham Rev. G. M. Smith has conducted a series of special services. On several evenings he gave the "Gospel by Limelight," that is, addresses illustrated by dissolving views. One subject which seemed to lend itself well to such illustration was "Flight from the City of Destruction." There are many tokens that the Holy Spirit has been at work throughout the mission. Some profess decision for Christ, and show evidence of having received blessing.

Mr. Edward Hurditch, of the London Evangelistic Mission, has been preaching the Gospel with great acceptance and blessing during April in Belfast. An eight days' special mission was held in the unsectarian mission hall, Mountpottinger, which was owned of God in the salvation of souls. On Saturday, 16th, Mr. Hurditch delivered a practical address on "Nazariteship," in the spacious hall of the Y.M.C.A. Mr. Hurditch proposes to spend a few months in Ireland, accompanied by his son, Mr. Herbert Hurditch, who sings and preaches the Gospel with great acceptance. All communications respecting mission work to be addressed to care of Mr. Black, Y.M.C.A., Belfast.

Rotherhithe.—During the past three weeks, Mr. Newton Jones has been conducting a mission in Bermondsey and Rotherhithe. The meetings have been held in three centres; the first week at Manor Chapel, the second at Rotherhithe Free Church, and the third at Jamaica-row Congregational Church. The Holy Spirit was manifest in the meetings from the first, and numbers of scholars have been deeply impressed, and in the majority of cases we have great hopes that many have been led to decision for Christ. The whole time has been one of cheering and encouraging incidents, the workers themselves having been much blessed and encouraged. The adult meetings were productive of much good, and, especially during the last week, were well attended.

Rev. G. C. Grubb in Tasmania.—The Launceston correspondent of the Hobart Church News writes:—"Undoubtedly the special interest of the past month (February) centred in the mission services for the united Launceston parishes, held at St. John's by the Rev. G. C. Grubb and party, and we now miss him and his earnest body of workers very much. The services held in St. John's were all crowded, many being at times unable to get even standing accommodation, and at the farewell Sunday evening service there were very large numbers seated on forms outside the open windows listening to the sermon. These services have been the means of the conversion of many souls and the bringing of great blessings to many others. The spiritual life of the parish has been greatly revived and strengthened by the mission."

CAMBERWELL RAGGED-SCHOOL.—The annual meeting of this Mission was held in the large hall, Toulon-street, Avenue-road, Camberwell, on Monday evening. Mr. Edward Rawlings presided. The report stated that the Mission sought to reach people of all ages. Through the kindness of the Destitute Children's Dinner Society, children's dinners had been provided for 5500 during the winter months. All the agencies of the Mission were carried on by voluntary workers, who, without fee or reward, devoted themselves with persistency to the work. The Chairman, Rev. Wm. Tubb, Rev. W. R. Mowll, Mr. J. R. Kelly, M.P., and others addressed the meeting.

The Book World.

Pioneer Mission Work in Africa.

TANGANYIKA: Eleven Years in Central Africa. By Edward Coode Hore, Master Mariner. (7s. 6d. Stanford.) These animated pages tell a story which, in many of its details, surpasses the wildest fiction. Captain Hore relates, in an eminently readable manner, the founding and progress of the work of the London Missionary Society on the shores of Lake Tanganyika. The heart of Africa, and some of the routes of approach, are described by one who, as a traveller, is strong in practical resource, and as a missionary full of devotion to the cause of Christ.

In the last chapter the Captain thus summarises his experiences: "In 1878, reaching Ujiji through 836 miles of swamp and jungle and forest, encountering everywhere uncivilised and barbarous man, with no ray of Christianity or other apparent light, mostly coming out to meet us spear in hand, we encountered there a mixed "rabble" in deadly opposition to our supposed objects. Along the one thousand miles of Tanganyika shore—unknown sea and land to be explored mile by mile in a log canoe—the natives turning out with spears and stones to oppose our landing. Homeless, houseless, and often less the common necessaries of life, we commenced in faith the race that was set before us. In 1888 all our missionaries are living in houses engaged in Christian teaching; our names as friends were known to all the tribes; leading names amongst the Arabs are to-day the names of friendly protectors of our Mission; our English-built mission vessels are welcomed everywhere as the harbingers of peace and goodwill; and passing once more down the long road to the coast, at our station at Urambo, and at two others of the C.M.S., I witnessed assemblies of natives to Christian worship, and found a well-worn road free and open to the passage of any honest man."

Embellished with a portrait, maps, and original illustrations, this volume deserves many readers, alike as a book of travel and adventure, and a record of how the Cross has begun its conquests in a most important part of the Dark Continent. Captain Hore's work was that of a pioneer, and others have entered into his labours, Governments and traders announcing authority over and interest in the inhabitants of countries whom he and his fellow-missionaries were the first to reconcile to the visits of strangers. In conclusion, he shows how great and urgent are the present opportunities of evangelising Africa. We trust his volume will do much to help on the work in which he has himself engaged with so much vigour, and, with his excellent wife, done so much to facilitate for others. We understand that copies of the volume may be had for 6s. 3d., post free, from Captain Hore, 22, Montague-road, Hornsey, N.

SWAZIELAND FOR CHRIST, by Dudley Kidd, tells a remarkable story of how prayer offered fifty years ago is being answered to-day in the South African mission-field. (2d. Marshall Brothers.)

Next week the Religious Tract Society will publish JAMES GILMOUR OF MONGOLIA, his Diaries, Letters, and Reports, edited and arranged by Rev. Richard Lovett, with three photogravure portraits, two maps, and other illustrations. The book will contain many strange pictures of life amid Mongol surroundings, and the letters to relations and friends will be found full of thoughts and achievements most stimulating to personal consecration to Christ, and whole-hearted devotion to the service of man for Christ's sake.

Mr. Holness has published in neat booklet form (1s. per dozen), the poem THE MAN OF SORROWS, by the late J. N. Darby.

A ROMANTIC PRISON STORY, and Other Prison Narratives, by Chas. Cook, is a recent addition to the penny "Stirling Series," published from Drummond's Tract Depot. The pages not only exhibit the consequences of wrong-doing, but declare the wages of sin, and we trust they will be read far and wide.

WHITE FIELDS is the organ of the Zenana Medical College, 58, St. George's-road, S.W. The latest issue gives excerpts from many sources, as well as original articles, on the pressing need for lady workers in Eastern lands, and the measures that have been adopted to meet that need. (1d. Nisbet and Co.)

YOUNG PEOPLE'S GUILDS.—Rev. Robert Stewart, M.A., of Gateshead, has published a paper, which he read at a meeting of the Presbytery of Newcastle-on-Tyne. The "Guild Movement" is explained and strongly commended, and the writer narrates his own successful experiences of the working of the same in connection with his own church. (Robinson and Co., 56, Side, Newcastle-on-Tyne.)

A LETTER IN DEFENCE OF THE FAITH AND POSITION OF THE ENGLISH CHURCH AGAINST THE ATTACKS OF ROMANISTS, with more particular reference to an attack by Mr. C. T. Gatty. By Sampson Low, B.A., assistant curate of Holy Trinity, Hendford, Yeovil. This is a solid contribution to a warm discussion of facts and principles. (6d. Yeovil: E. Whitty and Son, Booksellers.)

Temperance Notes.

The twelfth annual report of the Gospel temperance work carried on in the Central Hall, Newcastle, states that in all 1600 pledges have been taken from adults at the hall and festival meetings, and at the police-court and Prison Gates Missions.

Prohibition (says the New York Independent) and nothing else, is law in Iowa for two years more at least. If it is well enforced the majority against license two years hence will be greater than it now is, and it is now greater than ever before.

Dr. T. L. Cuyler gives six cogent reasons why drink ought to be left alone: (1) that the best work is done without it; (2) that it is an irritant; (3) that it strikes the brain; (4) that no one is safe who drinks at all; (5) for the sake of example; (6) for the sake of our children.

An interesting fact was mentioned last week by Mr. W. S. Caine as to the movement against the use of stimulants in India. There are 130 temperance societies now established there, the members of which pledge themselves to abstain not only from alcohol, but from opium.

There is (says The Daily Chronicle) no more inflexible opponent of the public-house than the public library, and no better counter-attraction to the open doors of the gin-palace than the open gates of the free park, where periodical programs of music, thanks to the County Council, are now provided.

Mr. Faithfull writes that the first anniversary of the Marseilles section of the Gospel Temperance Movement took place lately. The section now numbers twenty-five active members, and many have been turned from Satan to God. Many sailors have signed the pledge, some of whom have been helped, and some, it is hoped, truly converted.

The Good Templars' Grand Lodge, last week, adopted a resolution demanding the prohibition of the liquor traffic, declaring the undesirability of any one connected with the liquor traffic having a seat in the House of Commons, regretting the practice of holding inquests in public houses, and calling for a reform in the licensing system.

A conference of the National Union of Teachers being held last week in Leeds, a temperance breakfast was convened, when Dr. Martin, Mr. Marchant Williams and others appealed, specially to those entrusted with the tuition of children. If teachers could only grasp the situation, and realise the power placed in their hands to neutralise the evil influences by which the young were surrounded, they might be the greatest benefactors to the nation.

The Cullen Social Reform Association recently issued to householders in the town a paper with certain queries. The papers being collected and summed, it was found that 191 voted "in favour of the people having entire control of the liquor traffic by the vote," and fourteen against; 185 votes were "in favour of the reduction of the present number of licensed houses," and twenty-three against; 190 "in favour of the abolition of grocers' licences," and nineteen against.

In 1887 Mr. D. L. Moody invited Francis Murphy to visit Chicago and hold temperance meetings, which, under the leadership of these two evangelists, continued for over three months, resulting in a great Gospel and temperance revival. The workers and converts organised and adopted the name, suggested by Mr. Moody, of "The Gospel Temperance League." An experience of five years in practical work has convinced those connected with this movement that this temperance reform merits extension.

The results of the annual Licensing Courts held in the burghs throughout Scotland have been on the whole very satisfactory to the Temperance party, and in all the large centres there were gratifying decreases. In several instances there was a slight increase in the number of licensed premises, but the general tendency of magistrates was towards reduction. Edinburgh shows a decrease of twelve licences, and no new ones were granted; while in Glasgow a large number of cases were continued, and it is expected there will be a considerable reduction in the number of licences in that city.

It is stated that the success of the P.S.A. movement is likely to lead to an interesting development of temperance work. The undenominational character of these gatherings renders it somewhat difficult for them to utilise the various denominational temperance societies. Temperance lodges are being formed in many towns as a branch of the P.S.A. Such lodges would have many of the special features connected with the Good Templar movement, and yet would be so elastic as to embrace other forms of temperance work. Such a lodge is being formed at Hanley, Staffordshire, which seems to have become a kind of headquarters of the P.S.A. movement.

The Evening News, in a recent article on "Westminster Lodging-houses," says:—"Our representative found, as the result of his investigations, that many of these outcasts from society are men and women who at an early period of their life had every advantage that good birth, education, culture, and means could confer upon them. Broken-down merchants, lawyers, clergymen, officers, and the representatives of almost every profession and trade, mingled with pickpockets, burglars, gamblers, bullies, hawkers, beggars, tramps, and fallen women of every age and description. It is estimated that 95 per cent. of the inmates of these houses have been reduced to their present condition through drink."

Dr. Hugh Barbour has now returned from his missionary tour in China, where, it will be remembered, he was at the time when his beloved and honoured mother was called to her rest.

Miss Lucy Booth is to be married at Clapton, on May 17, to Mr. John Lampard, who is the chief officer of the Salvation Army in India, and has adopted the name of Colonel Ajeet Singh.

Dr. Pentecost will, it is hoped, be in London for some time to come. He is at present filling the vacancy at Marylebone Presbyterian Church, and on Sunday last many flocked to hear his clear and bold proclamation of the Gospel.

Rev. Dr. Pindor, who by his sermons, translations, and writings has probably done more than any man now living for the spread of the Gospel amongst the Poles in Austria, delivered an eloquent and striking lecture in the English Reformed Church, Hamburg, on Wednesday evening last, on the "Present State and Past History of the Evangelical Church in Austria." Dr. Pindor is now on his way to England.

The Late Dr. H. Allon.—Some thirty thousand people are said to have been present at the funeral services and obsequies of this deceased minister. One of the daily papers in its description of the event says: "Shops were closed, blinds drawn, and the busy traffic of the streets forced to a temporary lull by the seething crowds of spectators which thronged them. From the chapel door to the cemetery gates crowds were gathered in line to witness the procession."

Among the Churches.

CHURCH OF ENGLAND.

On Sunday next Rev. William Doune, late of Great Yarmouth, enters on his new and important charge at Wakefield.

The next meeting of the Yorkshire Lay and Clerical Union will be held at York, June 9 and 10, Canon M'Cormick, D.D., presiding.

The election of Rev. Dr. Hicks to the bishopric of Bloemfontein has been confirmed by the House of Bishops for the province of South Africa.

The Chartered South Africa Company, says The Times, has given 3000 acres of land as an endowment for a church to be erected at Fort Salisbury, Mashonaland.

An interesting service was held on Maundy Thursday in the Episcopal Jews Chapel, when many members of the Hebrew Christian Union assembled for prayer and conference.

Rev. T. Pelham Dale, so notorious as an extreme ritualist, as the defendant in the remarkable case in 1880, and as suffering imprisonment, died last week at Sausthorpe, near Spilsby.

Dr. Bardsley, the new Bishop of Carlisle, declines to take any preaching engagements outside his diocese, until he has made the acquaintance of all the clergy and curates in the diocese.

At the annual diocesan conference at Lichfield last week the subject of Socialism was down, but the Bishop, Dr. Legge, postponed the discussion, which took place the following day.

Rev. G. S. Reaney opened a discussion one evening last week on "The Dangers of the Partisan Press." Many questions are discussed, he said, not on their merits, but with a view to securing votes.

St. George's Church, Liverpool, has for some time fallen away greatly in attendance and interest. The new incumbent, Rev. J. Turner, has just entered on charge, and in so doing stated his position, avowing that the old Gospel, and that alone, would revive interest.

The labouring men of the Church and Parish of Heatherlands, Parkstone, Dorset, have offered their gratuitous services to the vicar, Rev. C. H. Bousfield, in the erection of a building in the grounds of St. John's Church, to be used for parochial purposes. This building is much needed for mothers' meetings, Bible-classes, lectures, &c.

The annual meetings of the Southport Evangelical Conference, presided over by the Archdeacon of Liverpool, will be held in Southport on May 31 and June 1. The principal speakers will include the Dean of Gloucester (who will preach the Conference sermon), Professor Lumby, D.D., and Revs. C. H. Waller, D.D., and George Everard.

Canon Jacob, vicar of Portsea, in issuing the final balance-sheet in connection with the erection of his new parish church, states that the sums contributed from time to time by the late Mr. W. H. Smith began with a donation of £500 on laying the first stone, and ended with a total of £28,125. Even that amount, however, does not represent the whole sum which the parish owes to Mr. Smith. The right hon. gentleman had in earlier years presented the vicar with £100 for mission buildings, and later he had, at a cost of £770, purchased land adjoining the church to prevent it from being built upon, and he had also offered a reasonable amount to buy up certain houses and to throw the ground into the churchyard.

CONGREGATIONAL.

It is stated that the scheme for rebuilding Whitfield's Tabernacle, Tottenham-court-road, has for the present been abandoned.

The Congregational Association of Cornwall held, last week, a conference on county missions, temperance, and Sunday-schools.

The British-American Congregational Church, St. Petersburg, has set free its minister, Rev. A. Francis, from all pastoral duties for three months, that he may devote himself to the work of relieving the famine-stricken Russians. Already the church has distributed food to the value of about £60,000.

The sixty-ninth annual meeting of the West Lancashire Auxiliary of the London Missionary Society was held last week. Mr. Thomas Davies presided, and spoke of the urgent need that existed among the millions who had not heard the Gospel, of more missionaries and more money to equip and support them.

A united communion service was held on Wednesday week in Broughton Church, Bury New-road, at which members attended from the Congregational churches at Broughton-park, Queen's-park, Cheetham-hill, Ashley-lane, Hightown, Rooden-lane, and Broughton. Rev. D. W. Vaughan delivered an address on "The Sufferings of Christ."

A proposal is to be made at the next half-yearly meeting of the Governors of Caterham School, by which the fee for boys admitted after its adoption would be £7 10s. per annum, instead of £5, as at present. A correspondent writes to suggest that the burden should be thrown upon the churches, and not upon struggling pastors, the church undertaking to contribute £2 2s. per annum so long as the son of its minister remains in the school.

The deacons of Craven Chapel, Regent-street, wish it to be understood that the chapel is not going to be disposed of, nor handed over to another denomination, the church having unanimously resolved to do its utmost to maintain the work which has for so many years been carried on at this bulwark of Independency and centre of usefulness, so that Congregationalism may still be represented in this important district.

Mr. John D. Rockefeller, of New York, has given £8000 for a new building for Spelman Baptist College at Atlanta, now overcrowded with 300 students.

In the "American Baptist Year-Book for 1892," just published, the statistics show that the members of Baptist churches in the States number nearly one in nineteen of the whole population.

The Baptist churches in Nottingham, numbering 4000 members, two years ago formed themselves into a union, holding from time to time social meetings of church officers and conferences on matters of common interest.

Right Hon. J. W. Mellor, Q.C., speaking last week at the Baptist meeting in Todmorden, remarked that if the various denominations tried to discover in how many points they agreed, instead of trying to discover how much they differed, they would have a greater Christian unity than he was afraid they had at the present time. He was pleased to see that the Baptist friends had been so successful, and that they had been enabled to erect such a block of buildings as they possessed, and he hoped that they would be enabled to clear off the debt which was upon them.

At Weenen, Natal, the labours of the devoted pastor have been blessed of the Lord, the services being well attended, and the spiritual life of the people greatly quickened.

The Liverpool Wesleyan circuits will this year show an increase of 206 church members, with 696 on trial. The largest increase is 107, in the Rock Ferry Circuit, where Rev. Thomas Cook conducted a successful mission in the autumn.

The suggested modification of the three years' system of itinerancy in the Wesleyan Church will not come before the district committees of Methodism until the special committee has presented its report to the ensuing Conference.

Rev. R. Waddy Moss read an able paper to the Manchester Ministers' Meeting on Friday last. His subject was Christian Doctrine and Modern Thought. The two prominent features of modern thought he pronounced to be the theory of evolution and the growing belief of philosophy in a personal spirit in man. The paper evinced extensive reading and most careful thought. Revs. W. L. Watkinson, Richard Green, W. F. Slater, James Lewis, and Dr. Randles contributed to the discussion, and a most profitable hour was spent.

From Chu-Wang, in the province of Konan, a station of the Canada Presbyterian China Mission, comes an account of the conversion of a Chinese scholar of some distinction, possessor of the highest grade of the B.A. degree.

The congregation at Wolverhampton, of which Rev. Wm. Johnston is minister, is determined to make the visit of the Synod to the Midlands memorable in its history by a bold effort to wipe out its debt of £1000. Already over £690 have been paid into the bank, and there are in promises about £160 more, making in all £760.

The Presbyterian missionary meeting at Exeter Hall on May 13 is expected to prove deeply interesting. Great pains have been taken with the arrangements, and the list of speakers ought to ensure a large and enthusiastic audience. Missionary zeal in the Church is by no means at the lukewarm point, as is shown by the success that has followed the special effort that has been in progress; and it is hoped that this great meeting will raise it to a still higher pitch of fervour.

It is stated that the Eastern Reformed Church (Covenanters) is likely to unite soon with the Irish Presbyterian.

The society for providing nurses for the sick poor in Belfast is doing an excellent work. During the past year it nursed 846 persons, and supplied 1302 articles of new clothing.

Duncairn Presbyterian Church, Belfast, of which Rev. W. J. Jackson is the pastor, is in a flourishing condition. The congregation maintains agencies of various kinds, including home and foreign missions, and contributed last year for all purposes £2,915.

On Friday last the annual meeting of the Protestant Orphan Society was held in the Gregg Memorial Hall, Dublin. The Archbishop of Dublin presided, and delivered an interesting address. Nineteen orphans were admitted during the year.

At the Easter Vestry meeting in Armagh Cathedral one of the members present made charges of Ritualism, saying that there were crosses on the cover on the communion table contrary to the canons of the Church. The discussion gave rise to some strong statements on both sides.

The report of the representative Church body for the past year is a very encouraging one, and shows that the total income was £496,933, or nearly half-a-million, while the expenditure was over £86,000 less than that amount. The total assets are £7,585,700 12s. 5d. Upwards of £4,000,000 has been voluntarily subscribed for church purposes since the disendowment in 1870.

Rev. Dr. Laws, of Livingstonia, in a recent address in Edinburgh, said there were far too few workers in the Mission. Sixteen years ago the difficulty was to find men; to-day there are sixty men in the Free Church ready to go abroad, and it is for the Church to send them.

THE ACTION OF THE GERMANS in refusing to acquiesce in the levying of liquor licenses in Zanzibar on German subjects, in accordance with the Brussels Act, is causing considerable anxiety, and the Government of Zanzibar will probably be compelled to proclaim the total prohibition of the importation of spirits.

PRIDE AND THE GOSPEL.—When men refuse to hear the Gospel from the lips of a gracious but uneducated preacher, they remind us of the Spaniard in South America, who suffered severely from the gout, but refused to be cured by an Indian. "I know," said he, "that he is a famous man, and would certainly cure me: but he is an Indian, and would expect to be treated with attentions which I cannot pay to a man of colour, and therefore I prefer remaining as I am."—Spurgeon.

THE CONDITION OF CHRISTIAN ADVANCEMENT.—The best way to secure Christian conduct is to cultivate communion with Christ. It is better to work at the increase of the central force than at the improvement of the circumferential manifestations of it. Get more of the sap into the branch, and there will be more fruit. Have more of the life of Christ in the soul, and the conduct and the speech will be more Christian.—Dr. Maclaren.

GOD'S RECKONING OF FAITHFUL SERVICE.—When any one is highly profitable to his brethren, and applies, advantageously for their salvation, the gifts which he has received from God, he is said to yield profit or gain to God Himself. So highly does our Heavenly Father value the salvation of men, that whatever contributes to it He chooses to place to his own account. That we may not become weary in well-doing, Christ declares that the labour of those who are faithfully employed in their calling will not be useless.—Calvin.

ABRAHAM; Or, the Obedience of Faith.

With nine original illustrations. Cloth boards, 2s. 6d.

Presentation Edition: Cloth, bevelled boards, gilt edges, 3s. 6d.

"Beautifully illustrated, and so tastefully bound as to be a most acceptable gift-book. But the contents are such that no Christian can rise from their perusal without feeling consciously strengthened of God, and inspired afresh for a godly life. Sunday-school teachers may learn from it how to draw out the spiritual lessons of the Sacred Word."—Sunday School Chronicle.

ISRAEL: A Prince with God. The Story of Jacob Re-told.

With nine original illustrations. Cloth boards, 2s. 6d.

Presentation Edition: Cloth, bevelled boards, gilt edges, 3s. 6d.

"Exceedingly good, not only spiritual, as everything from our brother Mr. Meyer would be, but also thoughtful, fresh, suggestive, and thoroughly practical."—Sword and Trowel.

"Mr. Meyer has great descriptive power. This subject in his hand glows with life, and the scenes and events in the history of his hero pass vividly before you, and are ever being used to force home some important principle."—British Messenger.

JOSEPH: Beloved—Hated—Exalted.

With nine original illustrations. Cloth boards, 2s. 6d.

Presentation Edition: Cloth, bevelled boards, gilt edges, 3s 6d.

"In Mr. Meyer's writings we always find unalloyed pleasure and welcome spiritual stimulus. He is never happier than in his treatment of Scripture characters. Their excellences and their failings are set in glowing light, for winsome example or affectionate warning. The present work is pre-eminently valuable for young men, to whom its chapters are specially addressed."—Cambridgeshire Congregational Magazine.

Mr. Meyer has thoroughly caught 'the spirit and power of Elias,' and he has very fully brought out where the prophet got his fire and fervour. . . . The Life and Light of Men: Expositions of John i.—xii.

Cloth boards, 2s. 6d. Presentation Edition: Cloth, bev. boards, gilt edges, 3s. 6d.

"Mr. Meyer's books are certainly practical. He does not take up space in mere theorising. . . His expositions will be useful to all classes of readers; and especially to young men and women seeking help in the development of spiritual life. The present volume is one of the best that Mr. Meyer has written.—Christian Commonwealth.

Tried by Fire: Expositions of the First Epistle of Peter.

Cloth Boards, 2s. 6d. Presentation Edition: Cloth, bev. boards, gilt edges, 3s. 6d.

"The popularity of Mr. Meyer's Expositions is a good sign of the times. This, on the First Epistle of Peter, is one of the best, and is full of tender Christian wisdom. There are many unobtrusive signs of thought and culture throughout; but the chief charm of the book is its earnest simplicity."—British Weekly.

The Psalms: Notes and Readings.

Demy 8vo size, tinted covers, 1s., cloth limp, 1s. 6d.

Presentation Edition: Cloth, bevelled boards, gilt edges, 2s. 6d.

Special Pocket Edition: Cloth boards, 1s. 6d.; cloth, bevelled boards, gilt edges, 2s.

"A series of pointed, suggestive, and really helpful notes and readings, well qualified to render useful service alike to teacher, preacher, and private student of the Word. The setting and leading point of each Psalm are briefly but clearly given. Those who have not the means or the time to study more comprehensive commentaries will find here a singularly serviceable manual."—Word and Work.

Christian Living: Chapters on the Christian Life.

Cloth boards, 1s.

Presentation Edition: Cloth bevelled boards, gilt edges, 1s. 6d.

"Mr. Meyer writes with all the warmth of one who tastes, handles, and feels the Word of Life. In this book he stretches out a loving hand to his fellows in the Christian course, eager to help them in the pathway of holiness."—Footsteps of Truth.

The Present Tenses of the Blessed Life.

Cloth boards, 1s.

Presentation Edition: Cloth, bevelled boards, gilt edges, 1s. 6d.

"The Author has learnt the secret of living in the will of God, and he is doing his best to teach this secret to others. This is the very book to put into the hands of a humble Christian seeking a higher, calmer, and steadier life."

Irish Congregational Magazine.

The Shepherd Psalm: Meditations on the 23rd Psalm.

Cloth boards, 1s.

Presentation Edition: Cloth, bevelled boards, gilt edges, 1s. 6d.

"Mr. Meyer always displays the force of a vital personality in his expositions of Scripture. In the unfolding of the Shepherd Psalm he tells the story of its influence upon his own heart and life, and indicates subtle beauties which may have escaped the reader's notice. This exposition is the work of a poet; it gives the precious fruit of searching spiritual insight; and cannot fail to bring comfort to many a troubled heart, for it assures us that there is no want to the man who lives under the shepherd-care of God. It is needless to add that the volume is studded with gems of thought."

CASE FOR THE WEEK.

ADVANCED CASE OF MR. JOHN BOYD, KILMARNOCK, N.B.

The following letter from this patient will be interesting:—

"Dear Sir,—I have long been anxious to forward you a testimonial as to the wonderful benefit I received from your treatment. I had been twelve months laid by from work when I first wrote to you. My illness began with a cold and cough, followed by inflammation of the lungs. For this I was blistered repeatedly without effect. I lost flesh, and became exceedingly weak. All the doctors said my lungs were so diseased I should never get any better, and that nothing more could be done for me. Afterwards I saw my late uncle's doctor at Lanark, who also said there was 'no hope for me.' My uncle had read of you in the Christian Herald, and we resolved that your means should be tried; and, by the blessing of God, it has saved me from an early grave. With the first bottle the spitting of fluid blood was stopped, the cough ceased. Then I got stronger every day. I should like this known throughout the world, that any sufferers may, through this, be encouraged to apply to you.—John Boyd, 26, Warwickhill-row, by Kilmarnock, Ayrshire."

TIRETTA BAZAR MISSION, CALCUTTA.

EDWARD S. WENGER is desirous of erecting a PLACE of WORSHIP for 100 persons, as also a SCHOOL for 100 children in connection with this Mission. A central spot in the Chinapaarah is essential. An estimate has been prepared, and it is reckoned that at the very least some 7000 Rupees will be required for the erection of the building. To this will have to be added the cost of land and cost of furnishing, so that at the lowest figure 16,000 Rupees will be required for the work. The amount already subscribed is only 670 Rupees. It is therefore necessary to raise

ABOUT 15,400 RUPEES MORE.

Any contributions towards this sum will be thankfully received and duly acknowledged by Mr. E. S Wenger, 31,1, Chattawalla Lane, Calcutta, or may be sent to Messrs. MORGAN & SCOTT.

Notes and Comments.

NEXT week we purpose giving portrait and sketch of Rev. D. DOIG YOUNG, M.A., Free Church missionary at Main, Transkei Territory, South Africa.

The two Presbyterian congregations of Marylebone and Regent-square have sustained disappointments in their search for pastors. Dr. Stalker, of Glasgow, and Rev. W. J. Macdonald, of Kirkcaldy, have both elected to remain at their present posts.

Dr. Baedeker, who has arrived safely in England once more, spoke briefly on Tuesday at the Aldersgate-street noon prayer-meeting, telling to the praise of God how he had been marvellously preserved amid sickness and danger in Russia. He has many sad stories of suffering amongst the Stundists, the famine-stricken peasants, and the prisoners of Siberia, which he hopes to be able to give at the noon meeting at Aldersgate-street on Tuesday next (10th).

In the discussion in our columns on the Sabbath question we have admitted letters advocating extreme views on both sides. From the point of view of Holy Scripture, the institution is variously estimated by different Christian minds, but there can hardly be two opinions about the Day of Rest being a gift of the highest value from God, and necessary alike to man and the creatures that serve him. On this ground, if on no higher—as a privilege if not as a legal obligation—the institution is one which every Christian will desire to preserve from disregard or violation.

Among the interesting anniversaries of the present week is that of the British Women's Temperance Association. The presence and speech of Lady Henry Somerset, lately returned from America, will give an added inspiration to the gatherings. In an interview with a representative of The Queen Lady Henry speaks hopefully of the position of the Temperance movement in the United States, and of the part that women are playing in the fierce contest with the drink. She states that an English edition of The Union Signal is in contemplation, and that she has a scheme in hand for the founding at Reigate of a "School of Methods" in connection with the Women's Temperance Crusade.

The evidence of experts—men who have devoted their lives to one branch of science or art—is sometimes of great value in matters of fact, and may be sufficient to turn the scale when a verdict would otherwise be uncertain. On the other hand, such evidence needs to be received with great caution and discrimination. The medical experts, who were called to prove that Deeming, the Melbourne murderer, was insane, differed, as experts generally do from each other. Moreover, the judge told them that they were usurping the function of the jury; and Deeming was found guilty and condemned to death.

In the course of a discussion on ministerial itinerancy, in The Liverpool Mercury, a correspondent indicates inferior preaching as one cause of empty places of worship. He says:—

> The occupant of the pew nowadays is too well read to be edified by any moral essay delivered from the pulpit, and the lifelessness of the whole service leads him to think he can spend the time more profitably at home amongst his books or in the study of nature in his walks abroad. When it is not simply a moral essay, it is a disquisition upon the latest forms of scepticism, or a proclamation of advanced thought equally perilous to the spiritual life of the hearer.
> In short, the modern Wesleyan sermon is anything but the earnest declaration of the word of truth which won such splendid triumphs in the past; and cold and lifeless utterances devoid of the slightest symptom of emotion are never likely to quicken the pulse or warm the heart of a single hearer. Unless our ministers "repent and do their first works," it is useless to expect any improvement from a mere change in the time of the itinerancy or from giving the Conference a free hand.

This remonstrance deserves to be heeded throughout the entire Church of Christ, for no section can claim freedom from the fault exposed. No mere change in method will render effective for lasting good preaching that is not of the apostolic type, having Christ for its centre and the simple Gospel for its circumference.

A few days since an artist was indicted for the exhibition of an indecent painting. Several artists and a lady art-critic declared that it was artistic and not obscene, and the magistrate said that, though he had regarded the picture as subject to legal proceedings as an offence against good morals, he did not believe, after the evidence of these artistic experts, that any jury would convict, and therefore dismissed the case. Could there be a more lame and impotent conclusion? It is an insult to juries to conclude that they are either so demoralised that they cannot distinguish decency from obscenity, or that they are so demented as to allow interested persons to persuade them that black is white.

Mr. Henry Varley has issued another, more detailed, appeal to the Queen and Parliament of England with regard to the Chinese Coolie Immigration Traffic, of which Singapore is the centre. He says:—

> The Imperial Government allows Singapore to be made the receiving house of at least one hundred and sixty thousand Chinese coolies every year; these imported coolies are deprived of their liberty in Singapore, and are herded together like droves of human cattle. They are exported at the will of the "slave-dealing agents" into conditions of enforced labour, where for years they are, to all intents and purposes, slaves and in bondage....Beyond the ten or fifteen shillings which the coolie owes for his short passage from China, the agent has no just claim against him. Why should the Imperial power of England be used to protect this modern villany?
> This traffic has been established more than thirty years, and has so seared the conscience of the Colonial authorities, that the year 1891 saw more than twelve hundred opium dens in full blast in Singapore itself. These houses, in which tens of thousands of the Chinese are demoralised and enslaved, have been licensed by the Colonial Government to carry on this degrading social traffic. The effects cannot be exaggerated. So abnormal and rapid has been the growth and spread of this Imperial opium trade, that three-fourths of the total revenue of Singapore for the year 1890 was obtained from the licence and sale of the deadly drug.

Some statements in Mr. Varley's former protest were called in question, but he now explains himself in greater detail, and copies of his fearful indictment may be had by addressing him at 14, Paternoster-row, E.C.

By way of blinding the eyes of the people of England to the enormity of the opium iniquity in India, Satan has of late been excusing the traffic by declaring the habit a necessity rather than a vice in certain malarial regions. Dr. Morison, of Rampore Baulcah, Bengal, a medical missionary of large experience, has exposed the misrepresentation. From his statement, referred to in Evangelical Christendom, we take the following sentences:—

> The prevalence of the opium habit in Orissa, Assam, and the Punjaub has no relation to the malarial climates of those districts; the rational explanation lies in the fact that these districts are opium cultivating centres, and have thus inherited the taste of opium-eating.
> I have treated from six to ten thousand patients annually during the last fifteen years, and although eighty per cent. suffered from malarial diseases I never yet heard one native hint that opium prevented fever. On the contrary, the opium-eaters whom I knew, and who came to me for fever mixtures, were peculiarly prone to fever and visceral derangements, for which the most valuable remedy is quinine, or the Government cinchona febrifuge.

The fact that over five thousand members of the medical profession have declared the opium habit to be morally and physically debasing, is above all computation more weighty than individual declarations to the contrary on the part of those engaged in regulating the traffic, or associated with the Government which is responsible for the fearful wrong.

According to reliable information that has reached us, the Church of England Army Chaplains appear to be bestirring themselves to prohibit and put down all outside evangelistic effort; and the Chaplain-General appears to be at the head of this new activity. Miss Robinson's meetings in barracks at Portsmouth have been forbidden, at the request of the chaplain. Her ladies have been refused permission to visit the hospital at Netley; as we understand, this was done by desire of the chaplains. A large iron room has been put up on Government land just at the back of the Institute, as a "Soldiers' Room," for the use of the chaplains, where they have teas, concerts, reading-room, &c., and the men are told not to go to the Soldiers' Institute.

The chaplains are also trying to stop the distribution of tracts in barracks. Letters from soldiers in all parts tell of the chaplains (with some bright exceptions) trying to stop spiritual work; if they visit hospital it is only to take comic and general newspapers round. Soldiers in general are said to regard official chaplains as shams; certainly it would be no loss if such offices were all abolished and the men allowed to attend any place of worship they choose. Evidence as to the chaplains' uselessness would come in from all sides if the men dared to speak out. This applies equally to Naval chaplains—with bright exceptions, as we have said.

During the past six months the conduct of the Chaplain General has been the subject of animadversion in Truth, in last week's issue of which we find the following:—

> There exists at the present moment among the greater number of the senior chaplains, and amongst all who are not of Dr. Edghill's clerical party, what is little less than a reign of terror. Of this I have personally had the most ample proof; and the truth about the Chaplain-General will never be fully ascertained by any tribunal which does not take that fact into consideration, and shape its procedure accordingly.

Truth renders weekly service of a very useful kind by showing up cruelly inadequate sentences by magistrates for brutal assaults on women, children, and dumb creatures; and savage punishments inflicted for petty thefts. For example:

> At the Manchester Police-court a ruffian gets off with a fine of 21s. for a series of dastardly assaults on his step-daughter, who appeared in court bearing evidence of having sustained serious injury; while, at the City Sessions, a man convicted of stealing 1s. 2d. gets three years' penal servitude and three years' police supervision.

The same periodical states that Walter Austin, of London Cottage Mission notoriety, is now carrying on business as an Emigration or Employment Agent, under the style of "W. Smith," in High Holborn; and warns intending emigrants and their friends against having any dealings with the said Austin, alias Smith, and above all, against entrusting him with money or money's worth.

The question of the housing of the poor has of late been permitted to drift almost entirely out of consideration. Day by day the evils which result from the miserable condition of things in most of our large cities and towns are multiplying and becoming more and more potent for evil. Not long ago, in reference to certain districts in London, Earl Compton, who had personally visited the localities, said:—

> The land is completely covered with a network of houses, where will be found thousands of our poor packed closely together, and families existing—it cannot be termed living—eating and sleeping in one small, dark room. I will leave to the imagination a birth or death under such circumstances. Only the other day I was told of a room with a dead child on a heap of rags in one corner, several living children huddled together in another, and the wretched mother momentarily expecting her confinement on a dirty mattress in another.

How long shall this state of things in a Christian country be permitted to continue?

The following opinion of the Jesuits appears in a recently-published story from the pen of a writer who, if not himself a Roman Catholic, is at any rate closely related to a well-known Roman Catholic family. For that reason, in addition to its being the outspoken expression of a clever observer, it is very noteworthy:—

A true Jesuit must have no nature of his own and no individuality. He is simply a machine, with likes and dislikes, conscience and soul subject to the will of the next in authority; whose mind is also under the arbitrary control of his superior; and so on to the top. If at the head there were God it would be well, but man is there, and consequently the whole Society is a gigantic mistake. To be a sincere member of it a man must be a half-witted fool, a religious fanatic, or a rogue for whom no duplicity is too scurrilous, even though it amounts to blasphemy.

The Unjust Steward.

The difficulties felt in the interpretation of this parable (Luke xvi. 1-18) may be considerably lessened, if not wholly removed, by distinguishing between the explanation of the parable—which our Lord does not give, though in verses 15-18 He gives us strong hints as to what it is—and the application, which He makes of one feature in it to his own disciples, but that only in a passing way.

By not thus distinguishing between the main drift and scope of the parable and what is, after all, but a side issue, our Lord's application, contained in the words (verse 9): "And I say unto you, Make to yourselves friends of the mammon of unrighteousness," &c., is supposed to convey his explanation of the parable itself, and we then have to face the serious difficulty of a practical lesson intended for his disciples, as to their use of money being set forth in a parable, the framework of which is one mass of dishonesty and unscrupulous shrewdness of the most worldly type. In fact, as Dean Alford well remarks: "The whole parabolic machinery is from the standing-point of the children of this world."

The true explanation, however, seems to be that suggested by the context (see ch. xv.), and confirmed by our Lord's words to the Pharisees who had heard the parable (14-18). The previous chapter had contained the three parables of the lost sheep, the lost coin, and the lost son, all intended to meet the cavil of the Pharisees and the Scribes—"This man receiveth sinners, and eateth with them." In the last of these, under the figure of the elder brother, our Lord had exposed the ungracious conduct of the Pharisees in so cavilling at the very object which had brought Him into the world (1 Tim. i. 15), but in doing so He seemed to have endorsed their claim to the elder brother's position, which, after all, none but Himself could rightly claim—"Neither transgressed I at any time thy commandment;" so, to explain that this concession was only for the sake of argument—meeting them on their own ground, so to speak—our Lord in the next parable shows the real state of the case; how that they, as the teachers of the Jewish people, to whom had been entrusted the oracles of God (Rom. iii. 2), were but dishonest stewards, about to be dismissed from a post which they had disgraced; and then He further exposes the hollowness of their self justification, by showing that this was only done by their lowering the standard of God's requirements, as set forth in his law, to meet their own fancied attainments. The debtor is told that half his due will be sufficient.

He, moreover, alludes to one flagrant case—which might almost be called a national scandal—that which, for his faithful protest against it, had cost John the Baptist his head; the notorious adultery of Herod with his brother Philip's wife—adultery of a double character (as verse 18 shows), seeing that Josephus tells us that Philip was living. This reference to Herod's case was seen (Dean Alford says) "as early as Tertullian," who "remarked that an allusion was meant here to the adultery of Herod Antipas with his brother Philip's wife, which the Pharisees had tacitly sanctioned, thus allowing an open breach of that law which Christ came to fulfil." Thus our Lord's words (verse 17), "It is easier for heaven and earth to pass than one tittle of the law to fail," reflect back upon the Parable of the Unjust Steward a light which gives us its real explanation.

As to the application which He makes in passing, "And I say unto you make to yourselves friends of the mammon of unrighteousness," when thus viewed as only a side issue, the difficulty disappears which arises from regarding it as the main lesson of the parable. This dishonest conduct of the Unjust Steward may at least suggest to Christ's disciples that it would be well for them to cultivate, by means of the unrighteous mammon of wealth which they may have entrusted to them for a time, the friendship of those with whom they are to spend eternity; but this only by the way. The Pharisees, who heard it all, provoked by their derision those closing words of our Lord (15-18), which ought never to have been separated, as they often are, from the Parable of the Unjust Steward, seeing that they convey a strong hint—to say the least—as to its true explanation and meaning.

Henry E. Brooke.

The May Meetings.

The first day of May is viewed by European rulers and politicians much as Job did the day of his birth. They are inclined to say, Let that day be darkness, neither let the light shine on it. They anticipate it with dread, hold their breath whilst it lasts, and feel its ill-effects long after the spring flowers have faded. The cause is to be found in the comparatively recent practice of setting apart that day for labour demonstrations. This has been taken advantage of by Anarchists and Socialists, who swarm in all the large cities of the Continent, as an opportunity of showing their strength, and striking terror into the hearts of peaceable and well-disposed citizens. So great is the dread of what may be the result when so many combustible materials are heaped together, that where the demonstrations are not absolutely prohibited, the most stringent precautionary measures are taken to restrict the conflagration if it should break out, or to stamp it out as soon as possible.

We, too, have our labour demonstrations. The first of May has witnessed a remarkable demonstration in London in favour of the Eight Hours Movement. We have no desire to enter on the discussion of the many complicated and delicate problems which are involved in this proposal to set up a uniform working-day for all our industries; but we do not hesitate, in passing, to express our opinion that, instead of limiting the aggregate results of industry, it would be much wiser to increase the capacity of consumption, by waging an uncompromising warfare against the waste of the national revenues in drink and tobacco. If these were curtailed, and, much more so, if they were abolished, there would be an ample demand for all the output of our manufactures, and the employment of all able-bodied and industrious mechanics.

But the comparative unconcern with which England viewed the preparations for that demonstration before it arrived, and the order with which it passed off, are in striking contrast to the suspense and alarm and the stormy scenes on the other side of "the silver streak." The causes are not far to seek. Politicians, of course, allege that they are to be found in our representative system, by which the working-classes are able to make their voices heard, and their demands known in Parliament. And there is no doubt force and truth in the statement.

But it is not all the truth. There are other nations in Europe, which claim and exercise the right of free speech and of free Parliamentary institutions, which do not enjoy that immunity from uneasiness which is so marked a characteristic of our national life. In our judgment the true reason is to be sought lower down, in the beneficial influence which is being exerted on all classes of society by the Christian religion. The carcase is kept from putrefaction by the salt. The disease does not spread because the antiseptic is so widely diffused.

It is a remarkable and interesting coincidence that the month chosen for the manifestation of those forces which are striving to upheave society, is the month selected for the meetings of those great religious societies which are doing more than politicians care to admit, to compact and bind together all classes of our State. Whenever a man becomes a Christian, he ceases to be an Anarchist. The former motto, Yours shall be mine, is exchanged for the new and better one, Mine shall be yours. And even those who have legitimate grievances no longer resort to the ungodly measures of riot, wreckage, plunder, and murder, but plead their case by argument and representation, and a noble patience. Christianity has ever been the nurse of the sentiments which focus in the home and the fatherland. God, home, and my neighbour, are words which are linked together in imperishable bonds.

Throughout this month Exeter Hall will be occupied by immense assemblies, certainly once, and oftener twice, each day. Eloquent speeches will be delivered on the behalf of missions of every description, intended for every class in the community and for every country on the face of the globe. Dukes and earls, bishops and deans, Church-people and Nonconformists, will elbow each other on the stairs and pour to and fro through the Strand. The country will send up its contingents in thousands, and even London, for the most part too preoccupied to awake to anything beyond their own small concerns, will be swept into the general current.

In certain quarters it is the fashion to sneer at Exeter Hall. We have heard of the Exeter Hall conscience, and the Exeter Hall bray. Men generally sneer at that which, in their heart, they dread as much as they dislike it. And time-serving politicians, the mere creatures of expediency and of an ephemeral popularity, have had plenty of cause to dread the influence of Evangelical Christianity, which for more than fifty years has been associated with Exeter Hall. But, in addition to all this, we repeat our honest conviction that the stability of our throne, the strength and elasticity of our constitution, the firmness of our national life, are very largely due to those earnest, eager, and generous activities which find an expression for themselves once a year on that historic platform.

What stories those walls could utter if they could but speak! What noble voices have rung out their challenge against vice and sin, against the slave-trader and the dram-distiller! What tides of holy enthusiasm have risen, and swelled, and broken in thunderous applause! What resolutions have been formed, what life-purposes made, what pledges given, what vast sums promised, and raised! We can almost hear again the clank of those fetters, fresh from the gangrened hands of the slave that Knibb flung down on those boards, the symptom of accomplished emancipation, and the symbol of the shattering of all the manacles of evil by the hand of Christ. And we trust that Exeter Hall may not cease to be frequented by its earnest crowds, as May comes round, until that chorus which has so often made it ring again be fulfilled, "the kingdoms of this world have become the kingdoms of our God and of his Christ, and He shall reign for ever."

LIVERPOOL.—An interesting gathering met at "Shalom" House on Tuesday 26, to consider the best methods of reaching our postmen, police, railway-men, &c., in order to win them for Christ; also to bid farewell to a party of missionaries sailing for Africa. In the reports and addresses every one present, both afternoon and evening, seemed to receive a special message of strength. Rev. T. L. Johnson, Secretary of the African Mission, will remain in England until after the rainy season on account of his health; his address will be, "Shalom" House Missionary Training Home, 134, Upper Parliament street, Liverpool.

Moses, the Man of God.

Rev. F. B. MEYER, B.A., Regent's-park Chapel.

THE PSALM OF THE WANDERINGS.

PSALM XC.

THERE is no good reason to doubt the inscription which heads this Psalm, and informs us that it was written by Moses, the man of God. This has been the opinion of almost every scholar from Jerome to Hengstenberg. And if so, it is one of the oldest poems in the world, and was already venerable with age when David lived and Homer sang.

Moses appears to have composed it in the wilderness, for all the imagery is borrowed from the familiar objects of the desert pilgrimage. The scorched and withered grass, whose brief existence was limited to a single day; the mountain flood, which leaps swiftly and furiously down the mountain side, to be soon lost in the sand; the tale told by the camp fires; the sentries' watch in the brief, still Eastern night; the flight of the night-bird at the dawn—each exquisite in its beauty, but all so different from the gorgeous imagery of the Song of Solomon, with its references to gardens and lakes, to flowers and fruits.

The inner evidence of the Psalm points unmistakably to the time when the soul of the great lawgiver poured itself out in this exquisite ode. It must have been towards the close of the desert wanderings. For thirty-eight years the camp had been moving monotonously to and fro. We have few records of its history, only a list of the names of the halting places. But death had been busily at work. One by one those who had come out of Egypt had passed away. At the rate of five and six a day they had been carried to their lonely graves; their carcases had fallen in the wilderness, and new faces and figures replaced them throughout the camp. How could a poem composed under such circumstances be otherwise than pensive!

Throughout this Psalm two threads are twisted, the one sombre with gloom, the other bright with golden light. We will not dwell on the former. There is plenty of that already in the lives of most of us. Suffice it to say that to Moses, the plaintive chord of sorrow appears to have been composed of three notes—the rapid flight of the years, the anger of God incurred by sin, and the afflictions which beset human life. But opposite to these the aged lawgiver gives three thoughts, in which he rested his soul. On these we will think and speak — God; His gladness-making mercy; Work, a co-operation between God and man.

I. GOD.—What great thoughts Moses had of God. First as Creator.—The opening verses are worthy of the brain and pen to which, instrumentally, we owe the first chapter of Genesis. To God he ascribes the birth of the mountains, which in their grandest aspects and in magnificent confusion were heaped in that Sinaitic peninsula. To God also he ascribes the moulding touch which shaped the universe of matter, and gave form to the earth. What though seas and rivers, glacier action and earthquake, were his graving tools, yet the maker and former of all things was God. There is almost an anticipation, if not the precise reflection and repetition, of the stately hymn of heaven, "Thou hast created all things, and for thy pleasure they are and were created."

Next as Eternal.—He is not only God, El, the strong. He is LORD, Jehovah, the I AM. And he labours hard to give us some true conception of his everlastingness. He speaks of the eighty years of human life as being, in comparison with it, short and soon; much in the same way as we should describe the duration of an insect's life, which passes through all the stages of existence from youth to age, between dawn and sunset, in comparison with the life of man. He recites the generations of mankind, and describes their passing in to God like guests into a hostelry, their life to his being brief and transitory as a night-sojourn when compared with the permanence of the building in which it is spent. He goes back through the long process of creation, and says that God comprehends it in the extent of his being as a very little thing. He takes a thousand years, as a standard of comparison, and says that they are as a drop which hangs for a moment on the tip of the branch or leaf, gleaming in the sunlight, and then falls into the rushing river beneath, which silently absorbs millenniums. The glance of yesterday, the flash of a thought, the heaving of a sigh, the rush of a winter flood, the lifetime of a flower, the sleep of the weary warrior who seems hardly to have closed his eyes ere summoned to do his duty, on guard or in the trench.

But the thought that helps us most is the conception of God as the dwelling-place, the asylum, the home of the soul. Moses needed it, if ever a man did. And from the murmurings and chidings, the fret and chafe of the people, he was constantly entering into the very nature of God, as a man retreats from the war and storm, the criticism and envy of the world, into the one fond circle where he is shielded and safe by the encirclement of warm and loyal hearts. In the secret of that pavilion he was hidden from the pride of man, and kept secretly from the strife of tongues.

Everywhere around us, as around Moses, there is this perpetual conflict and irritation, fault-finding and quarrelling, petty questionings and continual criticism, like the swarms of flies that sting the cattle almost to madness on the hot summer days. And we need to learn how to retreat into the cool depths of the Divine nature, wandering through room after room, exploring its hidden places, and admiring its furniture and stores, as we have done many a time when going through some splendid country mansion—with this difference, that in that case we were hurried through by an attendant, whilst in the case of God we have entered to go no more out for ever. We are perpetually retreating from men and their strife and pride into dwelling-places, as men run from the excitement and storm of the streets into shelter. There are the dwelling-places of literature: a man gets away to bury himself in his books; of business: a man lives inside a dwelling-place, whose walls are sovereigns and its windows bank-notes; of pleasure, in which a man builds a frail protection against heartache and sorrow by woven trellis-work, up which flowers are trailed—it is but a summer-house at the best. Some men betake themselves to work; and when they are supposed to be only devoted and consecrated, are really living outside themselves in an enclosure from thoughts they would fain escape.

But perhaps the noblest form of dwelling-place, and the one most akin to Moses' meaning, is that of human friendship. As little children, when taken among strangers, we looked all around for mother, and if only she were there we rushed to her, and hid in her, covering our face, but feeling safe, and able presently to look out on the guests as from a window in a house on a crowd. Or, in later life, it has been our lot to be misrepresented and misunderstood by all except by one man of noblest fashion. And it has seemed as if we were almost indifferent to all beside, so long as he is pleased and satisfied. "Let the cruel winds of slander come," we have cried, "and reproach, and hate; he understands and appreciates me; judged by his standard, I am true; tested by his opinion, I am right against a world in arms I am content to abide in his approval and be at peace." Or, in other circumstances still, you have learnt to love, with all your heart and soul, so that your existence seems almost to have passed into that of another, and to be safe, restful, almost careless of all else, so long as that house stands unsmitten by the tempest which whirls around.

All these are dwelling-places to which souls betake themselves, destined, alas! all of them, to perish, except that human love which, in so far as it is threaded with the Divine, partakes of the nature of God Himself, and is eternal. But none of them can give to the soul such blessed rest as to be able to say to God, "Thou, O Lord, art my Rock, and my fortress, my shield, and my high tower." Then it happens to the soul, as it is said to have been at the time of the birth of Christ, when the temple of war was shut, and peace spread through the world:

> No war, or battle sound
> Was heard the world around.
> The idle spear and shield were hung up high;
> The hooked chariot stood
> Unstained with hostile blood.
> The trumpet spake not to the armed throng;
> And kings sate still with awful eye,
> As if they surely knew their sovereign Lord was nigh.

It was thus that the Apostles made their dwelling-place in the nature of their Lord. What mattered to them the taunt, the sneer, the averted look, the loss of all things. In that bosom they hid, and were comforted, and found the Man to be a hiding-place from the wind, a covert from the tempest, and as the shadow of a great rock in a weary land. Their life was hid with Christ in God.

So our blessed Lord lived in God his Father. From the debates of the synagogues, the murmurs of the people, the misunderstandings and rivalries of his disciples, the clamorous demands of the sick, which accompanied his gentle spirit through his earthly life till the dark dread agony of his death, He lived outside it all, because He lived inside God. He enjoyed that one thing which the Psalmist desired of the Lord and sought after. He dwelt in the house of the Lord all the days of his life, beholding the beauty of the Lord, and inquiring in his temple. Just as a child looks out on a mob in the streets from the security of the strong castellated dwelling, where it sits on its father's knee, so did Jesus look out on the malice and hatred of men from his rest in the very heart of God. "He that sent me is with me, the Father hath not left me alone, for I do always those things that please Him." "It was as if men flung water at the stars and tried to put them out, and the stars shone on calmly and safely, and took no notice of their persecutors, except to give them light."

This is the true life, which, thank God, is within the reach of us all. Put God between yourself and men with their strife, or sorrow with its fret and care, chafing like the perpetual wash of the wave, which retreats only to return. Ask what God says of you. Measure yourself only by his standards. Seek only his well-done. "Dwell deep," was the Prophet's advice to Edom, counselling the people to go into the fastnesses of their rocky homes, from the calamity of the Assyrian host; and such is true advice to those who, Moses-like, have seen generations of helpers fall at their side, who have buried Miriam and Aaron and Hobab and many more, who have still to bear with the murmurings of the people, and to encounter the arms of Moab and Amalek, together with the wiles of Balaam. Dwell deep in God. And because thou shalt have made the Lord, even the Most High, thy habitation, there shall no evil befall thee, neither shall any plague come nigh thy dwelling. As the cathedral of Cologne rears itself in incomparable majesty beyond the frailer houses around, offering a permanence which storms and time cannot impair, so does God rear Himself as our all-sufficient dwelling-place amid the passage of creation, of generations, and of centuries.

II. GLADNESS-MAKING MERCY.—As Moses reviewed the desert pilgrimage it seemed one long line of transgression, each halting-place marked by its special graves, the monuments of some sad outbreak. It was impossible for the people to sin and suffer without his taking it grievously to heart, and for many years now he had seen evil. His sky had been covered by a monotony of cloud, with a very few streaks of light, and it seemed as if he could no longer bear the oppressive weight of unrelieved calamity. There are limits beyond which the meekest and most patient natures cannot go, and for Moses the limit of endurance was nearly reached.

He pined for gladness; he knew that there was gladness in the heart of the blessed God, enough to make him glad, and not him alone but all who were weary and heavy laden throughout the precincts of the camp; and having confessed their sins he now turned to God his exceeding joy and said, "Make us glad." And his demand for gladness was not a small one. He asked that it might be according to the days in which they had been afflicted and the years in which they had seen evil. It was a great request, but not unreasonable, for days and years of sorrow often give us capacity for receiving blessing. They cast the seeds of joy into our lives; so that, in a very true sense, it may be said, Light is sown for the sorrowful, and gladness for the broken in heart.

Let us, too, ask Him to put gladness into our hearts. Let us entreat that sorrow and sighing may flee away, and that we may obtain gladness and joy. Let us dare to trust Him for joy as we have done for discipline. Let us believe that it will honour and please Him if we dare to lay claim to blessedness, such as He alone can give, and when He gives does so with full measure, pressed down, and running over.

The plea must be made to his mercy. We have no claim on any other attribute of God. Behind us are so many murmurings, so many Meribbaals, where we have chidden with God; so many Kibroth-hataavahs, where we have brought judgment on ourselves by our sinful indulgence; that we have long ago forfeited all consideration from Him on the score of justice, and can only plead with Him for that mercy which is over all his works.

And beyond that we must ask Him to satisfy us. We have sought satisfaction in all beside: in health and flow of spirits, in success and friendship, in books and affairs; but we have found it nowhere, and we shall never find it unless in Himself. The mercy of God satisfies the conscience, which no longer trembles beneath a sense of unpardonable sin; it satisfies the intellect which finds in its method a theme for ever worthy of its contemplation; it satisfies the affections which have at last found that in which they can rest. The brook of God's mercy is an unfailing spring, which for ever banishes the thirst of those that drink its pellucid waters.

Why not drink of them? The days of our mortal life are too brief to be filled by any but the most blissful gladness to be obtained on this side the grave. Ask, especially if you are young, to be satisfied in the morning with God's mercy, that the evil days may never come, or the years draw nigh in which you shall say, I have no pleasure in them, but that you may be glad and rejoice all your days. Let us plead that promise, "They shall be abundantly satisfied with the fatness of thy house; and thou shalt make them drink of the river of thy pleasures."

III. Work, or Co-operation between God and Man.—Moses' complaint about the shortness of life indicates that he was no idler. Life seems long enough to those whose hours carry with them no precious freightage of labour. But this was not his case. Brain and heart and hands were teeming with earnest endeavours for the people whom he loved. The days were not long enough for all he had to do, and therefore life seemed to pass so quickly through his hands.

Amid all that made him sad, he found solace in the thought that what he did would last. The leaves fall, but each, ere it finds a grave in the damp autumn soil, has done something to the tree that bore it, which will be a permanent gain for summers yet unborn. The preacher dies, but his words have furnished impulses to souls which have become part of their texture, and will be part for ever. The workman finds a nameless grave beneath the shadow of the great unfinished minster, but the fabric rises still, and will rise; his work will be part of it for ever, a joy and beauty for coming generations. This is the hope of the saint, that he has been permitted to insert some priceless stones in the city of God, which shall flash there in the jasper light of eternity.

But after all our work in itself is not sufficient to resist the disintegrating forces of time, which, more than all else, tries and tests its quality. And, therefore, we need to ask that God's work may become manifest through ours. In my work let thine appear; through my weak endeavours may that hand achieve which made the worlds and built cosmos out of chaos. "Let thy work appear."

And in asking that God's work may appear, we make a request which involves his glory. The one cannot appear without the other, so that in all coming time children and children's children may behold it, and as that glory shines upon their faces it must transform and transfigure them so that the beauty of the Lord our God will be upon them.

They who behold the beauty of the Lord as they inquire in his temple are they who beholding are changed into the same image from glory to glory as by the Lord the Spirit; and the beauty of the Lord is upon them, as the light of the sun on the field of nature.

Long ere now each of these desires has been realised, the heart of the faithful servant has been filled with gladness, and satisfied with mercy; and the beauty of his God has passed on to his face, and irradiated his existence for ever.

A NEGLECTED PEOPLE.

No direct missionary work has been carried on among the Parsees, though there does not exist a nation in India which is so fully prepared for the Gospel. They are greatly advanced in civilisation, education, and all branches of commerce and industry. The majority of them do not believe to any great extent in their own creed, propagated by the great reformer, Zoroaster, several centuries before Christ—as is always the case with an enlightened people when they become alive to the fact of one doctrine of their faith being contradictory to another.

Their religious books are a mass of confusion. One teaches Monotheism, others Dualism, while in some cases even Polytheism is inculcated. They cannot be characterised as idolatrous as they do not literally worship idols. They do not believe in original sin, but hold the doctrines of purgatory and salvation by good works, and therefore give away large sums of money in charity. It has of late years been observed that they are losing the high tone of morality for which they formerly were so conspicuous, and of which they once made their proud boast. God has no place in their hearts and minds.

I have often been assured by Parsees that, though they observe the ordinances and ceremonies of their religion, they do not really believe in their creed. Some believe in Christ, but have no courage to come out, fearing persecution. It pains me to state that the Gospel is not preached to this people. There is a Parsee convert who speaks in the open air on the esplanade in a general way in three or four languages, but as a rule the people do not care to listen to street preaching. There are many mission schools, but they are but little used by the Parsees, who have their own well-conducted educational institutions. Not that I would speak in any way disparagingly of the mission schools; I was myself in the Robert Money Institution for a short period after my conversion, and I know how much it has helped to build me up in the Christian faith. I feel sure that the seeds that are there sown in the hearts of young Hindoos will in God's own time take root, and bring forth fruit to his glory.

How can the Parsees be reached? In my humble opinion, the only way is by giving them lectures on religious subjects, by inviting them to individual conversation on such subjects, and by social intercourse. I have heard that this plan has proved successful with the educated Hindoos of Northern India by the Oxford University Mission. For this work we want an English University graduate of good mental, but, above all, of high spiritual qualifications, and of kind and loving manners. Is there no one in Christian England who will volunteer to tell the Saviour's love to this great people? I have read of many volunteers going to Africa, and I pray that God may lay it upon some heart to come to Bombay specially for this people. I am sure He will reward the worker. His work will be greatly blessed, and he will rejoice to see many souls at the feet of Jesus.

SUMMER WORK.—Two of Dr. Grattan Guinness' students at Cliff College, would be glad to undertake Christian and evangelistic work during the three months' vacation from July 1 to October 1. Communications may be addressed, Mr. C. Pittiman, Hulme Cliff College, Curbar, near Sheffield.

THE GREAT ASSEMBLY HALL.

On a Sunday night recently, as some Americ friends sat upon the platform of the G Assembly Hall, they were led to exclaim that i was worth while crossing the Atlantic to see suc a sight. We know of no other such gathering thousands of eager listeners; faces upturned wit earnest intent drinking in every word that fall from the preacher's lips. It is a surprise to a who visit Mr. Charrington's work to find th continued unflagging interest manifested by th East-end poor in the preaching of the Gospel i that great hall. Here is a proof that there is n need for sensational efforts to get the commo people under the sound of the truth of God. Th whole service is quiet and reverential.

What is the secret of the success? It is to b found, without doubt, in the earnestness of thos who carry on the work, and the decided an simple method of proclaiming the Gospel of Jesu Christ. The last month has been a time o special blessing. An old friend, and one muc esteemed and liked by the people in Eas London, Mr. Joseph Clarke, has been conductin a Mission nightly. His earnest, searching dis courses have been manifestly blessed of God i the salvation of many. The last Sunday night when he gave the very interesting story of hi own conversion, the great hall, which accommo dates five thousand persons, was packed, man having to stand both on the ground-floor and i the top gallery.

Some very interesting cases might be recorde of the way in which the Lord has used M Clarke during this visit. Among other case was one of a professional thief, who was com pletely broken down under the preaching, an afterwards sought out Mr. Clarke in great dis tress of mind. He at last decided for Chris and the change it made was wonderful. As h said afterwards, one evening, looking a new ma both in body and soul, "It is the happiest day have ever spent in my life, and the last few day have been such a change to me I can hardl make it out. Thank God! by his grace, I hav been enabled to live a day without putting m hands into other people's pockets."

Another striking case is that of a ship's mat who had been drinking, and found himself in th East-end of London. How he came there he di not know. He was far away from his home. H said one night: "Ah, Mr. Clarke did hit m straight home, and it went to my heart. My con version is marvellous; it must be all of God an his leading, or why should I be here."

It was most encouraging to see the peopl come forward on the last evening, and bid th preacher good-bye. There was many a "Go bless you;" and not a few shed tears of joy a their new-found peace.

ANCIENT EGYPT.

Much has been written on the land of th Pharaohs, but to many it is still the home of myster and few have any clear idea of the condition of li and the habits and homes of the people in the da when the Israelites groaned under bondage. In th great Cyclorama of Ancient Egypt, now exhibited Niagara Hall, Westminster, the artist, Mr. E. Be ninger, who has spent years on the banks of th Nile, brings ancient Egyptian life vividly before th spectator. The long-buried Memphis is depicted it is supposed to have appeared at the time of th Exodus. The palaces, temples, villas, and humb homes of the people; the markets, gardens, an tombs; with the sphinx, obelisks, and pyramids, a shown in wonderful tone and colouring. Beyond the blue Nile, with the Mokkatam range of mou tains. The scenes depicted are full of deep interes and include the Pharaoh of the Exodus with h queen, the people lamenting their dead on the mor ing after the first-born of Egypt had been smitte and the liberated Israelites hastening out of the ci gates. It is a marvellously conceived and ab executed lesson in Bible history, by which all ma profit. Sunday-school teachers would do well avail themselves of the special terms offered behalf of their scholars. Informative lectures a given at intervals by Mr. T. Hunter Boyd.

"THE KING'S DAUGHTERS."—Under this ti a letter has been issued, setting forth the sorrows the suffering poor in Bethnal-green, and appeali to young women engaged in business and shops become subscribers of two shillings per annum support a bed in the women's ward of the Bethn green Medical Mission Hospital. The Late Mr. G. W. Brooke.

Letters have been received conveying details the death of Mr. G. Wilmot Brooke. It urred on March 5th, at Lokoja, on the Upper ger. He was taken ill on Feb. 29th, the day which the Rev. H. Dobinson left him at the se of a visit of nine days, to return to his ation, Onitsha, lower down the river. It had en a happy season of spiritual refreshing to em both. Mr. Dobinson administered the rd's Supper to the Church at Lokoja, and o to that at Gbebe on the other side of the er, whither he had been accompanied by Mr. ooke, to examine some candidates for baptism, e of whom Mr. Dobinson baptized. On his end's departure Mr. Brooke was about to start a five months' journey into the interior to each the Gospel, accompanied by Mr. J. J. illiams, the senior native agent. This expedi- n had been carefully planned, and had been mmended to God in prayer at a meeting of e church members.

In a letter to his wife, in which he gives in tail the plan of the journey, Mr. Brooke adds ese now remarkable words, "You may see at man proposes, and later on what God may pose." During his illness he seems to have en somewhat troubled by the thought of the lure of this plan, and he expressed to Mr. illiams how mysterious it appeared that when- er he was preparing to advance the work into e interior God should permit sickness and other ings to prevent it. To this his faithful and voted African friend replied, "It might be the il of God to make him plough and sow, and other to water and reap," whereupon, added r. Williams, "he smiled delightfully and nked me for the advice. I then knelt down d prayed. He followed in the most ardent irit, full of re ignation, and repeated a long ece of poetry with 'He knows' and 'Only one p.'" This is easily identified by those who ew him as being a hymn which was a favourite his, 'I know not what awaits me" (377 in hkey's collection), which he had written in s Bible. The second verse is that referred to—e step I see before me; 'tis all I need to see;

e light of heaven more brightly shines when earth's illusions flee,
d sweetly through the silence comes his loving "Follow me."
Where He may lead I follow, my trust in Him repose,
And every hour in perfect peace, I'll sing, "He knows, He knows."

Mr. Williams adds:—"God alone knows how ppy I was under this glorious picture of a ristian brother homeward bound. My face as bedewed with tears of joy. When I arose m my knees I thanked God and took courage at death through Christ had no power over e believer. After this he asked me to come d sit nearer to him, and took my hand, and ying his own upon it, said, 'What a kind iend you are! May God bless you.'"

Mr. Williams also records a very beautiful and othing prayer which he uttered for his rela- es at home, and for his co-workers at Lokoja d on the Niger, and for the work of God in at district. For this he had so provided that r. Dobinson writes: "He had so arranged the okoja ordinary mission work that his death will no way cause any collapse to occur."

He sank rapidly the next day, and breathed last at 10.30 p.m. He had had during the rly part of his illness intervals of slight im- ovement, during which he was able to write a tter to his wife, and dictate others to his ther and to Mr. Wigram, the hon. secretary of C.M.S. He gave his own medical directions, hich were promptly carried out; but though uch prayer was made for him, and all that ing care and attention could supply was en, it was not God's will that he should over, and nothing checked the hæmorrhage hich is characteristic of the fever from which was now suffering for the seventh time.

He was buried on Sunday, March 6, by his n directions, as quietly and simply as possible, his native dress, by the side of his loved friend l brother missionary, the Rev. J. A. Robin- n. He had during his illness dictated to Mr. illiams the following inscription as that which wished to be put over his grave. It will be en that he slightly altered the first text to suit circumstances of those who die before the ming of the Lord—"that blessed hope" which e had felt more strongly as an incentive to missionary exertion than he had during his brief but not unfruitful life.

GRAHAM WILMOT BROOKE,

Eldest Son of Lt.-Col. Robert Wilmot Brooke,

Born Feb., 23, 1865.

Preached Christ in this neighbourhood between July, 1889, and Feb. 1892.

"In a moment, in the twinkling of an eye, at the last trump; for the trumpet shall sound and we shall be raised incorruptible," then "we shall be like Him for we shall see Him as He is."

We purpose giving in an early issue a brief sketch of the life of Mr. Brooke, with his portrait.

Redhill Convention.

Although the number of Christian Conventions appears to be steadily increasing, the supply of speakers does not correspond with the demand. We are glad to see that the conveners of the Redhill Convention were able to carry out their programme with only four speakers from a distance—Revs. S. A. Selwyn, W. S. Standen, C. A. Fox and Dr. White, in addition to Rev. W. Brass, of Redhill, and Rev. H. Sturdy, of Dorking. The missionary evening was entrusted to Rev. Dr. Pentecost and General Haig. We cannot help thinking there is often a waste of power, to say nothing of the absence of a continuous line of thought, in having a large number of speakers at these Christian Conventions.

The plan adopted at Redhill was accidental, or rather providential, for two speakers were kept away by various causes, and, we regret to say, two others, Rev. George Wilson and Mr. Wilder, by sickness, so that the platform was reduced to half power. This was found not only sufficient, but it worked most satisfactorily. Rarely, if ever, have we been present at such an enthusiastic missionary meeting. The thrilling appeal made by Dr. Pentecost, followed up by General Haig, kept a very large audience riveted to the spot for nearly two hours.

There was a general consensus that much of the blessing of each day arose from the early morning prayer-meeting, when a short, loving address of from ten to twelve minutes, not longer, was interjected among the many short earnest prayers which poured out in rapid succession.

Mr. Robert Wilson presided throughout in the large hall, and Mrs. Hatt Noble at the ladies' meetings in the minor hall. The key-note of the Convention was struck on the very first night by Rev H. Sturdy, who took for his text, "Jesus Himself," and the note so struck vibrated throughout the whole period of the Convention. Jesus Himself, the first and the last, to live with Him, to talk with Him, to have his abiding presence: that is the real Christian higher life. Dr. White spoke on Christ our Example. Space will not admit of our giving a resumé of the different addresses. We should say that the burden of the Convention fell upon Dr. White and Rev. W. S. Standen. In Dr. White's four "Abundantly," — Is. lv. 7, John x. 10, 1 Cor. xv. 10, and Peter i. 10, 11—and in his four "Ifs"—Luke v. 12, Mark ix. 22, Mark v. 25, Matt. xiv. 28—the audience had food that was in itself quite a feast for the whole time. Rev. W. Brass took for his subject the cleansing of the Temple by Hezekiah, 2 Chron. xxx., comparing it with the cleansing of the heart, 1 Cor. iii. 16, 17, and 2 Cor. vi. 16. Later in the Convention this subject was further accentuated by the Revs. S. A. Selwyn and W.S.Standen, on Idols; the former speaker taking the case of King Asa, 2 Chron. xv. and the latter the last verse of 1 John, "Keep yourself from idols." In both these addresses the speakers made them most telling by their pointed application.

One afternoon Rev. Charles Fox conducted the Bible-reading, taking for his subject "Three Resurrection Blessings" (Ex. xii. 22). An Open Door. Every one was to go out in the morning, i.e., every Christian shall go out of Egypt on the Resurrection morning: every Christian is to come clean out from the world, not a hoof to be left behind. Second blessing A Free Wing (Lev. xiv.). The two birds, one killed, the other dipped in his blood to be let loose; so the Christian washed in the blood of the Lamb is free to fly where, and only where, he can bear the blood of the Lord Jesus—God gives us wings, but they are to be blood-sprinkled wings.

Third blessing, A Full Sheaf (John xii.34); life, growth, fruit, fulness through death—just as seed put into the ground dies to bring forth life and fruit, so the Lord Jesus died that through his death there might be life, and life more abundant in all his children. The condition of blessing is death; self-death is the one thing that attracts Jesus, and non-self-assertion is pleasing to Him and a secret of fruit.

On Friday morning the early prayer-meeting was followed by a service in St. Matthew's Church, with a sermon from Rev. S. A. Selwyn. In the afternoon there was a praise and testimony meeting at which a large number of people gave God glory by testifying what He had done in their souls during the Convention.

In the evening Dr. Pentecost addressed a very large audience on his recent experience of Indian Missions. His presentation of the facts and figures was very weighty and powerful. In closing, he said:—

"What must we do? No battle is gained, no victory won, unless we follow up success. Pour in our forces; reinforce our missionaries; let Christian families go out and settle in India at their own charges; let Redhill and Reigate start their own missionaries; let each church have its independent missionary. Do not let this Convention end in doing nothing; get your hearts on fire for these heathen souls and do it now."

At the conclusion of Dr. Pentecost's address, a slip, which we reproduce below, was given to each person present. We copy it for the benefit of forthcoming conventions, and trust that the enthusiastic missionary meeting at Redhill will be followed by many similar gatherings throughout the United Kingdom:—

IF God will show me anything I can do for the evangelisation of the world that I have not yet attempted, by his grace I will do it at once.

Destitute Boys in Venice.

The eleventh annual report of the Industrial Home for Destitute Boys, Venice, tells a story of the gradual development of an important undertaking. The work involves many anxieties, but many evidences of God's blessing encourage the managers to bear these. Pressing applications to admit orphan boys have had to be refused, through wants of funds; and for the first time in the eleven years of the existence of the work, the balance-sheet shows a considerable deficit.

The way is now open for the elder boys who wish to study, to be taught indoors, instead of going out to the Marco Polo College. A converted priest, formerly a professor in a Roman Catholic seminary, is doing his utmost to fit the lads for evangelistic work. The report says: "We have now fifteen student boys; and our prayer and hope is, that those who are not fitted to become ministers, may be very useful as schoolmasters. There is at present a sad scarcity of schoolmasters suitable for Evangelical schools. Another branch of the work which has been commenced during the past year, is the employment of a Bible-woman to visit the mothers of our boys who live in Venice. It seems a remarkable leading of God's providence, that, of the fifty-eight boys now in the Home forty-one should be children of families who have already left the Church of Rome, and who therefore appreciate the blessing of having such an Institution as ours in which their children may be educated."

Communications should be addressed to Mrs. M. M. Hammond, care of Rev. S. Bernatto, Fondamenta di Canaregio, 923, Venice.

SEAMEN'S CHRISTIAN FRIEND SOCIETY.—A temporary meeting-place has been found in the Destitute Sailor's Asylum, Well-street, London Docks, whilst the new headquarters of the Society are being erected. A public meeting was held to inaugurate the opening on Monday week.

Hastings Convention.

The South Coast United Christian Convention, which has been looked forward to with great interest, met in considerable force in the Brassey Rooms on Tuesday morning of last week. The object of the Conference was stated to be "for mutual strengthening and refreshing in the Divine life, for increased prayer for the outpouring of the Holy Spirit on ourselves, our homes, and our churches, and for the stirring up of the hearts of God's people to more love and devotedness to Him, and more earnestness in his service." The circular of invitation was signed by representatives of the several leading denominations in Hastings and St. Leonards, and an inviting array of names well known in connection with such movements was announced as taking part in the proceedings.

High Churchism is largely represented in this region, but there is also a strong Evangelical flavour in other quarters, as the names of Whitfield—successor of the once celebrated Thomas Vares in St. Mary's in the Castle—and that of the rector of old St. Leonard's, and Doudney, of Ore, and several others of less note, but equal worth, seem to indicate. While among the Nonconformists, Charles New, with his crowd of followers, is in himself a host, and Arthur Hall comes at no very great distance behind him, not to speak of C. R. Howell and Thomas Towers among the Congregationalists, with several others, and a goodly succession of Baptist and Methodist ministers. These all indicate an atmosphere of Evangelical sympathy; and fervent were the prayers offered in all their congregations on the previous Sunday that God would visit richly the coming Christian Convention. Special meetings for earnest supplication were also held on the Monday evening, and on each morning of the Convention. The way of the Lord was therefore "made ready," and great expectation and eager desire for enlarged spiritual blessings in connection with the gatherings went up into the ear of Heaven. Results will show that they did not go up in vain.

General Sir Robert Phayre was announced to preside at both morning and evening meetings on the first day. The prayers offered indicated that no dependence was placed in men apart from the power of the Spirit of God. One felt that the prayers for their point and power were still better than the speaking, which was as it should be. Revs. Arthur Hall, Fuller Gooch, and W. Jackson were among those who led the supplications. The singing of several of Mr. Pennefather's Conference hymns seemed to link the meeting with Mildmay and the Father of Christian Conferences, and served to breathe something of the old fervour through the Assembly. It was fine to see the eager looks and to hear the murmured responses of the people. More ardent spiritual life was the animated topic of the several addresses, which included those of the Chairman and Revs. Dr. Bennett and Bacheler Russell. Reference was made to the present critical time in respect to prevailing doubt outside and low spiritual life within the churches, and these were used as arguments for closer fellowship with Christ, for the maintenance of the Divine life in the soul, and for the extension of the truth of the Gospel amongst unbelieving men.

The evening meeting in the Concert Hall, St. Leonards, was largely attended, though by a different class of persons generally.

Rev. A. C. Harrison, from Australia, took up the general subject, "The Privileges, Power, and Practical Outcome of the Christian Life," enlarging chiefly on the power of sanctification. He spoke of sanctification as coming from the Father, through the Son, by the Spirit, and by means of the Word.

Pastor Fuller Gooch began by referring to conferences as one of the signs of the times. Christian conferences were, however, spoken of in some quarters as merely religious entertainments; but if this were so, they had better not be held. From the various passages found in the New Testament which spoke of the disciples being "gathered together," and in each case for some different and distinct purpose, the speaker argued that much good would come if these respective purposes were followed out.

Dr. Neatby followed with an earnest and effective address.

Judging from the crowded state of the spacious rooms, the interest of the Convention had greatly increased on the second day, and certainly the spiritual power was greatly intensified. Mr. R. C. Morgan presided at the morning meeting, and introduced it with words of holy cheer. Fervent prayers followed, led by Revs. H. E. Nihill and Dr. Bennett.

Canon Taylor Smith (Sierra Leone) took up the topic of the Power of the Christian Life, saying that we had an open word, an open heaven, and an open earth—the first is for revelation, the second for prayer, the third for service. We should also have an open eye, an open ear, and an open heart, so that we may see God in nature, in history, and in redemption.

After prayer by Dr. Baring came Dr. Neatby, who spoke with evident emotion and great spiritual power, which told mightily on the assembly. Reading from the 3rd chapter of Ephesians 14-21, he took up the passage in its successive parts. "The Father of our Lord Jesus Christ" is the source of all blessing. "According to the riches of his glory" in redemption, which will never be marred, He giveth of his fulness. "The river of God is full of water." Christ dwells in every believer's heart. "If a man keep my word, my Father will love him, and we will come to him, and make our abode with him." How much do you know of Christ dwelling in your heart? Do you greatly desire his dwelling there? Don't open your heart if you don't desire to give up all to Him. But if you are holding back from Christ, it will be a constant sore. You will fret against his yoke. It must not only be a quiet enjoyment of Christ, though you have known that. You must "bring into captivity every thought to the obedience of Christ." You are to be "rooted and grounded in the love of Christ," to send down your roots and let them strike into the love of God—"grounded" as on a rock, the Everlasting Rock. The Apostle prayed that we might comprehend the love of Christ, which is unmeasurable every way—height, depth, length, breadth. God loves all men, but this is another sort of love—the love of the Father for the children in the house. God sees the image of Christ in them, and loves that. What is "the power that worketh in us"? Nothing less than the power of the Holy Ghost—the power to take the absent Christ and make Him present to the soul. The new nature is the most dependent thing possible, but strength is given by the blessed Spirit linking us with the living God and with the living Christ, so that we become one with God through Christ. There is a power working in us, the living power of communion with God. And this is the living water. God has put a well into our hearts, and He shows us that all the good we want is in Him. Christ is the spring of satisfaction to the soul that knows Him. And out of that man shall flow rivers of living waters; in him and about him there is joy; for the Christian is the happy man.

Bible readings were given on the Tuesday and Wednesday afternoons, the first by Pastor F. E. Marsh, presided over by Rev. F. Whitfield; the second by Mr. W. R. Lane, presided over by Rev. Charles New.

There were two services on the Wednesday evening, the one at the church of St. Mary's in the Castle, where, after a shortened form of prayer, addresses were delivered by Revs. J. G. Gregory and Bacheler Russell; the other meeting, held in Robertson-street Church (Rev. C. New's), was presided over by Mr. J. E. Mathieson, and addresses delivered by Mr. R. C. Morgan and Mr. W. R. Lane.

On Thursday morning there was again a large attendance. Mr. S. Gurney Sheppard presided. After a number of requests for prayer were responded to, Rev. Henry E. Brooke spoke on the intimate connection between justification and sanctification. Rev. J. G. Gregory discoursed with great interest on Christ in the past, the present, and the future.

At the evening meeting, in the Concert Hall, Captain Baring presided. Dr. Grattan Guinness, in an able manner, spoke of the strength of God. To do the will of God we must have the power of God. The need of faith and prayer was urged in opposition to the tendency to self dependence.

An additional meeting for thanksgiving and praise was held on the Friday at the Y.M.C.A. Rooms. Mr. Russell Hurditch presided, and in his address said that, while the Convention had not been looked forward to without anxiety as to the result, in the end there had been special reasons for gratitude and rejoicing. He urged that the blessings received should not be temporary. Appeals for praise and prayer were sent in by many who had attended the gatherings, and those who had felt the inward power were asked to rise and bear testimony and give God the praise. Rev. F. Whitfield exhorted those who had been blest to extend the blessing to others. The repeated alternations of prayer and praise were very refreshing.

HASTINGS RAILWAY MISSION.

Advantage was taken of the ministers brought together at the Hastings Convention, to open the newly-erected Hall in connection with the Railway Mission. Thursday afternoon was fixed for the event, and it took the place of the Convention meeting. The hall was crowded, many being unable to obtain entrance. Mr. T. A. Denny, who had laid the stone last July, presided. Amongst those present were the Countess of Chichester, Sir James Colquhoun, of Luss, Lady Chandos Reade, Mrs. Gates (Brighton), Colonel Clarke, C.B. (Redhill), together with most of the names prominent in the Conference. After praise and prayer, the Chairman spoke highly of the building and its object, and congratulated the Christian women on the work they had promoted and accomplished. In the Railway Mission they had four hundred thousand men, and he reckoned that of this number half were married. This made six hundred thousand souls, and if each married couple had three children, that made over a million persons in their constituency.

Mr. Gurney Sheppard said the Railway Mission extended throughout England, Scotland, and Ireland, and they were now endeavouring to get into touch with Africa, Australia, India, and other countries, so that soon their constituency would number far more than a million. As regards the Hastings branch, that building belonged to Miss Gardiner. The General Committee claimed no credit for it. She told her story to the Mission, and the committee bought the house and grounds for a Convalescent Home, and arrangements were made with Miss Gardiner to use part of the ground for the erection of the hall. It had cost some £2000, out of which £1000 were collected by railway men alone. Over two hundred and eighty branches and five thousand men had been engaged in making the collection for the Home.

Rev. F. Whitfield told a most interesting story of the beginning of the work, and expressed his joy at the completion of the hall.

The Countess of Chichester gave two reasons for rejoicing. She believed the hall was built on a good foundation—not on one person's prayers, but thousands of prayers, and that it would therefore stand and prosper. Her second reason for rejoicing was that at the meetings to be held there many would be brought to love Christ, and those who loved Him already would be strengthened. It was wonderful to think of the work that was being done amongst railway men. When in a railway carriage she always had solemn thoughts, for thirty years ago she was in a bad railway accident. When travelling, their lives were in the hands of those that drove the train, and if the men gave their bodies for their convenience and comfort they should in return give their best effort for the souls of the men. The Countess said they might always tell who were Christians by their smiling faces and civil manners.

Miss Gardiner, who had a very warm reception, related a few particulars as to the history of the building. Mr. Whitfield told her that she would have to build, as his schoolroom, in which meetings had been held, filled to overflowing. She did not take the matter up seriously for some ten days, when a friend promised her £500 to start with. The next donation was not less precious—it was half-a-crown from a railway man. A sale of work, opened by the Countess of Chichester, realised £226. She had paid £250 as their share of the cost of the site. Other subscriptions included £300 from the same lady friend, £100 from Mr. Denny, and again £94 to clear the building; and £100 for furnishing, from her generous lady friend. Thus the Hall was opened free from debt.

Mr. Gurney Sheppard announced that the Hall was under the control of Miss Gardiner for her life, but in trust for the Mission for ever. Further addresses followed, and a meeting was held in the evening for the men and their wives. The addresses were by railway delegates.

SALMON'S-LANE MISSION.—The annual meeting was held on Monday week, Mr. O. Peterken presiding. The secretary reported that God had prospered the work of the Mission in every department. There are now 327 children connected with the school; the increase during the year has been 177. Earnest addresses followed by Messrs. T. W. Booth, C. Bosworth, F. Allen and others.

On the Waters.

MISSION TO DEEP SEA FISHERMEN.

Some notion of the risks incidental to the smacksmen's calling may be formed from the fact that no fewer than 8130 hospital and dispensary patients were treated (many of them for fractures and contusions) during 1891 by the Medical Mission Smacks of this Society. There are fully qualified surgeons constantly afloat on the three hospital vessels, while the skippers of the smaller mission smacks have been trained to treat simple cases requiring surgical assistance. What this help means to men who are often bruised, battered, and ill, while some one hundred to three hundred miles from shore, can only be fully understood by those who have visited them upon the fishing grounds.

Marvellous success has also attended the Mission, both in its battle with the foreign Coper, and in its spiritual ministrations to the brave fishermen in their isolated and perilous life. The reports from the Mission skippers at sea this month, as recorded in the May number of Toilers of the Deep are of the most encouraging character. The skipper of the Albert reports twelve conversions and twenty-one temperance pledges taken; and the skipper of the new Mission vessel, Alice Fisher, thirteen conversions. Skipper Goodchild, of the Chalow, reports three conversions, and all the other skippers write in a most encouraging strain.

The annual meeting of the Society has been fixed for Monday, May 16, at 7 p.m. in Exeter Hall, and the gathering will be addressed this year chiefly by the smacksmen themselves. The Princess Louise will be present, and distribute the certificates of the St. John's Ambulance Society to several of the skippers and mates of the Medical Mission smacks.

WITH CORNISH FISHERMEN.

Since January 8 last, the Herald of Mercy has been working along the West Coast of Devon and Cornwall. Dartmouth was the first port visited, and here for six days meetings were very successfully carried on for the waterside people, who, as in other ports, evidenced their appreciation of the ship by coming again and again to hear the Gospel faithfully and lovingly declared. On March 18 the Mission vessel put into Plymouth, and was warmly welcomed by the East-country fishermen, many of whom point to one or other of the Gospel ships as their spiritual birthplace, and who are now living changed and consecrated lives.

Leaving Plymouth, Paignton and Torquay were each visited in turn, and, after a quick run, the vessel reached Penzance on April 16. At the invitation and request of Mr. Henry Cook, I joined the vessel at this port, for a few weeks' special effort along the Cornish coast. At this season of the year Penzance affords the Christian worker a splendid sphere of service. Hundreds of East-country fishermen are constantly putting in for supplies of water and provisions. Many of these gladly avail themselves of the opportunity of coming to the services held nightly on board. But the great hindrance to the spread of the Gospel amongst them is the Sunday labour. Out of a fleet of five hundred there are only thirteen Sabbath-keeping boats.

One pleasing feature of the work in this port is the large attendance of the townspeople, who come down and join with us most heartily in all the services. Will the reader bear us up before the Lord, that we may be Divinely directed and guided while casting and drawing in the Gospel net? The practical sympathy and support of Christian friends are urgently needed at the present time.

SEA OF GALILEE.—Dr. Torrance, of Tiberias (says Medical Missions), has secured from the Turkish Government a firman for the erection of a hospital. This is a noteworthy fact in these days, when the same government is manifestly bent on restraining the work of Christian missionaries in the Turkish empire to the narrowest possible limits.

PRINCE'S HALL, EALING.—A series of meetings for the increase of missionary interest have been arranged for women at three o'clock, on May 11, 13, 16, 18, 20, 23, and 25. Speakers:—Mrs. J. S. Adams, Mrs. Bishop, Miss F. E. Campbell, Miss M. C. Gollock, Miss Geraldine Guinness, Miss Lucy E. Guinness, Hon. Mrs. Ion Keith Falconer, Hon. Miss Emily Kinnaird, Miss Lawrence, and Miss Constance Maynard. Programme of the series forwarded on application to Miss Hodges, Ealing.

REV. JOHN McNEILL IN GLASGOW.

The month's Mission has come to an end, and it has been one of the most remarkable series of meetings held in the city. Before the services began there was much prayer for the outpouring of the Holy Spirit, and there was a good organisation of workers to deal with the anxious. It was quite expected that the meetings would be well attended, but the great crowds that came together surprised the most sanguine.

The services on Sunday, 24th April, were quite memorable. Mr. McNeill addressed fully sixteen thousand persons at five meetings, and one was surprised at the physical strength of the preacher. The first service was at 9.30 in the morning, and it was most interesting to see the crowds of people hurrying along the quiet streets, wending their way to St. Andrew's Halls. By half-past eight they were gathering around the door, waiting to get into the hall. When Mr. McNeill went on to the platform, there was not an empty seat in the large hall. The address was based upon the three candidates for discipleship, and made a deep impression upon the audience. When he came to the man who said, "I will follow Thee, but suffer me first to bury my father," Mr. McNeill told how he was lately placed in similar circumstances. His own father died, and when the letter came telling of his burial, he turned up his engagement-book, and found he was expected to preach in Leeds. He felt that if his honoured father could have spoken, he would have said, "Preach the word of the kingdom." This address has moved many of those who were present, and letters have been received from several who feel called upon to give themselves wholly to the service of the Lord.

The meeting for non-churchgoers overflowed into the Waterloo Rooms, and Mr. McNeill addressed about seventeen hundred people there. The services for women at five, and for men at seven o'clock, were quite remarkable for the numbers that crowded into the circus. Much blessing was experienced at all these meetings.

Every afternoon during the week St. Andrew's Hall was quite filled, and Mr. McNeill delivered powerful evangelistic addresses. If any one might be selected for special comment mention might be made of his sermon on the "Passover." Not only was the address full of most beautiful passages, but the old Gospel truths were peculiarly emphasized from beginning to end.

The circus meetings not only filled the large auditorium, but on several of the evenings the doors had to be closed before eight o'clock. On Friday night (the last of the Mission) the doors had to be opened two hours before the advertised hour, and in a short time the great building was crowded in every corner, until there was not an inch of standing room. The preacher took his text from Phil. ii. 12. As he drew to a close he made use of two railway illustrations, and these so thrilled the audience that his last phrase, "hook on," became the word that the workers made use of in dealing with inquirers.

We are all sorry that the Mission has come to an end. It has been very fruitful. Over four hundred names of those that were spoken to in the circus have been sent in, and it is proposed to have a meeting for these converts this week. There are several things that we desire to praise the Lord specially for—the great crowds that came to hear the Gospel—about six thousand daily; the clear statement of old Gospel truth in every address, the large number of anxious souls who have been dealt with; and lastly, the health and strength granted to Mr. McNeill, and to Mr. Burke, who sang the Gospel so sweetly and effectively. Mr. McNeill is resting this week and begins on Sunday, May 8, a fortnight's mission in Dundee. We earnestly invite prayer for our brethren.

IRISH CHURCH MISSIONS.—Canon Leet, speaking last week at the Dublin Anniversary of this Society, said the Mission had a strong claim upon sympathy and support, because it was doing a work for which the Church of Ireland was responsible. This church had its responsibilities to fill with respect to its flock, but it had also very solemn responsibilities towards the Roman Catholics of that country. The church in its oldest days was a Missionary Church, carrying the burning lamp of truth into surrounding darkness. Now, in the Irish Church Missions, they had the right hand offered for carrying that lamp of truth into the homes and hearts of their Roman Catholic fellow-countrymen. The Society recognised the great principle that it was obligatory to spread the truth amongst the Roman Catholic population, and it was on that principle that its agents went forth.

AMERICAN NOTES.

From our Special Correspondent.

Some preachers of the Baptist body on this side think it flattering to themselves and their ecclesiastical views to publish questionable stories concerning the sainted Spurgeon. One announces in print that Mr. Spurgeon told him that had he come to America he would practise "close communion." This report is made in order to show the solidity of their position, and that Mr. Spurgeon practised "open communion" only because it was the sentiment in England. Such slander must be displeasing to God, and hurtful to the myriad friends of the blessed dead.

In a recent tour through North Carolina, we learned some facts concerning the work of the Southern Home Missionary Society. This aggressive society has been evangelising needy districts for more than fifty years. During that time it has organised 2500 congregations, baptized 125,000 converts, established five thousand new Sunday-schools, and erected 2009 church buildings—all this beside much incidental work. The Indians, negroes, and destitute whites have been included in this splendid march of conquest. Other denominations have not been idle in home evangelism throughout the Southern States.

The new law against polygamy has made Mormonism more decent. But there is no happy obedience of the law by the community. Polygamy is still practised but not openly. Financially this sect has become wealthy; they are building an enormous temple, and maintain their peculiar religion as aforetime, save in the doctrine of wife-plurality, which, however, they hold in reserve. The rapid traveller, looking at things outwardly, would consider Utah an earthly paradise, but the "prophets" and "saints" obey the law because they fear the penalties of disobedience. Our missionaries are not idle in Salt Lake City and the surrounding country, but it is almost impossible to get the Mormons in large numbers to hear the Gospel of Christ.

In many districts of the Southland the negroes are becoming despondent. Bad crops, the low price of cotton, stinted wages, and lack of work are producing a change in the negroes' disposition. Once in a meeting, however, they forget their sorrow while they sing and shout their quaint anthems. At all of my services recently held amongst them they have crowded the buildings, and they make the rafters ring in singing:—

'Tis de ole time 'ligion,
'Tis de ole time 'ligion,
'Tis de ole time 'ligion,
'Tis good enough for me.

'Twas good for de prophet Dan'l,
'Tis good enough for me;
'Twas good for Pol and Silas,
'Tis good enough for me;
It makes me love eberybody,
'Tis good enough for me;
'Twill take me home to he'ben,
'Tis good enough for me, &c.

The outlook at present is dark for this people. In neither North nor South can the educated coloured young men or women find positions for which they are qualified, in banks, commercial houses or professions. The Southern Christian white people are very kind to their negro neighbours, but they are powerless to elevate them while there exists many adverse influences.

CHATSWORTH-ROAD CHURCH, WEST NORWOOD.

PASTOR FULLER GOOCH'S FAREWELL.

A few weeks ago we gave some particulars, from the pen of a correspondent, of the circumstances relating to the resignation by Rev. W. F. Gooch of the pastorate of this church and congregation. Mr. Gooch's final service in the church was held last Sabbath evening, when a large company was present. The discourse, which lasted an hour, was founded on 1 Cor. iv. 1-5, Paul's ideal of the Christian ministry. In the first half of his sermon Mr. Gooch considered the text in the light of the truths asserted—(1) The Christian ministry is a stewardship of revealed truth; (2) the mark of that stewardship is fidelity to the truth and to the Master to whom the minister is alone responsible; (3) the Christian minister is not to be swayed by human judgments of him; (4) he is to be judged when the Lord comes; (5) then all hidden things will be brought to light; and (6) the faithful minister will receive praise of God. Each of these points was earnestly and powerfully expanded by the preacher.

Coming to his application of the text to the special circumstances of the occasion, Pastor Gooch made a full and interesting statement bearing on his past and present relations with the Chatsworth-road Church. The principles laid down in the text, he said, as to the nature of the Christian ministry, had been strongly borne in upon him for years past, and growingly so in recent years. He had only consented to remain within denominational bonds by the thought that God was using him in some degree in that place. Now the opportunity had come which would enable him to be clear of these restrictions and to step into freedom. He solemnly averred, however, that he had never during all his pastorate sought to alter the constitution or working of the church as a Baptist church. He gave an emphatic and almost indignant denial to the statement, recently made anonymously in a Baptist organ, that the affairs of the church had of late been managed by himself and some fifty or sixty Plymouth Brethren who were not members of the church. With nearly five hundred members in the church, such a charge, if true, would recoil more on them than on himself; but there was no truth in it. He was leaving, then, because he desired perfect freedom to express his convictions on Church government and other matters. These convictions had grown of late, especially in view of the trend of the Church systems and the increasing rapidity of the down-grade movement in the denominations. He was not in any sense a denominationalist by conviction, and he had only been one in action because of exceptional circumstances that seemed to show the Lord meant him to remain for a season as he was. The signs of the time were now such that he felt he must come out, and he felt sure that ere long many others would have to do the same.

As to leaving Norwood, Mr. Gooch declared that when he first announced his resignation, he had no thought of remaining in the district; quite other plans were in his mind But when the suggestion to commence a fresh work on free lines was made to him in a repeated and a practical form; when he knew that whether he remained or not some such effort would be made; and in view of the great increase of the population, and of the fact that the new work would be on lines entirely different from those of a strict Baptist charge, he was led to see the hand of God in it, and he felt that he dare not refuse to stay. No one who wished conscientiously to remain on purely Baptist lines would follow him, and any who were of the same mind as himself could not consistently remain at Chatsworth-road. Therefore, he felt that there could be no clashing, or anything like rivalry between the two congregations, and that he was doing no injustice to the church he had served in the past by the new effort he was about to make. He invoked on the friends at Chatsworth-road God's richest blessing, and said he would be most happy at any time and in any way to help them and further their interests, so long as they were faithful to Christ's Gospel.

A statement has been drawn up and circulated by Pastor Gooch setting forth the principles on which the new effort (which is to be called the "West Norwood Free Christian Church") will be carried on. Paragraph 2 is as follows:—

We desire to avow our entire rejection of all human names or authorities as denominating our stand. We know no head but Christ, no Church but that which bears his Name, no guide but the Spirit He has given, no statutes or laws but those found in his precepts, and no bond of union but his love, uniting us in obedience to his will and in adherence to his Word.

Baptism (the Apostolic practice of the immersion of believers) and the Lord's Supper are held to be ordinances instituted by the Lord for the observance of his people; baptism, however, is not to be considered a ground of communion, but "an individual act upon which each believer must be full persuaded in his own mind." "The doctrines of grace," as generally understood by the old school of Evangelicals, are reaffirmed and incorporated in the basis of communion.

The services at the Public Hall, West Norwood (which will seat about 750 people), commence next Lord's Day.

CHILDREN AND THE PUBLIC-HOUSE.

The Pall Mall Budget of last week reproduced a series of illustrations by Mr. G. R. Allison, hon. sec. of the League for the Prohibition of the Sale of Intoxicating Liquors to Children. "The photographs portray," says the League, "but faintly a custom (the sale and delivery of strong drink to children) which is dangerous to the children themselves and to the welfare of the community at large. To fill up the annual death-gap in our drunkard and criminal army there must be a powerful influence at work—none so great as the familiarising of the young with the public-house and its surroundings. To prove that these influences are dangerous to children we need but refer to the almost unanimous verdict of our judges and magistrates, whose position enables them to speak with undeniable authority, that the excessive use of intoxicating drink is accountable for at least 75 per cent. of the crime, misery, and degradation which is laid bare before them in their official capacity.

"On Saturday, April 2, 1892, in the Crown Court, Liverpool Assizes, the Lord Chief Justice of England (Lord Coleridge) said he was putting a moderate estimate upon it when he said that nineteen-twentieths of the crimes he had to try were produced by, or in some way mixed up with, the public-house and drink.

"It is no uncommon sight to see children of four or five years of age being regularly sent for intoxicating liquors; and, to show how prevalent this is, many public-houses have steps provided for the little ones to climb up before they are able to place the bottles and jugs upon the counter for the barman to fill. Many of these children, through sipping the drink on their way home, have acquired a taste for it at a very early age, and no valid reason can be given for a continuance of the custom, or against the enactment of a law which prohibits the sale or delivery of strong drink to children. If interfering with the right of the subject is an argument against such a measure, then we ask, which individual's right is meant—the parent's or the child's? Parents have no moral right, and should have no legal right, to compel a child, because it is theirs, to do a thing which is dangerous to its own welfare and to the welfare of the nation."

The League, of which Mr. E. R. Russell, M.P., is the chairman, earnestly asks for support in favour of the Bill to come on the 11th inst before the House of Commons, the principal clause of which reads—

"Every holder of a licence who sells or delivers, or allows any person to sell or deliver, any description of intoxicating liquor to any person apparently under the age of sixteen years, shall be liable to a penalty not exceeding twenty shillings for the first offence, and not exceeding forty shillings for the second and any subsequent offence."

THE HIBERNIAN BIBLE SOCIETY.—The annual meeting was held on Friday last in the Christian Union Buildings, the Bishop of Tuam presiding. The report, read by Rev. A. L. Elliott, stated that the income has not been so large as in the preceding year; nevertheless the Society has been able to contribute the sum of £500 to the British and Foreign Bible Society. The receipts amounted to £3635 1s. 9d., and the expenditure to £3833 1s. 4d. The issues of Holy Scriptures numbered 37,283; of these, 2222 were placed in the day-schools, 6862 were granted to different societies, institutions, parishes, and districts for various purposes, while 10,685 were distributed by colporteurs, making the total grants for the year 23,061 copies. The meeting was also addressed by Rev. T. Aston-Binns, Dr. R. N. Cust, and Revs. W. E. Burrows and D. Osbourne.

Cambridge Notes.

A meeting of the Gleaners' Union for the town was held on Wednesday evening in the Martyn Memorial Hall.

The Cambridge Inter-Collegiate Christian Union have decided to continue their Sunday evening evangelistic services in the Alexandra Hall during the summer term. It was formerly the custom to discontinue these services this term and to hold instead an open-air service in the "Backs" in the afternoon, but the experiment of holding the Alexandra Hall meetings this term also is to be tried, giving up the open-air service.

The Barnwell open-air services held on Sunday evenings by bands of men from the different colleges are this term being more amalgamated. It was felt that we had too little co-operation, and so the work was not being as effectual as it might be made. Accordingly, only two services are now to be held for the adults, Queen's and St. John's Colleges combining to draw off the children from these two open-air services, and holding a special service for the children elsewhere at the same time.

The meetings at the Barnwell Theatre are being well looked after this time by University men, and we are looking for a rich blessing on the work there.

On Tuesday evening, Rev. J. Knox addressed the students at Ridley and others on the work in his parish of Aston, Birmingham. Mr. Moule took the chair, and opened with prayer and a few prefatory words. Mr. Knox informed the meeting that his parish contained some thirty-eight thousand souls—nearly the largest in England, except Swansea or Portsea. The parish had been wonderfully revived under Canon Elliott, who found the church in terrible disrepair, and a congregation of never more than one hundred people. The church had been well restored, and various parish organisations started; but that though Canon Elliott had done a noble and marvellous work, there was still much remaining to be done.

A most important work is being carried on principally by University men among the boys of Bedford. In that town, containing about fifteen hundred boys, a meeting is held every Sunday afternoon at the Y.M.C.A rooms (though a larger room is much needed) for the boys attending the grammar school and modern school. Usually every Sunday during term University men go down from Saturday to Monday to speak at this meeting. From 160 to two hundred boys are gathered together every Sunday to hear the story of the Saviour's love. Much blessing has been given, and the work is fast growing. The Scripture Union, a Missionary Union are worked in connection with it, besides which the elder boys hold a Bible-class among themselves every Sunday morning at 9.30 a.m.

THE IRISH SOCIETY.

The seventy-fourth annual meeting of the friends and supporters of this society was held in Dublin on Wednesday, April 27. There was a highly representative attendance of clergy and laity. The Lord Bishop of Tuam presided.

The principles and points emphasized by the several speakers were—(1) the necessity for the Society's work, both in Ireland and among the Irish population in Lancashire; (2) the simple, straightforward object of the Society, namely, to give some knowledge of the Holy Scriptures to people who, without the Society, are never likely to receive it; (3) the quiet, unobtrusive character of the work; (4) the special obligation at the present time of maintaining the work in, if possible, increased efficiency.

It appears that the Society, owing to a substantial increase of its income last year, is now wholly free from debt; but, having commenced the new financial year with only a small working balance, help is needed to enable it to pursue its labours.

A Missionary is hoping to return shortly to the Krishnagur Mission (Bengal) in connection with the Church of England Zenana Society, and would be glad to take back with her a good Remington or Yost typewriter; also a (flat) "Victoria" or "Bernardki's Lamb" knitting machine, as a means of employment for the women converts. A gift to the Krishnagur Church of England Zenana Mission of either of these machines from any kind friend would be very acceptable. C. M. JIMIE'S CHUM.

By B. M'Call Barbour.

Charlie was his proper name, but the boys called him "Chick." In one sense he was well nicknamed, for, though he was anything but a "chick" in appearance, he most certainly had a "chicken-heart." However, chicken hearts grow strong and robust under certain treatment, and so it was destined that Charlie's should develop under the care of his chum Jimie.

It was a strange day for Chick that first one as a telegraph messenger in Her Majesty's service. He was far from being lonely as regards outward circumstances, for he was thronged on every side by crowds of boys of his own age and of all styles and temperaments; and yet, within that little heart of his, he did feel very much alone. Some incorrigible spirits played on him the usual tricks which fall to the lot of the "new boy," but Chick took these in good part, although at times he was tried severely by them. He spoke to many of the lads, or rather many of the lads, in that freedom which is the birthright of the "boy," broke the ice of acquaintance and brotherhood in speech to him, and he answered. He went his messages, and with all the eagerness of a novice did his duty as best he could. When the day's work was done, he was heartily glad to trudge home, his legs aching severely with the unusual walking of the day. At home, there were many questions to be asked and answered by him, and Chick had to live over again his day's experiences. The memory of most of the lads he had met came up before his mind, but none of them seemed to him so vivid as that of Jimie. Somehow his presence seemed to hang about him. It was not because of what he said to him, for Chick could scarcely remember what he did say, but something in Jimie's face and gait had fixed itself upon his mind.

Chick's last thought that night was not of the honourable position he filled in "Her Majesty's service," but of Jimie. Do we wonder at it? Is it not often so in life, an inexplainable something makes us cling to certain folks even at first sight?

Days passed into weeks, and weeks to months, and, as they passed, Chick seemed gradually to lose that boyish innocence which lives in most lads till they get mixed up in crowds, and its place is usurped by harmless trickery or outright roguishness.

It was roguishness which grew apace in Chick. He had made few chums, but those he had worked himself in amongst were not of the most exemplary type for either honesty of heart or purity of habits. Jimie was not one of the number. Although Chick saw him daily, they as yet were not chums. But things were destined to take a change, and they did in this way.

It was a dull day in the office. Business was slack. Few messages meant lots of messengers inside, and, of course, there was a prevalence of that proverbial mischief that Satan finds for idle hands to do. Chick was in one of his merriest moods. He had been coaxed by his chums to smuggle the gum-bottle from the delivery counter, and was busy with some of the clique in besmearing the end of a form for the reception of the next messenger who took his seat on it. Here he comes; with a leap he swung himself down the last flight of steps and into the room. It was Jimie. All unconscious of the gluey reception which awaited him, he seated himself on the vacant space to await his turn of message, and to wile away the time began to read a paper. Gradually the moisture penetrated his trousers. He tore himself away as best he could, and began to inspect the form. A suppressed laugh came from Chick and his chums, who had been eyeing Jimie curiously since he came in. Jimie suspected the trick. The joke was out. The clique crowded round Jimie to help to discover the mess.

"Some of you dirty chits have been glueing his form," he said, looking at Chick and his chums.

"B'gum, so they have," said Chick, who had a weakness for puns of a specially bad kind.

"Then you're a dirty lot to spoil a fellow's trousers in that way," renewed Jimie.

"So they are; I would make them suffer for that, Jim, if I was you," replied Chick.

"Ay, perhaps you would, Master Chickey; and perhaps it was just you yourself that did it, you sly customer," said Jimie, suspecting a little Chick's talkativeness as a shield for guilt.

"Now, then, cave in," said "Goggles," one of the clique who stood by; "throw up the sponge, Chick; it's all out."

"I thought it was you, Chick; you had better just watch yourself."

No sooner had Jimie's warning passed his lips than the sudden appearance of the inspector made a silence in the camp. As he entered, Jimie's back was to him, and he had a full view of the great gum splatch on his trousers and tunic.

"What is that on your tunic, '255?'" said the inspector, addressing Jimie.

"I think it's gum, sir," he replied.

"How did it come there?"

"Off that seat, sir."

"Who put it on the seat?"

"I don't know, sir," replied Jimie, quite truthfully; for he was not yet sure of the culprit.

"Do any of you, lads, know who put this gum here?" asked the inspector, addressing the lads around.

No answer was vouchsafed, so the question was repeated in a more determined tone; and he added, "I shall find this out, so the lad who did it had better own to it at once."

With a face flushed with guilt, Chick stuttered forth, "I did it, sir."

"Come with me," said the inspector, as he led the way to his room. Chick followed as if on his way to execution. Yes, he was chicken-hearted, and it was on such occasions it revealed itself.

After much examination, the culprit returned to his chums. Questions met him from every side: "What's he going to do to you, Chick?" "What did he say?" and a host of others. But Chick kept silence. His surface boldness had disappeared. He felt dull and miserable for the rest of the day, and was glad when "relief" came. The fact was—somewhere in his being Chick still possessed a germ of good. It had been touched, and he felt sad at heart.

By chance—no, not by chance, but by that 'divinity that shapes our ends"—Jimie's "relief" fell at the same hour. As they passed out of the office together, Jimie, who was still feeling the unpleasant effects of his "sticking plaster," slipped his arm into Chick's, and said, "Here, I say, I didn't get you into trouble, did I, Chick? What did Mr. S—— say to you?" There was no silence now on Chick's part. His heart was too full. "I've been suspended for two weeks," he answered, and as he spoke the tears welled up in his eyes, and he continued in a broken voice—"And—and—I don't know how to tell—to tell my mother; she's been lying ill these last three days."

Jimie seemed to grasp the position at once. "Did he say that, Chick; that you should be suspended for two weeks? Hold on a minute; I'm going in to speak to Sanderson; wait for me, Chick." No sooner had Jimie said this than he was gone.

He found the inspector at his desk. Mr. Sanderson knew well the character of Jimie, and when he saw him he greeted him with, "Well, '255,' what now?"

"May I speak to you, sir, for a minute?" queried Jimie.

"Certainly; what have you to say?" was the response.

"It was about Chick—I mean '249.' Sir, I wanted to ask you if you wouldn't suspend him this chance, for he's sorry for what he's done, and won't do anything like it again. He's quite broke down, sir, for his mother's been lying ill these last three days, and he can't go home and tell her he has been suspended. I don't mind the gum on my trousers, sir; I'll get it washed to-night, and then it'll be all right to-morrow, and if—if there's anything I can do to help you to forgive Chick—'249,' I mean, sir—I'll do it."

Does it sound like arrogance, this speech? The honest, kindly heart of Jimie didn't think of it as such. He was too eager to gain Chick's release.

Mr. S—— had listened attentively to the pleading, and now lifted his head. As he looked into the honest depths of Jimie's eyes, he was made to feel compassion.

"Has '249' gone off duty yet?" he asked.

"Yes, sir; he's just off now. He's waiting outside for me," was the quick reply.

The inspector considered a moment, then said, "Well, the other lads needn't know about this, so I shall not call him back; but you can tell him to come on duty to-morrow as usual. Tell him also to come and see me the first thing before he begins duty."

Heart of lawyer was never more joyful over the success of his maiden case than was the heart of Jimie at the hopefulness of his pleading for Chick.

"Come on, Chick," he said, as he sprang through the office door. "Let's away from the office; I'll tell you as we go along."

Jimie recounted his interview with Mr. S—— but took care to add a something of a moral to it all.

"Now, you'll tell the truth, Chick, when he asks you to-morrow about it; and look here, Chickey, if I were you, I wouldn't clique with that lot again. They'll only get you into trouble, and it'll be worse for you next time if anything happens."

Chick had been somewhat sobered by the sage remarks, for he wasn't yet quite dead to all sense of good feeling. Somehow unconsciously, when the lads parted, it wasn't with the usual slap on the back, or battering with their overcoats, but with a warm grip of the hand, and a look into each other's eyes. Chick felt that night he had got a chum—a right good one this time. The world went on its way with not one bit of difference towards him; but how different he felt towards the world.

All that night he couldn't help thinking about Jimie. How he wished he could live beside him. A thousand thoughts, unlike Chick, now gathered in his mind, and connected themselves with Jimie. It was Jimie this, and Jimie that and Jimie everything. When bedtime came, although Chick had long ago given up his prayers, to-night he felt a longing to say something in that way. He did not kneel, but, boy-like, when in bed, he drew the clothes up over his head, and in secret asked God to make Jimie and him better chums. God heard that prayer, for it was sincere. It is being answered to-day. The Father who seeth in secret hath rewarded him openly.

When Chick got to office next morning he didn't forget his instructions to go at once to his superior's room.

What went on there we need not recount. It is enough to say Chick came out of it with a deeper sense of duty, a firmer resolve to do it, and with a greater love than ever for Jimie, his chum.

As the days went on the friendship of the lads increased. Only a few weeks after these events which we have related, Chick's birthday came about. Jimie, with that love which ever seeks "to bless that which it loves," felt he must make Chick a present on this occasion. What better could he give him than a little text-book? Not many weeks ago Chick would have laughed at the reception of such a thing, but not now. By the guidance of that Spirit which had brought the lads together, it came about that the text set down in the booklet for the date of Chick's birthday ran thus—"Born again, not of corruptible seed, but of incorruptible, by the Word of God, which liveth and abideth for ever." Jimie fully realised the significance of the power of such a text, and he could not help, before he passed it on to Chick, underlining the first two words—"born again." With a simple prayer in his heart that God might make these words come true for Chick, he let his gift pass from him.

It was a thoughtful night that for Chick after the reception of his little gift, and the following days revealed its influence. Yes; Chick was "born again."

Do you say it was strange? Well, such things are strange to those who never pray. But it was not strange to Jimie; it was what he looked for. Nor is it strange to such as know—

> More things are wrought by prayer
> Than this world dreams of.

It was but little Jimie did, as the world counts doing; but who can estimate how much it was as reckoned up by God?—Gospel Temperance Appeal.

Mr. Moody at Calvary.

The world-renowned evangelist, with his wife and son Paul, have been making a short visit to Jerusalem and the neighbouring places with their friends, Mr. and Mrs. Peter Mackinnon, of Campbeltown. On Easter Sunday Mr. Moody was invited to preach on Calvary, the new site which has been generally accepted by the Bible students of the present day as more exactly meeting the Gospel description than any other. The weather was beautifully clear, and before the hour of half-past four the neighbouring roadways were dotted with native and visiting Christians, who were anxious to hear the preacher.

Calvary is owned by the Moslems, and used by them as a cemetery. Its crest is smooth and almost grassy, being marked here and there by the marble stones which, in box-like form, cover the resting places of those who have died in the Moslem faith. There was ample room for the three or four hundred people who gathered to hear Mr. Moody, and when the hour of the meeting approached the closely-packed audience—for they drew near to Mr. Moody as if the only available space was about his feet—with their infinitely varied costumes so common in the East, and the sublime and sacred scenery, almost lighting up the landscape so glowing was it with light from the past, made a combination of such affecting power that it must have been one of very dull sensibilities who could not feel that would be a thrilling meeting for both preacher and congregation. And such it proved to be.

The meeting was under the direction of the Church Missionary Society, and the music was led with the help of a portable organ by Mr G. R. Lee. Surrounding Mr. Moody were some sixty young boys and girls in starched white caps, who are scholars in the London Jews' Society Mission School, and who not only looked very attractive in themselves, but gave a distinctive character to the congregation about them. There was an opening hymn. Then Mr. Moody said, "I've got a choir, and they're going to sing for me." Turning to the mission scholars he asked them to sing one of their familiar hymns. They sang very sweetly "The banner of the Cross." Prayer was then offered by Rev. E. Carr-Glyn, of Kensington, London.

Another hymn by the choir. Prayer by Rev. A. H. Kelk, of the London Jews' Society. Then Mr. Moody rose to a small platform where all could see and hear him, and in a voice choked with emotion began his sermon. It was a wonderful discourse; those who heard it will never forget it. It would be impossible to print in cold type the words which would tell of the tides of pathos and power that welled up from his heart in such a spot on such an occasion, but much of the substance in thought can be told, and it was about as follows:—

I have been preaching the Gospel for thirty years, and I have never preached when I felt the awe of God as I do on this spot. If Moses could hear the voice of God telling him to put the shoes from off his feet—for he stood on holy ground—I certainly hear it to day. I cannot tell the thoughts that have come rushing through my mind all day. You cannot imagine how we feel coming from three thousand miles away and standing on this hallowed spot. It is hard to find the voice to tell what we feel. I can see Abraham meeting Melchizedek on yonder hill. I can see Abraham offering up Isaac on Mount Moriah—like a very background of the Cross. I can see Abraham great in promises from God, yet having no son to fulfil them until that only son came into the home. I suppose no father ever loved a son more than Abraham loved that boy.

The day came when the voice of God spoke to Abraham, and said, "Take now thine only son Isaac, and offer him up for a burnt-offering." He will not tell Sarah; he keeps the secret locked up in his heart. I can see the tears in his eyes as he says, "I am only going to have my boy two days longer." No doubt he spent that night in prayer for strength. I can hear him crying out in agony, "How can I give you up, my boy, the son of my old age?" I can see them setting out on the journey. I can see them climbing that hill yonder. Isaac says, "Father, behold here is the fire and the wood, but where is the lamb for the sacrifice?" How prophetic was the answer, "My son, God will provide himself a sacrifice." And what a sacrifice He did provide when He offered up his only-begotten Son near this very spot for our sins!

I can see Abraham at the last family prayers he expects to have with Isaac say to him—"Sit down here, my son; let me talk with you.' He tells him of God's wonderful dealings with him. How He called him out of Padan-aram, and how He had given him such blessings and promises. "And now, my son, He calls me to give you up." I can think what it cost Abraham to say these words. I used to think more of Jesus than I did of the Father, as if Jesus were a loving mediator who stood between me and a stern judge. But now I know it must have cost God more to give up his son than it cost Jesus to die on the cross. As Abraham heard God calling out to him, "Abraham, spare thy son," so, no doubt, the disciples thought as they stood on Calvary when Jesus was being nailed to the cross, the heavens would sound with the cry of God. "This is my beloved Son, spare Him, spare Him."

It is hard to speak. You cannot understand my feelings; it is hard to keep back the tears. Yonder is the field where the angels came to the shepherds. "Good tidings of great joy," they sang; and their chorus might have been heard on this hill where we stand. Yonder is Mizpeh, where Samuel anointed Saul, King of Israel. Yonder is Olivet and Bethany, where Jesus, when weary with work, found one house always open to Him. I read the words, "Every man went to his own house. Jesus went to the Mount of Olives." He, the Son of God, who was with God before the morning stars sang together, He that had glory in heaven, became a wanderer on the earth, and had not where to lay his head. I think of that great sermon He had preached to the Jews in the temple yonder where He had tried to tear away their mask of hypocrisy, and show them how false their professions of faith in God were. His great heart was breaking. He had finished with the Jews. They had rejected Him. He went out with his disciples and sat on the mountain over there. His disciples wanted to talk about the temple stones. He with his vision full of Gethsemane and Golgotha, yet yearning for his people, said, "Not one stone shall be left upon another. Oh! Jerusalem, Jerusalem, how often would I have gathered thy children together, but ye would not. Behold your house is left unto you desolate." Hitherto He had said, "My Father's house," "My house," but now it is "your house." "I have left it, and it is desolate." He saw Titus with his armies besieging the city, and He saw the fearful ruin that would follow their rejecting Him.

I have tried to picture Him passing this way when a boy; for He must have come down the road yonder when coming from Nazareth to Jerusalem, and I pictured the shadow of the cross falling upon it as He said, "On that spot I am to offer up my life."

Mr. Moody then called the attention of his hearers to the four feasts which Jesus attended at Jerusalem. His theme at all of them was the Holy Spirit, and said if there is any doctrine that needs thundering around the world to-day it is the doctrine of the new birth, by which men became partakers of the nature of God. The preacher powerfully sketched the feasts referred to, where Jesus had proclaimed the gift of the Spirit and its necessity in order to enter the Kingdom of God. He made a thrilling appeal to the Christians present to seek God until He gave them the gift of the Spirit of power for service, so much needed in this city, and everywhere where work for Christ was to be done. He closed by showing that we did not worship a dead Jew nailed to a cross, who had finished his work, but a living Saviour who is at the right hand of God and is able now to do the same work that He had done when on the earth, and calling attention to the last messages of Jesus to his disciples which were notable for their fulness of authority.

All Hail...	... ...	Matt. xxviii. 9

All Things	... ...	,, xxviii. 20

All the Church of Christ needs is the power of the Spirit for service, and Jesus the same yesterday, to-day, and for ever, was ready to give it.

Mr. Moody offered the closing prayer, and a collection was taken for the London Jews Mission Society. The sermon was very impressive, and all will look forward to the service of next Sunday on "Calvary," when Mr. Moody will speak again.

There were many notable faces at the meeting of persons well known; among them were: Mr and Mrs. Peter Mackinnon, Miss Love, Rev. E. Carr-Glyn and Lady Glyn, Mr. Golat (Manager of the Grand New Hotel, where Mr. Moody is staying), Rev. John Zeller, Mr. Frank Cook (grandson of Thomas Cook), Rev. Abram Baaz, Mrs. Dixon, wife of English Consul, Dr. Selah Merrill, American Consul, Miss Jennie Street of London Sunday School Union, Mr. Herbert Clark, Manager for Thomas Cook and Son, Rev. Mr. Joseph Jamal, Rev. Mr. Ben Oliel. Many Jews, Arabs, and others not Christian, were drawn by the unusual crowd on "Calvary," and remained throughout the service.

MRS. RICKETTS ON THE CONGO.

You kindly inserted a note from me early in February about my box for Mrs. Ricketts. With less than a week's notice, a box, full of useful things was, through the kindness of some twenty friends, sent off from Liverpool, and the gifts were acknowledged in your issue of February 25. I then announced my intention to send again in May. Will you let me now make it known that the second box will be packed at the end of the month, and any contributions will be very acceptable? Clothes, ready made, are not now so much wanted, but material is for making skirts, jackets, shirts &c. And, for Mrs. Ricketts's school, any amount of sewing-cotton, needles, scissors, and thimbles. I would also suggest work-bags, needle-cases, pincushions, button-bags, &c., as prizes for the children, and as encouragements to the women, who are learning to make their own clothes.

Mr. Jameson, Young Men's Christian Association, Liverpool, will receive gifts up to May 30. Miss Hawkes, of the House of Rest, Eastbourne, will receive parcels for me up to May 28, which I will forward to Liverpool.

Dr. Harry Guinness writes to me: "Yes, I did see your little black friend, Mrs. Ricketts, at Lukunga, and found her very well, also her husband. Had I time I would describe my visit to them, in their pleasant little wood and iron house, and the meetings we had there sometimes of an evening; and about how busy she is with her school, and he with his Evangelistic work and sugar growing.... They are at a station where undoubtedly there is much for them to do."—Yours sincerely, R. S. Hind Smith.

THE NIGER MISSION.—The C.M.S. Committee have issued a "very urgent appeal" for men for the Niger Mission, "a difficult but most interesting field of labour." 1. To carry forward the existing work, pastoral and evangelistic, in Lokoja and its immediate neighbourhood, and to prepare for the long-desired extension among the Mohammedan tribes of the Soudan and Upper Niger territories. 2. To occupy in full force the stations of Onitsha, Obotshi, and Asaba, in the Lower Niger, and to take immediate advantage of the wide openings for aggressive missionary work from these centres amongst the Ibo-speaking and other tribes. 3. To open a Training Institution at Brass, in the Delta, where natives of the Lower Niger Territory may be prepared for evangelistic and pastoral work. At the least four men are immediately required for the Soudan and Upper Niger Mission, and eight to reinforce the Delta and Lower Niger Mission. Towards their requirements two have already been assigned, and the Committee desire that they may be accompanied by several others. It is hoped that a party will sail in June.

REV. GEORGE S. BARRETT, B.A.,

Congregational Minister, Norwich.

A GOOD deal of interest has of late been called forth touching the subject of this sketch. A post of service has been offered him which demands in him who may fill it no common power and gifts. It was no mean honour to have been urged to take the position by those whose care it has been to find the man of capacity adequate to its requirements. It will be meeting a desire felt by many to set that forth which has helped to make him what he has become.

GEORGE SLATYER BARRETT was born in Jamaica, in 1839. His father, for fourteen years, was a missionary in the West Indies and in British Guiana. At the expiry of his school days he entered classes at University College, London, and studied under Professors De Morgan and Francis W. Newman. He was trained to good mental habits, which have served him through the succeeding years.

Admitted a student of the Lancashire Independent College, Manchester, in 1862, Mr. Barrett took place at once with the men in the second college year. It was easy for his intimates at college to forecast for him a bright future in the ministry of the Gospel and the service of the Churches. He passed through a four years' curriculum, taking a fellowship in the College, and winning high esteem from his fellow-students and distinguishing approbation from his tutors. In addition to daily studies for lectures in divinity, philosophy, exegesis, and Church history, he found time to read for the University, and took the Bachelor's Degree in Arts in the University of London. The writer of this sketch recalls scenes in the recreation ground on college afternoons in summer days. Mr. Barrett liked his cricket and the fives' court. Recollection is vivid of his invasion of rooms after dinner, where men less vigorous than himself were quietly settling down for the leisure hour with poet or novelist, or other mild recreation; and of his rousing them with the demand to bestir themselves and come out and make up "an eleven." In those hours of relaxation he could forego charms of study and library, and would go in for the breezy walk or exhilarating college sports.

The college career left no misgiving in the minds of tutors or fellow-students as to what kind of position in the ministry Mr. Barrett would take when his day should come. His after-history has not belied the general forecast. He laid good foundations at college; we have to see what, through twenty-five years, he has been building upon those ground-works. He has gone forward, not working intermittently, but keeping on and on—in season, out of season. He is one of the few men who have been able to hold fast to one pastorate through the years.

Princes-street Congregational Church, Norwich, is rich in evangelical traditions. The chapel was opened on its present site in 1820, and the late John Alexander was the first pastor. By some who knew him and his work he has been characterised as apostolic in spirit and zeal. His memory is embalmed and living. Mr. Barrett was called by the church in June, 1866, to succeed Mr. Alexander. His college course did not run out until the next December. By wise consent of the Princes-street Church, he was enabled to remain to the end of the full college term, and so took up the active pastorate in January, 1867.

It is natural to expect that a minister such as he has proved himself to be should form round himself a company of men attracted by capacity and worth. And such men have been about him in the inner circle within the Norwich Church. Mr. Barrett is not slow to own how much the growth of his sphere of ministry is owing to the colleagues who have rallied round him.

Early in his life at Norwich, Mr. Barrett was married to Miss Bower, of New Brighton. The home of husband, wife, and three daughters has played its veiled and sacred part in sustaining our friend's ministry at its high level. The advance the church has made during his pastorate will be seen in several particulars. The "Church Year Book" for 1891 contains over one hundred pages, and is a model of what such a manual should be. It is headed by a sermon of the pastor's. Then follows a timely and plain-spoken address from the deacons to members of the church. A lengthy list of societies and institutions presents opportunities of various kinds of Christian work. "The gifts and calling of God," in respect of every member of that extensive fellowship, have channels of service awaiting all. It forms an inspiring study—the fact that so many are voluntarily at work, and that the work in one church is so varied. Under God, such a condition of things is largely the creation of the minister, and is evidence of faithful use of grace and gifts

During Mr. Barrett's extended pastorate 1368 members have, on their confession of Christ, entered the fellowship of the Princes-street Church. The chapel has been enlarged at a cost of £4000. A splendid set of buildings—comprising Sunday-school, class-rooms, and lecture-hall—show the appreciation of his ministry by his attached people. These buildings have cost no less a sum than fifteen thousand pounds.

The church extended its activities, and Mr. Barrett initiated and fostered "Forward Movements" long before this expression became current. He has been happy in the confidence and co-operation of many who can work, and of the few who can give from affluent resources. At Trowse, a district outside the city, a chapel and schools have been built, at a cost of about £2000. Several village stations also are regularly supplied with preachers. Within the city, at Mariners'-lane, a mission work has gone on, and a building has been adapted for the purpose at a cost of £800. There are three Sunday-schools associated with the church, numbering 1800 scholars and 120 teachers. Prominent among other agencies in vigorous operation may be mentioned the men's night-school, men's Sunday-morning school, and the P.S.A. movement, now numbering at least 1100 in regular attendance.

In authorship Mr. Barrett has given us two books. His work on "The Temptation of Christ" is one of the volumes in the "Household Library of Exposition." He has also compiled a collection of "Family Prayers." As compiler of "The Congregational Church Hymnal," he has placed the churches under a large debt of obligation. The warm approval it has received will ensure for it an important place among hymnals for some time to come. This may also be said for "The Mission Hymnal" and "The Sunday School Hymnal," both of which he took great pains to compile.

It is known that Mr. Barrett has felt it his duty to decline to fill several conspicuous posts of service. He has been approached in more than one instance when pastorates of prominence were vacant. He has, however, not seen his way to sever himself from the Norwich Church, which he has done so much to mould, and which has done so much in moulding him. His latest important refusal has been that of the honour of the secretariat of the Congregational Union of England and Wales.

Mr. Barrett's preaching is evangelical in the best sense of the term. No man is more alive to the highest influences of modern culture, but he utilises all in the service of the evangelical faith. His concern, not in respect of other pulpits only, but of his own, is lest there should be any obscuration of the great doctrines of grace. The theme of his ministry is the apostolic—"Jesus Christ, and Him crucified." Now in his life's prime, and enjoying firm health, Mr. Barrett may look forward to years of work, rich and fruitful even in greater degree than in the years that are behind. By dint of sacred toil he has won that which he possesses—the love of the church he serves, the esteem of the city he lives in, the appreciation and goodwill of his brethren in the ministry of the churches. He is loth to take praise to himself, but as we have looked around on the clustering fruits of his life-work, his desire has been—"God alone be praised!"

The Accuser in Rev. xii.

His be the Victor's name
Who fought our fight alone;
Triumphant saints no honour claim:
His conquest was his own.

He hell in hell laid low;
Made sin, He sin o'erthrew;
Bowed to the grave, destroyed it so;
And death, by dying, slew.

What tho' the accuser roar
Of ills that we have done;
We know them well and thousands more,
JEHOVAH findeth none.

THE following further extracts show that I am supported by weighty authority, even as regards the exposition of the vision of the Man-child and the Accuser:—

Alford writes:—

And there was war in heaven.—We now enter upon a mysterious series of events in the world, with regard to which merely fragmentary hints are given us in the Scriptures. In the Old Testament we find Satan in heaven. In Job i.-ii., he appears before God as the tempter of his saints; in Zech. iii. we have him accusing Joshua, the high priest, in God's presence. Again, our Lord, in Luke x. 18, exclaims, "I beheld Satan as lightning fall from heaven." (Cp. also John xii. 31.) So that this casting down of Satan from the office of accuser in heaven was evidently connected with the justifying work of redemption. His voice is heard before God no more; the day of acceptance in Christ Jesus has just dawned.

Who accuseth.—The present participle of the usual habit, though that his office was now at an end.

So, also, Canon Fausset:—

In Job i.-ii. Satan presents himself among the sons of God, before God in heaven, as accuser of his saints; again in Zech. iii. 1, 2. But at Christ's coming as our Redeemer he fell from heaven, especially when Christ suffered, rose, and ascended to heaven. Christ appearing before God as our advocate (Heb. ix. 24), Satan, the accusing adversary, could no longer appear against us, but was cast out judicially (Rom. viii. 33, 34).

Contrast with "war in heaven" the blessed result of Christ's triumph (Luke xix. 38)—"peace in heaven."

From Christ's ascension he (Satan) has no standing ground against the believing elect (Luke x. 18). "I beheld (in the earnest of the [then] future fulfilment given in the demons' subjection to the disciples) Satan as lightning fall from heaven."

I do not mean to contend that there is no difficulty in the interpretation of Rev. xii., but it is certain that, rightly interpreted, it must be in harmony with all previous Scripture; and, in order to discover the true interpretation, we must proceed from the known to the unknown, and not allow that which we do not know to cast shadows of doubt on that which is ascertained as essential and foundation truth. Speculations on unfulfilled prophecy must not be allowed to discredit the completeness of Christ's work, or the absoluteness and completeness of the believer's justification.

The accusation of the saints under the Old Covenant was a great and terrible reality. It was God, the righteous Judge, who, through them, was virtually accused of unrighteousness. Compare Job i. 10, 11; ii. 5; also Rom. iii. 25, 26. But when Christ was set forth as a propitiation through faith in his blood, God's righteousness was made manifest in having forgiven sins done aforetime; and when Christ entered heaven by his own blood, there was war in heaven in order that, Satan being cast out, there might be peace in heaven for evermore. NOTES FROM MANITOBA.

I WOULD like to thank the friends who have sent, during the past year, so many packages of Christian literature to me for distribution. I would assure every donor that all the literature has been carefully distributed. One young minister, whose station is about twenty-two miles from this town, told me that the copies of THE CHRISTIAN and other papers which I sent him had done him much service in his work this winter.

I have before me a request for assistance from a member of the Women's Christian Temperance Union of Calgary, North-West Territory. She writes that the object of the members of that union is to try to rescue drunkards, if possible, by the influence of prayer and the distribution of literature. They have a number of W.C.T.U. boxes in the Mounted Police Barracks, C. P. Railway Station, &c., and as money for such a purpose is hard to raise, they would be very thankful for contributions of literature from any who wish to help this work in the North-West. Parcels addressed to Mrs. S. Parrish, Women's Christian Temperance Union, Calgary, North-West Territory, Canada, would arrive safely at their destination, and would be an encouragement to these women in their labour of love amidst the difficulties of such work in a new country.

The evangelists, Messrs. Hunter and Crossley, are at present engaged in a series of revival meetings in this town. The ministers of the Presbyterian, Methodist, Baptist, and Congregational churches assist at these meetings, which are crowded nightly, the presence of many young men being a marked feature of the attendance. What a happy thing it will be for those who come to make a home in our new country if on first setting foot in Brandon they decide to "seek first the kingdom of God and his righteousness"!

The Y.M.C.A. is doing a fine work here. The able secretary, Mr. George Fleming, has resided here but a few months, yet much has been done in that time to put the Y.M.C.A. in good working order. Pleasant rooms have been furnished with the help of the W.C.T.U., a good library and reading-room, supplied with an organ, offer their attractions to the many young men who are new-comers, or to those whose home is a crowded boarding-house. All now that is needed to complete the excellent design of those interested in the welfare of the young men who seek this country is money to build and equip an institution that may compete in some measure with some of the many gilded traps of Satan, which abound here as elsewhere, and which never lack for funds to equip them for their evil work. We have many loving, prayerful, hard-working members of Christ here. Will the readers of this paper join in prayer with them for the help of God in their work of laying the foundations of this new country in righteousness?—Yours faithfully, (Mrs.) ANNIE DAVIDSON.

The Young Abstainers' Union.

LAST week the twelfth annual meeting of this Union was held in the Portman Rooms. The chair was taken by Sir Arthur Blackwood, who was compelled to leave soon after his opening address, and was succeeded in the chair by Mr. A. C. P. Coote.

The secretary, Miss G. BANNERMAN, read the report, which showed increased effort on the part of the branches.

The PRESIDENT having dwelt pathetically upon the lack of funds, Dr. RIDGE spoke upon the medical aspects of the Total Abstinence question. Rev. W. R. MOWLL gave a short and exceedingly interesting address, which was much appreciated. Mr. Coote, Mr. Raper, Mr. E. Hooper, and a Member from the Beckenham Branch, brought the speaking to a close.

THE "REVIEW OF THE CHURCHES" REUNION CONFERENCE.

SIR,—Many of your readers are probably aware that an important series of meetings will be held this summer at Grindelwald with the object of promoting Christian re-union. These gatherings will be attended by prominent representatives of the Church of England, the Presbyterians, the Congregationalists, the Baptists, and the Methodists, and it is fervently hoped that the discussions may not be merely theoretic, but may lead up to some definite practical issue. The promoters of this Conference feel that existing divisions are a source of danger to our common Christianity, and contribute grievously to the spread of unbelief. They, therefore, are most anxious that there should not only be much profitable intercourse between men of different schools of thought at the approaching Conferences and social gatherings, but that under the guidance of the wisdom which is from above, such practical suggestions may be presented as may definitely contribute to the healing of our divisions and the removal of all unnecessary barriers that now lie in the way of "Godly Union and Concord."

Feeling that this end can only be attained by the guidance and controlling influences of the Holy Spirit, we ask leave through you to invite, and indeed to implore, the earnest prayers of all Christian people on this behalf. That these may be offered unitedly, perseveringly, and as with one heart and voice, we venture to suggest that this object should be specially interceded for at our private and public devotions on the first Sunday mornings in June, July, August, and September. Earnestly commending this suggestion to the consideration of all who have at heart the great objects for which our Divine Master pleaded so fervently just before His Passion, we beg to subscribe ourselves,

Your obedient servants,

(Church of England)—Nelson, J. J. S. Worcester, W. Hay M. H. Aitken, W. Barker, A. R. Buckland, F. W. Farrar, W. H. Fremantle, H. Armstrong Hall, Basil Wilberforce.

(Church of Ireland)—H. Kingsmill Moore, G. T. Stokes.

(Presbyterian)—Marcus Dods, J. M. Gibson.

(Congregational)—Alfred Cave, Robert F. Horton, Alexander Mackennal, J. Guinness Rogers.

(Baptist)—C. F. Aked, J. Clifford.

PRAYER FOR REVIVAL.

THE meeting which is held every Monday afternoon at two o'clock in the Y.M.C.A. Rooms, Aldersgate-street, E.C., to pray for a definite and widespread revival of the work of God, maintains its place, and deepens in interest from week to week.

The numbers have perhaps somewhat suffered through the claims of the great religious anniversaries. Yet the intensity of earnestness manifested last Monday was unmistakable. The special features seemed to be the need of the convicting Spirit to search the hearts alike of ministers and people, and of Christian watchfulness in preparation for the Divine Spirit's cleansing and endowment.

Ministers of all denominations, and the male members of their congregations, assembled in London at this season, are invited to note the place and hour of meeting, and to take part in this priceless privilege of waiting upon God for the outpouring of his Spirit from on high.

An opportunity is afforded from time to time for brief testimony as to what the Lord is accomplishing by his grace in various directions. Will all friends of Christ's Kingdom join in this movement, either personally or in spirit, until prayer is answered and the promised blessing in abundance is vouchsafed?

INDIANS AND PRAYER.—Bishop Ridley, of the North Pacific Mission, had a severe illness at the beginning of the year, and has been ordered home by the doctor. He gives, in a letter in the May Intelligencer, the following illustration of the love in which he is held by the Christians of Methakahtla, which touched him deeply:—"When the Indians were no longer allowed to see me, they met every afternoon in the church for special prayer on my behalf. Men and women prayed in succession, eight or nine at each meeting. They did not tell our missionary party of it, but accidentally the latter heard of it. I saw Mrs. Ridley slip out of the room every afternoon, and heard her leave the house. Curiosity led me to inquire the meaning of it. Then I learnt of their love for me. I knew it was there before, but not to this affecting extent. I suppose I was weak at the time, which accounts for the narrow escape I had from tears. It was some time before I recovered from the melting mood. No pastor at home could be better loved, I think!"

THE "MAY" MEETINGS.

YOUNG MEN IN THE CITY.

For close on half a century the Y.M.C.A. in London has been providing "a home away from home" for those of its young men as need such help. Their name is legion, and if only a certain proportion of them have taken advantage of the boon, that has not been the fault of the Association. Forty-eight years of constant service is a long and honourable record; and the sum total of the good that has been done, in London alone, by this institution can never be weighed or measured by human hands. There were many circumstances of interest about the anniversary gatherings of the old Aldersgate-street branch last Thursday. As the custom now is, the whole day was given up to the annual assemblies. At noon a special address was given by Dr. A. T. Pierson in the familiar lecture-hall, where the daily prayer-meeting has its habitation. The lordly Egyptian Hall of the Mansion House was well filled for the principal gathering in the late afternoon; and in the evening another meeting was held at Aldersgate-street, specially intended for the young men themselves.

DR. PIERSON'S ADDRESS

at the noon meeting was, like himself, fresh and all alive. He remarked on the significance of a half-century period in the history of the modern world, especially such a half-century of marvellous progress as the last one has been. He regarded the Y.M.C.A. as perhaps the most significant offspring of the fifty years. Then he paid a tribute of personal testimony to the value of the Association. He had been received into the New York branch at the early age of fourteen, and he owed much to the influence there brought to bear upon him. He also spoke feelingly of the good results he had seen through its agency in the lives of other young men thrown into the midst of the business whirl and the seductive amusements of a great city.

The main part of the Doctor's address was an interesting amplification of these three great purposes which, in his opinion, the Y.M.C.A. has served. (1) It has been a striking instance of charity versus bigotry, in bringing toge her those of differing ecclesiastical view. (2) It has been a channel of instruction to young men in the Word of God, and the power to use that Word for the good of others. (3) It has been a great vehicle for the evangelisation of the young men in our populous communities. Mr. George Williams was the chairman of the meeting, and his presence afforded a text for some cordial references by the speaker to the leading part he has played in the history of the Association.

THE MANSION HOUSE MEETING

was fairly well attended. The attractions of the gathering were more than up to the usual mark; if the presence of Mr. Sankey had been included in the ticket announcements, doubtless there would have been an overflowing house. The Lord Mayor was unable to grace the occasion with his presence, but the Lady Mayoress was there, drawn, we believe, by the renown of our singing friend from over the sea. Mr. George Williams duly filled the chair, and the place of Canon Fleming as a speaker (detained at home by illness) was taken, at the shortest notice, by Dr. Pierson. The singing of some lady members of the Norwood College for the Blind was a great source of interest, and deservedly so. Mr. Sankey was in fine form, and his massive voice rang through the lofty auditorium of the Egyptian Hall with telling effect. With the assistance of several friends, he sang a new setting of "Rock of Ages," and later on the well-known "Throw out the Life-line."

The secretarial report, briefly set forth by Mr. Robert Burn, was full of interesting facts, encouraging figures, and telling testimonies to the value of the Association. He was able to record a membership at Aldersgate-street of 1157, besides 788 associates and 350 young students, who are not more closely related to the institution. The usual agencies for meeting the social, mental, moral, and spiritual needs of young men had been in full and successful operation through the year. Mr. Burn incidentally commented on the great increase within recent years in the wealth of the City of London, as shown by Income Tax receipts; he represented that the work of the Association on behalf of young men gave it a far greater claim on the generosity of the City merchants than had been yet recognised. The balance-sheet submitted by Mr. Burn was so far gratifying as to show that the receipts for the year had exceeded the expenditure; though this was due, it must be said, to extra donations by the Chairman and others. An old deficit still stands on the books of the Association, and at the date of the meeting the exchequer was nearly £900 to the bad. There is plenty of scope, therefore, for the exercise of practical sympathy on the part of the friends of City young men.

In a short address the Chairman referred to some of the many advantages that accrue to business young men from connection with the Association; on this point, as a large employer of the class catered for, he could speak authoritatively. He rejoiced in the continued growth of the work during the past forty-eight years; from a very small beginning, it has now developed into 4416 Associations, with a membership of nearly 400,000 in all parts of the world.

In an excellent speech Rev. F. W. Macdonald managed to combine brightness and solidity. He described some recent Y.M.C.A. experiences at Salt Lake City, and with the members of a Chinese branch at Vancouver, showing how the institution is taking hold even on the newest and latest outposts of our restless civilisation. A very warm tribute was paid to the worth of the Y.M.C.A. as a guide and monitor to young men removed from the hallowed influences of home life. Speaking of his own early experience, when studying for the profession of the law (which he afterwards exchanged for the Gospel), Mr. Macdonald said he was greatly helped and strengthened by being a member of a Christian Church, and in the full tide of its work; by having good companions; and by the love of profitable and instructive books. He gave some excellent counsel on intellectual culture, expressing a fervent desire that goodness of moral character should achieve its proper results by being wedded to the highest intellectual development. The interesting fact was told by the speaker, that when a young man he committed a great part of the New Testament to memory as he walked day by day along Oxford-street. A course of study in English literature, though very good, could, of course, be no substitute for the acquisition of Christian principles and habits.

As the last speaker, Dr. Pierson was brief, pointed, and pithy. After a few pleasantries as to his cosmopolitan experiences, he enlarged on the intrinsic worth of the young man to the society of the present and the future. Satan understands this well, and is lavish in planting his well baited hooks to catch the City young man in hours of leisure. Taking up a point that had been emphasized by the chairman, he showed what a period of special peril is that of young manhood, and the need there is for special safeguards and helps. Dr. Pierson laid stress on the value of the Y.M.C.A. as an upholder of a high moral standard in personal and business ethics, and also as enabling the qualities lacking in one character to be complemented by others.

A few words of testimony were spoken by Rev. Thomas Richardson, of Stepney, and there were the customary votes of thanks to the Lord Mayor, the Chairman, speakers, and singers. Mr. Robert Paton, in moving one of the votes, pleaded strenuously for a building adequate to the work and needs of the Association in the City. Mr. Thomas Knight also made an earnest plea for better financial support.

INDIA'S WOMEN.

It is to this vast and peculiarly needy section of the people of our great Eastern dependency that the Zenana Bible and Medical Mission devotes its attention. A most excellent work it is doing, though its staff is comparatively small, and its resources far too restricted. Its operations and its needs were vividly brought to view at the annual meeting in Princes' Hall, Picadilly, on Wednesday evening last week. Mr. Cavalier's secretarial statement supplied the facts and figures necessary to convey an intelligent idea of the work. The speeches of Dr. Pentecost and Mr. Everard were capital commentaries on these facts; and the closing words of Lord Reay, the Chairman, must have charmed every one by the hearty tone and the evident interest they showed his lordship to possess in the Christianising of India.

Last year's Indian census (said Rev. A. R. Cavalier) puts the present population of India at 287,000,000; about a hundred years ago it was only 150,000,000. In ruling India we have taken steps for the preservation of life, but we have allowed the people to grow up in heathenism and superstition; so that there is more heathendom in the land to-day than at any previous stage of its history. Female education is still in the background. While there are more than thirty-eight million girls under fifteen years of age, only some 313,000 of these are under instruction in all India. Such facts show the great field that exists for the work of this society. It has but forty-seven English lady missionaries, with twenty-six assistants, and 203 native helpers. Mr. Cavalier gave some details of the hospital work—a very important branch. Last year a new hospital was opened at Lucknow, in memory of the late Lady Kinnaird, and a new medical mission was established at Patna. As to the general work of the Society, it was stated that there had been gratifying progress. A great stimulus had been given to the workers by the recent visit of the Hon. Misses Kinnaird. There is great need, however, of additional help in the school work, and for the extension of the organisation to destitute parts of India. Mr. Cavalier spoke of one district in the North West Provinces, having a population of four and three-quarter millions, and only two ladies at work. The unsectarian character of the work is evidenced by the fact that the Mission is in direct co-operation with eight different missionary societies.

As Finance Secretary, Mr. W. T. Paton had to report an income of £16,687 odd; but there was at the close of the year a deficit of £1560 on the general fund. Last year considerable sums were spent on buildings, and this may have diverted gifts from the work itself. Mr. Paton called for a generous inflow of help, so that the operations may be developed in some degree proportionate to the great need.

After a somewhat irrelevant speech from Rev. H. C. Squires, of the C.M.S., of Bombay,

Dr. Pentecost gave a powerful testimony as to what he had seen of the Society's operations during his recent sojourn in India. If we could only realise the results, he said, that are accruing among the women of India, it would inspire us to enthusiasm and lead us to quadruple the funds and multiply the workers tenfold. The hospital and medical work is creating a profound impression upon the educated men of India. They are constrained to admit that such practical illustrations of charity and kindness were quite unknown before Christianity came. The hospitals are being crowded to the door with those who are willing to be ministered to in soul as well as in body. The effects of such Christian teaching and treatment are seen all through the land. One can easily distinguish a Christian woman or a Christian home. Dr. Pentecost said he went to India having a good deal of enthusiasm about missions; but after seventeen months' experience there, he had come back a thousandfold more enthusiastic than before. He had a good deal that was very cheering to say about the school work, and its results on the young womanhood of India. By way of illustration, he told of a visit to one of the heathen temples, where so many native girls are dedicated to a life of shame. At this temple, by the influence of Christianity, the number of these young heathen priestesses have been reduced from three hundred to thirty. During this visit of Dr. Pentecost and his party they sang an English hymn, and a girl of about fourteen standing among the priestesses was observed to be showing great interest. A young lady in the party sang a verse of a Marathi hymn, in which this native girl joined. "My child, do you know that?" "Yes; and I can sing the rest of it." It transpired that she had been six months in one of the Zenana schools, and had been afterwards thrust into this vile place by her parents. The moment she heard the song that told of the love of Jesus, her heart was stirred again. All over India there are hundreds of thousands of girls who have passed through the Mission schools, and are being planted in native homes. They may not have professed the Christian faith, but the seeds of it have been sown in their young hearts. That could not have been done but for these Christian women, who have gathered the children into the schools and taught them the truths of the Gospel. Many of the Zenana workers are greatly overworked, and this fact ought to come as a trumpet-call to the many Christian young women in England and America who are languishing for want of some definite work to do. In closing his address, Dr. Pentecost suggested that if some of those who went to winter in the Riviera at great expense would pay a visit to India, as the Misses Kinnaird had done, they would be so delighted with what they saw that seven out of every ten would probably stay there.

In a very warmhearted speech, Rev. George Everard, of Dover, recited some of his experiences and observations of Zenana work during a recent three months' visit to India. He told of the conversion of a fakir or wandering girl, who is now anxious to devote her life to going from place to place telling the people of the Gospel that has done so much for her. At a conference in Benares, at which he was present, some sixty or seventy Christian ladies came together to consider how they could better carry the Gospel into the dark places of India. Mr. Everard suggested, as a means of helping the workers there, that friends at home should take advantage of the cheap book postage to India, and send occasionally a copy of some good and stimulating book to the Christian women toiling there among their benighted Indian sisters.

Last of all came a speech from the Chairman, Lord Reay. He said the work of the Society was one that needed to be handled with great care. One cannot do much in India by working on the emotional feelings. In certain sections of Indian society, at all events, we have to deal with the subtlest intellects that the world ever saw. At the same time we do not forget that there is a power needed greater than that of any human intellect—the power of the Spirit of God, who enlightens the intellect as well as the spirit. In referring to the report, which he said he had perused with feelings of encouragement, Lord Reay spoke of the spread of female education among the Hindus. Now that the sons are being highly trained great difficulty is experienced in finding suitable wives for them. This pertains not only in the British territory, but in the purely native States, the chiefs of which are recognising this need. His lordship spoke in high terms of the medical mission work of the Society, and urged the wives of those in the civil and military service in India to do all they can in encouraging its work. He expressed in no unstinted terms his personal indebtedness to the work of Indian missionaries, and declared that if it were not for the help rendered by them the government of India by this country would be almost impossible.

THE BAPTIST MISSIONARY SOCIETY.

The public meeting was held in Exeter Hall on Thursday evening, Lord Reay, K.C.S.I., late Governor of Bombay, presiding.

Mr. A. H. Baynes said that the practice of reading the report, already printed and in the members' hands, had happily been abolished, so far as that society was concerned. He would, therefore, note briefly a few of the leading items. One hundred years ago William Carey wrote to Andrew Fuller:—

"How long will it be, I wonder, before the Christian Church shall adequately realise her high privilege and solemn responsibility to send the blessed Gospel of the grace of God to every creature?"

Nearly one hundred years have passed since the Apostle of Modern Missions penned these words. What has the Christian Church done during the century just closing for the great enterprise of Foreign Missions? A month before Carey wrote this to Mr. Fuller the Baptist Missionary Society had been formed at Kettering. In 1795, three years later, the London Missionary Society was born; five years later, in 1800, the Church Missionary Society; and in 1816 the Wesleyan Missionary Society was fully organised. On the other side of the Atlantic, in 1796, the New York Missionary Society was established; in 1799, the Connecticut and Massachusetts Missionary Societies, a few years later, in 1810, the Missions of the American Board were commenced, and in 1814 the Missions of the American Baptist Missionary Union. To-day there are nearly one hundred Missionary Societies in Great Britain, Europe, the United States, and Canada, reporting 7921 missionaries (male and female), 40,083 native workers, and 726,883 communicants. Moreover, the present point marks a new departure in Missions. Doors are open as never before, the cry for more labourers sound on every hand, the churches are awaking, forward movements are being made by nearly all the societies.

As to the work of the Society, much encouragement has been granted in India, China, Africa, the West Indies, and other fields, including Orissa and Italy, formerly worked by the General Baptist Society, now united to the Baptist Missionary Society.

Mr. W. R. Rickett presented a statement showing income £69,125, and expenditure £74,935, making, when the debt from the previous year is added, a deficiency of £15,873, which it is intended to liquidate out of the Special Centenary Thanksgiving Fund.

The Chairman rejoiced in the fusion of the two societies just referred to, inasmuch as division greatly hindered the progress of the Gospel among the heathen. Passing on, he urged strongly the importance of giving missionaries a special training, and not least in the systems they will have to meet in India and elsewhere. For unlearned men full of power and zeal there is a great demand for evangelisation among the masses and in the villages; but besides these the highest gifts and attainments are also needed. With special reference to India, with which he was familiar, Lord Reay dwelt on the immensity of the field, the variety of the people, the present ferment and awakening, and the remarkable way in which Christian thought and feeling are penetrating all classes in that great empire.

Rev. J. Lawson Forfeitt, F.R.G.S., followed, telling in quiet, earnest tones of life among the naked savages of the Congo region. His description of the horrors of the slave trade and the wickedness of the liquor traffic must have thrilled every heart; while his stories of the cruelties inflicted by the natives themselves on their fellows through the fetish system were heartrending. Among such some years ago a few noble men ventured bearing the Gospel tidings; many have fallen, but others have stepped forward. A chain of stations now extends twelve hundred miles from the coast to the upper reaches of the Congo, while the Balolo Mission and the Swedish Mission carries the chain still further; and though much of the work has been of a pioneer nature, God has given not a little blessing, the tokens of coming showers. If this seemed to any a vast undertaking he would say all that is needed is the replenishment of the stores of faith, hope, and love Here is a work grand and glorious enough to suit the most enthusiastic among us.

Rev. C. Sylvester Horne spoke as a young man to young men standing at the dawn of the second century of missions, and believing that the past century has but paved the way for grander efforts now to be undertaken.

Rev. Arthur Sowerby spoke of the work in Shan-si as one of promise rather than of performance. In other provinces God had given much fruit, but in Shan-si the work was as yet mainly that of seed-sowing. Yet he was full of hope. Because he had been in the darkness, because he had learned what heathen darkness meant, because he had seen something of the forces of darkness, he knew that victory was to come. These forces are terrible, but while they are potent they are not omnipotent, and God will yet win the day. The speaker, however, reserved his most burning tones and terms for the opium traffic and its results, telling how full oft he had returned from some opium victim's home in a perfect agony of shame and horror that Christian England should so curse pagan China. Still in the midst of all this entrance was being gained, and those who a few years ago refused to hear, now come and beg to be taught "the Jesus doctrine."

BAPTIST YOUNG MEN'S MISSIONARY ASSOCIATION.

Mr. H. M. Bompas, Q.C., who presided at the Young Men's Meeting, concluded a stirring address by urging that there were at present no fewer than seventy or eighty millions of people in Africa who had never heard Christ's name, and that another million died every month in China in a similarly sad position. If we are to get back to anything like the spirit of Christ, we must wake up to the feeling that our duty is to give ourselves entirely to Christ's service.

Rev. B. Baring-Gould, of the C.M.S., said he believed that ninety-nine out of every hundred Christian people in England had not the shadow of an idea of the horrors of heathendom. Many of the temples, for instance, in India were often used for immoral purposes. Out of six hundred native newspapers there, all were hostile to Christianity. The Free Thought depôt in Madras contained 124 separate works, of which thirty-four were written by Bradlaugh, nineteen by Mrs. Besant, sixteen by Ingersol, and others by Paine and Voltaire. In conclusion, he urged his hearers to do their utmost to impregnate society with a sense of the absolute duty devolving upon every Christian to promote the cause of foreign missions.

Rev. A. T. Pierson, D.D., in the course of an eloquent plea for personal service, said that they stood to-day with the Christian Church behind them, forty million strong in Evangelical Church members, and with the whole world open before them as a field for mission work. Those forty million Protestant Church members represented the ruling forces of the world, and the balance of power was, therefore, in their hands. What was the Church of God doing in the matter of foreign missionary effort? Let them realise that every second of time meant a soul passed into the unseen, for the most part without hope in Christ. He believed that if the Church of Jesus Christ were only to mass her forces and utilise her materials, every soul in this world would, within twenty-five years from the present time, have heard the Gospel.

BAPTIST ZENANA MISSION.

The ladies' annual breakfast was held on Wednesday morning in the Cannon-street Hotel, Mr. W. R. Rickett presiding. Miss Angus presented the report, showing twenty-two stations, fifty-four lady workers, 160 native Bible women, and sixty-four girls' schools. The village work is also going on remarkably well. After addresses by the Chairman, Dr. Underhill, and Mr. A. H. Baynes,

Miss Rose Greenfield, who spoke of the hospital at Ludhiana, where there are sixteen beds nearly always occupied, and where much real and valuable work is doing.

Three ladies were introduced—Miss Gleazer, Miss Pike, and Miss Bergin—on the eve of their departure from England for Zenana work in India. Mr. Baynes remarked that three missionaries were being sent, but they needed three hundred. Were there not present any who were touched with a deep feeling of sympathy for their Hindoo sisters, and who would consecrate themselves to the enterprise? At any rate, there were many people who could well afford to pay for a missionary's maintenance, and if they could not go themselves, why not have a proxy?

Rev. E. Medley, B.A., said the Zenana Mission moved along the lines of nature and common sense. Its desire was that India should be brought to the feet of Jesus, and one of the best ways of securing the object was to begin with the women—to work more particularly amongst them. Could any Gospel be adopted and make progress if it was not for the women as much as the men? Then more should be done for the women themselves; more lady missionaries should be found. There were some at home who had a sense of toil, and young hearts that were suffering that process of dissolution which was part of the Divine training for, it might be, glorious future service.

BAPTIST HOME MISSIONS.

At the annual meeting of this association for the support of work in country towns and villages, held last week in Portman-rooms, Rev. E. B. Woods, speaking on "Extension or Extinction," said that the coming struggle, both in town and country, was going to be between Evangelicalism on one side and sacerdotalism on the other. He held it to be the duty of every Evangelical teacher of religion in this land to utter a protest against the growing sacerdotalism rife in country and town. How was it to be done? Not by violence or indiscriminate abuse, but rather by proclaiming loudly and clearly the great truths of their religion. Another great difficulty they had in the village districts was the reckless multiplication of chapels. Then, again, he thought that the wiser course for their village churches to adopt was that their membership should be open, and not closed. They wanted to devise means whereby the different types of mind in country congregations would feel perfectly at home amongst them.

Rev. W. F. Clarkson spoke on the work of village churches in the economy of our church-life, showing that one of the greatest difficulties was the continual drain of young and vigorous life from country to town.

Rev. W. J. Mathams followed with an address on work in the cities, dealing with the difficulties of getting hold of the working-men, and suggesting that something should be done for those out of work.

WESLEYAN MISSIONARY SOCIETY.

Notwithstanding the rather unfavourable weather, there was a large and influential meeting at Exeter Hall on Monday, on the occasion of the annual meeting of the Wesleyan Missionary Society. Friends from far and near assembled, and the proceedings were characterised by much of the enthusiasm which is so pleasantly associated with Methodist gatherings. An abstract of the report was presented by Rev. F. W. Macdonald, secretary of the Society. The returns for the year showed increase under almost every head.

With regard to the troubles in China, nothing that has taken place has quenched the spirit or damped the zeal of the workers; their confidence in God and devotion to their mission remain unchanged. Not "perils among the heathen," but the lack of adequate support in their work, and the consciousness of being cramped and hindered through want of means, has been their greatest trial. In South Africa the territory of Mashonaland is to be added to the field in which the operations of the Society are proceeding under the care of the South African Conference. The claims of India become more and more urgent year by year. The preparatory stage of the Society's work in that land has passed, and the first-fruits have been gathered; the promise of a large harvest is unmistakable, and the time for a bold advance has come. The work in France, Germany, and Italy is in the midst of sceptical and superstitious populations, and though directed by Englishmen is essentially native in its ministry. More constant and pressing than the want of funds is the need of men separated unto the Gospel of God and meet for the Master's use. The year's expenditure was £4000 more than the income, and inasmuch as there was a large deficit at the beginning of the year, Mr. Macdonald urged the importance of enlarged support. He appealed for a ten per cent. increase in the gifts to the work. The suggestion was well received, and if practically adopted next year's report will be still more encouraging.

Mr. J. R. Hill, of York, who occupied the chair, delivered a speech pitched in the true missionary key. He said he looked forward to the time when merchants and others will settle around missionary stations in foreign lands, exhibiting the beauties of Christianity in their daily life, and being "living epistles, known and read of all men." After an appeal to young people to open their eyes to the opportunities before them, he asked the Methodists to live up to their theology and hymnology. I tremble, he said, as I sing some of our hymns of consecration. Let us try to turn our Holiness Conventions into action, and translate our talking and experience into service and gifts. I cannot conceive a church singing our hymns, and allowing the missionary cause to languish.

Rev. Dr. Stephenson, President of the Wesleyan Methodist Conference, in a vigorous address, declared that the subject of missions had of late been a burden on his mind. He rejoiced in the remarkable successes which are attending the work, and read figures showing the great increase in church membership in several countries. Gratitude for past and present blessing should inspire courage to fresh effort. God is challenging his people to go forward. The proposed ten per cent. increase would go far towards sending out twenty more European missionaries, and providing two hundred more native agents. He fervently called upon the Methodist people throughout the country to sink differences of opinion, and unite to send forward the work, which, in the immediate future, must be more and more evangelistic.

Rev. Dr. Jenkins spoke on India. It was his subject on the same platform thirty-six years ago when he addressed a meeting as a missionary on furlough. Knowing India when asleep under the dominion of the East India Company, and acquainted with her condition in more recent times, he drew some striking contrasts, and asked his hearers to look forward to yet greater spiritual victories. The pre-eminent power in India to-day is Christianity, which is sinking into the mind and heart of the country. He maintained that anything short of the conditions of progress is a measure of retirement from the field, and he called for renewed interest in and devotion to the great cause.

Other speakers were Mr. W. Oulton, of Liverpool; Rev. David Hill from China; and Rev. William Goudie, from India. The meeting adopted with much warmth a resolution declaring that "the progress of missions in India, the past successes and recent troubles in China, together with the opportunities afforded by the opening up of Africa, call for a prompt and vigorous advance in missionary enterprise, and for increased liberality and devotion on the part of the home churches."

TRINITARIAN BIBLE SOCIETY.

There was a goodly gathering of friends of the Trinitarian Bible Society in the Exeter Lower Hall on Tuesday evening last week, on the occasion of the annual general meeting, over which Mr. J. E. Mathieson presided with hearty sympathy.

Rev. Dr. Bullinger, Secretary of the Society, read extracts from a very interesting report, which set forth the high aims and principles of the Society, and also described its recent operations. Taking English and foreign scriptures together, there had been a total circulation of 382,362 Bibles, New Testaments, and portions. Grants were made to over sixty societies, institutions, and Christian workers in various parts of the world.

Amongst the most important items in the report was the announcement that the new Massoretic text of the Hebrew Bible is in so forward a state that the present year may see its publication. Scholars everywhere will welcome this long-desired edition of the Old Testament in the original tongue. Another great undertaking is the Hebrew-German Bible, to meet the demands of the millions of Jews who are unable to read with intelligence and profit in any other language or character. The Hebrew-German New Testament is coming out in parts; and further editions of Salkinson's Hebrew New Testament have brought the circulation of that remarkable version up to a total of 212,000 copies. These have been for the most part distributed by the agents and friends of the Mildmay Mission to the Jews. The report remarked upon the significant fact that, side by side with this New Testament work, which is rapidly taking out "the remnant according to the election of grace," there is a gathering of "scattered" Israel from among the nations of the earth, for the colonisation of desolate Palestine.

Bible work in Brittany has proceeded with encouraging results, and there have been invitations from all parts for such as can instruct the people in the Book, which they are now reading, for the first time. A new door has also been opened in India among Portuguese Papists, who have seceded from the Church of Rome after a long struggle to retain ancient rights of patronage, of which, at length, they were deprived through Jesuit influence. During recent months, 11,950 Bibles, Testaments, and portions were sent for distribution among the ten thousand secessionists, who have endured much persecution from Rome, and are now open to evangelistic effort. After detailing other work at home and abroad, the report closed with thanks to God for an increase in the number of open doors, also in support to the Society, and in the number of auxiliaries, and of copies of Scripture circulated.

Rev. Charles Stirling, Vicar of New Malden, declared his continued interest in the work carried on by the Society. He spoke of the "higher" criticism as the "basest," and urged greater faith in the Word and increased faithfulness in disseminating it. Rev. Edward Clarke, of Spezia, told of the power of the written Word as he had seen it during a long period in Italy. Dr. C. Y. Biss followed with an appeal to Christian people to sustain and promote the growth of the work. The last speaker was Mr. George Parker, for fourteen years missionary in China. The proceedings were characterised by earnestness of purpose throughout.

MIDNIGHT MEETING MOVEMENT.

The thirty-second annual meeting was held on Friday evening in Exeter Hall, the Council Room being well filled. The chair was taken by Major Evered Poole.

The report read by Mr. J. H. L. Christien, with the balance sheet by Mr. Edward W. Thomas, showed that during the year forty-four meetings had been held. The chief localities, north, south, east, and west, in which the work is proceeding, together with that in the parks and some of the haunts of the most abandoned, were well sketched. Cordial reference was made to the assistance given by the late Rev. C. H. Spurgeon who, last year, had permitted a week's mission to be held in the lower rooms of the Metropolitan Tabernacle. The meetings in connection with it were well attended by poor girls from all parts of London. It was added that the work has now extended to the provinces, good meetings having been held at Ashton-under-Lyne, Chester, Rochdale, and Hertford. Including a loan of £200 from bankers, the income was stated at £1030.

The Chairman said this Mission was second to none in importance of all the great missionary agencies whose anniversaries were about to be held. Some, it is true, were appalled at the hopelessness of the task, but he asked them all to remember that those who followed their Divine Master in descending to the lowest depths in their efforts to save the lost would by-and-by ascend highest in the realms of glory.

Mrs. Evered Poole, in moving the adoption of the report, which expressed regret at the loss by death of so many of the earlier friends of the society, specially pressed the claims of the work upon Christian mothers. Some were indignant at the mere hint that their sons would ever be among the supporters of the social evil, but the newspapers showed only too clearly the grief and shame into which some of the most respectable families were plunged. The speaker earnestly appealed for a large Christian sympathy to be extended to a society which was fighting a hard fight, but achieving many victories. Mr. S. Bourne and Mr. Drysdale were also among the speakers.

PALESTINE MEDICAL MISSIONS.

For some years the Church of England Women's Missionary Association has been labouring on behalf of ignorant, suffering, and neglected women and children in the Holy Land, sending out trained nurses, and carrying on medical mission work in Jerusalem, Hebron, Sidon, and many villages. The annual meeting of this Mission, held on Monday afternoon in Princes' Hall, was unfortunately attended by but few, and we could not help thinking that if the real nature of the work were fully understood a greater public interest would be shown.

Rev. T. H. Sparshott read, on behalf of Mrs. Meredith, a statement showing that the work hitherto done had been largely carried on by ladies who went out at their own cost; now, however, the need had become urgent for more paid workers. During the past year a useful work carried on by three ladies at Baakleen in the Lebanon had been handed over to the Association. This involved a new dispensary, the cost of which (£221) has already been raised. The headquarters of the work in Palestine is the Jerusalem Deaconess House, while ladies also reside at Hebron and Sidon. From these centres village visitation is carried on by nurses and Bible-women. A special effort is being made to send out this year ten extra nurses and two doctors, Turkish law necessitating the oversight of doctors possessing a diploma counter-signed at Constantinople. For this extension £3000 are required. Full details may be had of Miss Lloyd, 143, Clapham-road, S.W.

A financial statement was presented by Mr. E. E. Waterfield, after which

Rev. Canon M'Cormick, who presided, spoke of the awakening as to missions to the Jews, medical missions, and women's work. All these were represented in the Palestine Medical Mission for Women. The Jews are flocking back to their ancient land, there being now at least 125,000 in Palestine, and amongst these, godly and skilful women find entrance for the Gospel while ministering to the sick and suffering.

Mr. J. J. Bourne, of the C.M.S. Committee, expressed the interest felt by the committee in the work these ladies are doing so usefully and well in Palestine.

Rev. J. S. Pratt gave an outline of the condition of things among the Moslem peasantry in the East. In reaching them many difficulties have to be faced, but these ministering women win their way in a marvellous manner.

Rev. Campbell Colquhoun reviewed the action of Turkish law, and showed why doctors were needed as well as nurses.

Miss Lloyd gave a further account of the work in towns and villages; while Miss Bowyer, just returned from the East, described a day's work at Hebron, in the dispensary and in visiting sick women at home. As a rule she had met with a kind reception, only once having been treated to a shower of small stones. Various incidents were given to show that while few dared to make open profession, the simple truth was winning its way to hearts long blinded by prejudice.

MRS. SMYLY'S WORK IN DUBLIN.

God is working among the six hundred children commi ted to our care in the Homes for Boys and Girls, the Bird's Nest, Elliott Home and Helping Hand Home, and also among the seven hundred little "Town Sparrows" in daily attendance at the Mission Schools. These thirteen hundred children are learning God's Word and receiving a good education fitting them for useful life by-and-by.

A few instances of the result of the work may interest our friends.

A Roman Catholic brought his only son, a nice lad of eleven years of age, to the Boys' Home to beg of us to admit him, saying he would be glad to pay for him. On being asked why he wished to put his boy in a Protestant School he said, "He has been attending a Roman Catholic school, but he is learning idle habits and bad words; and I hear such a good account of the boys of this Home, I long to have my only child well brought up." The man seemed so earnest, we could not refuse him. After a while, the boy learnt to know and love the Lord Jesus. He was often allowed to go home to see his father. As time went on, the poor man lost his health. During his illness he used to delight in reading the Bible. He died a happy Christian, trusting only in the finished work of Jesus. In the sorrow of losing his father, whom he dearly loved, it was a joy to know he had been made the means of leading him to Jesus.

After one of our tea-meetings in the Helping Hand Home, a tall, ragged lad waited. He said he had nowhere to sleep; that he had been turned out of his employment as messenger on account of attending some of the controversial classes. We got him a lodging and let him attend the daily school. He learnt quickly, spending his recreation time in studying his Bible. He became a true Christian and a valued helper in the Home. He has been for more than seven years servant in a Christian family.

There is much blessed fruit from the visiting. The houses in the back lanes and alleys are diligently visited by our Mission workers. From room to room the visitors go, inviting the children to the schools, and the men and women to the evening meetings.

The open-air work in fairs and markets in the country parts of Ireland is also very encouraging; all that is needed is more men and women, thoroughly trained and taught, to meet the needs of our Roman Catholic brethren.—Yours faithfully,

Ellen Smyly.

AN ABERDEENSHIRE MISSION.

Rev. George H. C. Macgregor, of Aberdeen, conducted a series of Evangelistic services and meetings for the deepening of spiritual life at Kiumundy, in Aberdeenshire, the residence of Mr. W. Ferguson, during the week commencing April 11. The locality is purely agricultural in its character, and thinly peopled. Notwithstanding this, considerable numbers gathered, some coming distances of six to eight miles.

The meetings arranged for were afternoon Bible readings, and evening Evangelistic services from Monday till Friday, closing with a meeting for children on the Saturday. It was a time of great blessing. The Mission was closed by the Lord's Supper in the Free Church of Clola on Sabbath, April 17. The evening service, then conducted by Mr. Macgregor, brought together an earnest audience of over 550.

A great impression has been made on the whole community. Some have been led to decision for Christ. Many have been awakened to think on divine things. Believers have been greatly encouraged and helped on. One result was a request to continue the Monday evening prayer-meetings, which is being done. At the meeting held on Monday week, more than a hundred gathered to join in prayer and thanksgiving. Prayer is desired for a continued blessing on the work.

CORN EXCHANGE CHRISTIAN UNION.—The monthly meeting took place on April 26 at the new rooms of the Y.M.C.A., Gracechurch-street, Mr. Wm. Aste, president, in the chair. An address was given by Rev. F. B. Meyer from Genesis xxv. 8. Because men of the world are constantly on the look out to catch Christians tripping, he besought members of the Union to cultivate a habit of regular and earnest prayer, not as a matter of form, but as a necessity of life. There was a very good attendance.

SOCIAL EVENING FOR SHOP-GIRLS.

Some ladies of my acquaintance take turn about in holding a fortnightly Social Evening for the young ladies engaged in shops all day, either behind the counter or in the dressmaking and millinery departments; and as it has been carried on successfully for six months now, I thought a short description of our operations might prove suggestive to ladies in other localities who desire a sphere of usefulness.

In the first place it is quite undenominational, and the friends who help in it can belong either to Church or Chapel. In our case the Vicar takes an active interest in it, having had the girls to his house for a social evening at Christmas. We invite, say, ten to twenty girls to our houses on a certain evening after shop hours (8 p.m. here) and give them coffee and cake, &c., after which they amuse themselves with games—Halma, draughts, tiddle-di-winks, &c. Any musical talent is brought out, and at ten o'clock they all join in singing a hymn, and the meeting is closed with a portion of Scripture and prayer.

The girls are thus brought into social contact with each other, and are made to feel that some one takes an interest in them. It seems to me that what hard-working girls require is not so much preaching at but sympathising with, and they ought never to forget that they are young, and that life is not all a hard struggle for existence. Many of these girls come from respectable and happy homes to fight life's battle alone, and without the comforts of home life. In the summer-time we shall get friends to invite them who have tennis lawns, that they may have some exhilarating and healthful outdoor exercise.

The girls gladly respond to the invitations given, and look forward with pleasure to the next social evening.

IN CITY WORK-ROOMS.

You will be glad to hear of a few of the blessed results of the twelve years' unremitting labours of one lady in some of the work-rooms in London. Not only during that long period did she present the good old Gospel message to the young women engaged, but she did her best to encourage them to be total abstainers from intoxicating drink and every other evil thing. Several of the girls have given good testimony of a change of heart and life. This lady has followed sick ones into hospitals and infirmaries, and witnessed the happy departure of some.

Last month she was called to pass through the great trial of saying farewell to those in whom she has taken so deep an interest—her steps having been led into a quiet sphere in the country. In all the work-rooms there was sorrow, but in one large firm the whole of the people were broken down with grief, and the tokens of affection and esteem were most touching. Last week we were invited by the girls themselves to hold a meeting in a new place. We went, and invited those who lived near us to come to our Monday night meeting. Two responded, and gave us hope of their having decided for Christ. The encouragements are great. We need more workers for "open doors," and we shall be thankful for flowers and small Gospel books.—Address, care of Housekeeper, 186, Aldersgate-street, E.C.

MR. RICHARD WEAVER.

This good brother has concluded a month's mission in connection with Miss Robinson's Soldiers' Institute and the Speedwell Coffee Palace, Portsmouth. It was very pleasant to be with my old friend on May Day, the last day of the Mission. The evening meeting at the Empire Palace was quite an old-time service, illustrated by some personal reminiscences which I had never heard before. A second meeting followed at the Speedwell.

At both many hands were held up for prayer, and many were led into the peace of the Gospel. The subject was, "How Wilt Thou Do in the Swellings of Jordan?" Richard sang two of his old hymns, "When you come to Jordan's flood, How will you do?" and "Saw ye my Saviour? Saw ye my Saviour and God?" The mention of these will remind many of our older readers of days of the right hand of the Most High.

SIGNS OF THE TIME IN IRELAND.

Rev. Thos. Connellan, speaking on the present state of Ireland, at the annual meeting of the Presbyterian Colportage Association held in Belfast last Thursday evening, said that the present spiritual outlook in Ireland was very hopeful, and in proof of this he mentioned that he had recently preached on the public road to hundreds of Romanists, in a place where, five years ago, if he had attempted such a thing, he would have been torn limb from limb.

He also stated that on March 17 last, a meeting was held in Galway, when a lecture on the life of St. Patrick was delivered. This meeting was attended by about eighty Roman Catholic young men, and out of that gathering have sprung up prayer-meetings which have been since continued, and which are being attended by many Romanists.

He further said that he and his brother and another ex-priest, a man about sixty years of age, who has recently left Romanism, have been holding religious meetings for the past few weeks in a hall in Dublin, and that these have been largely attended by Romanists.

After referring also, as a hopeful sign of the times, to the fact that at the National Teachers' Congress, held at Dublin the previous week, three-fourths of the members of which were Roman Catholics, the priests were thrown overboard, and the Government asked to pass the new Education Bill as soon as possible. His brother, Mr. Jos. Connellan, addressed the meeting also in the same hopeful terms.

Y.M.C.A. YACHTING CRUISE

IN THE NORWEGIAN FJORDS.

The authorities at the Y.M.C.A in London, have been so fortunate as to secure a concession from a firm of Australian shipowners (Mr. James Huddart, London agent, 22, Billiter-street) to fill the magnificent new steel passenger steamship, Warrimoo, 3500 tons register, 4000 indicated horse-power, for a ten days' cruise in the far-famed fiords of Western Norway, at very moderate rates. Young men are to have the privilege of booking at eight guineas each for the cruise; and adults (ladies and gentlemen) at twelve guineas. The s.s. Warrimoo, it is said, will undoubtedly be the finest vessel which has, up to the present, left British waters for the Norwegian fiords. The great speed of the ship will ensure a quick passage across the North Sea (about twenty-one hours) into the land-locked waters of the Norwegian coast.

On a former occasion, when the Y.M.C.A. arranged a somewhat similar cruise in a much smaller, and poorly-appointed steamer, the pleasure enjoyed was admitted by all the party to have been unsurpassed by any previous holiday experience. One of the special charms was, of course, the Christian fellowship enjoyed. It is arranged to sail on Saturday evening, August 13, from Newcastle-on-Tyne, and to return on August 23. Specially reduced railway tickets are included in the arrangement. Full particulars may be obtained at Exeter Hall, Aldersgate-street, Cornhill, or at any metropolitan or provincial Y.M.C.A.

ISLINGTON MEDICAL MISSION.

Dear Sir,—This Mission has been able to relieve much sickness and distress during the past six months. It has been the busiest winter, with the heaviest amount of work, that we have had, yet we have seen more spiritual blessing than ever before. Many have professed faith in Christ; several who have been strangers to God and to all religious impression have been brought to know themselves as sinners and to find peace through believing.

Our prayer-meetings are quite changed. Many more attend them, and men and women take part, following one another so rapidly and earnestly that the meetings are often prolonged after the usual time. The blessing, moreover, has not been confined to the Medical Mission Hall. In the adjoining parishes the Lord is abundantly giving of his fulness to workers and to the unsaved.

We have had to give so much nourishment—coals, beef-tea, and other help—to the sick under our care that our relief fund is quite exhausted. Help will be gratefully accepted.—Yours sincerely,

Henry Soltau, L.R.C.P. & S.E.

NOTES ON DAILY READINGS.

SUNDAY, MAY 8.—GENESIS XIX.

What a vision is given in this chapter of the ministry of angels. The Lord of angels had stayed with Abraham on the heights; he, too, was in future ages to descend into human Sodoms, to seek and save the lost, but at present he delegated this work to angels, until the fulness of the times was come. The visit of the angels was the answer to Abraham's prayer. Ah, how often may our prayers make angels speed to succour dear ones in peril or distress, either spiritual or temporal. You cannot reach that ship labouring in the storm, or that deep, dark forest, or that new settlement, or that sinful town, where your boy or friend is; but, in answer to your entreaty, one of God's angels will find his way thither, untainted by the polluting atmosphere, and will bring him out. It was a very weak nature that heaven was so eager to rescue. He is described as "a righteous man." but he was a very weak one. He had built his tent toward Sodom, but he had been unable to resist its attractions, and had taken up his residence within its precincts, and had become apparently one of its leading citizens. His testimony was, therefore, at a discount, "he seemed as one that mocked." His proposals indicate how wretchedly he had become infected with the vice around him. Yet on even him the Lord had mercy, and his mercy wrought through the persuasions, and the gentle pressure of the angel's hands. And when he was gone, it became evident that his presence there had been like salt checking the full manifestation of human evil and Divine wrath. May we learn to do angel-work, laying our hands on lingering souls, and urging them to escape for life to Jesus, the only hiding-place from the storm.

MONDAY, MAY 9.—GENESIS XX.

How honest the Bible is; it dares to show us the failures of its noblest characters, that we may adore and trust the grace of God that can make of such rough material his polished corner-stones. But the sweetest note in this chapter is the thought of the keeping power of God. Verily He rebuked kings for the sake of his people, saying, "Touch not mine anointed, and do my prophets no harm." Though Sarah was exposed to peculiar peril through the cowardice of her husband, yet she was shielded by the invisible envelope of God's protection. We may, through no fault of our own, be thrown into the direst danger, but there shall his hand lead us, and his right hand shall hold us. Wrap around thy soul the 91st Psalm, and thou shalt be impervious to hurt. No weapon formed against thee shall prosper. And if God could withhold Abimelech from sinning, surely He can withhold his saints from all sins, and especially from those of the flesh.

TUESDAY, MAY 10.—GENESIS XXI.

Yes, God is faithful. He always does as He says and as He speaks. Heaven and earth may pass away, but no word from God shall be void of power. We may have long to wait, till all human hopes are dead, and faith is left to face apparent impossibilities; but then, "at God's set time," the child is born. Then the dreary waiting time is as if it had not been. Our mouth is filled with laughter, and our tongue with singing. The laugh-ter of incredulity is turned into that of realised hope. Ah, soul, thou mayest laugh indeed, when God makes thee laugh. And blessed are ye that mourn now, your laughing time will come. God hath prepared laughter for you. (R.V. Marg.) Yet, in this world, how close are laughter and tears, joy and wailing. Sarah is glad, but Hagar and Ishmael are exiled from the home, and the mother casts her child beneath one of the shrubs, and asks not to see him die. Yet even for such there is hope. Prayer can find God equally from a tamarisk shrub as a patriarch's tent.

WEDNESDAY, MAY 11.—GENESIS XXII.

Faith must be proved. Only in trial does she learn to put forth her strength, and to dare what had seemed impossible. Satan tempts to bring out the bad, God the good. It is on Alpine precipices that the eye becomes quick and the foot nimble. God may ask for our Isaac, calling us to pass through death; but our dying is precious in his sight. He anticipates the trial by revealing a new name coined for the occasion, "the Everlasting God," the full value of which we only decipher as we enter the furnace or find ourselves enwrapt in the cold mist of the valley of shadow; He goes with us every step from Beersheba to Moriah; He nerves us to do his will, though it involve the taking of the knife to slay our love; He beholds with infinite delight a reflection in us of his own transcendent sacrifice at Calvary; and through the agony, not allowed to pass beyond a certain point, He leads us up to resurrection, and gives us back our Isaac, his gift purged by fire to be trusted to us, who have been prepared by fire to hold and enjoy in a way that had otherwise been impossible; and then He sheds such blessing on the heart and life as reach to the limits of fruitfulness and victory.

THURSDAY, MAY 12.—GENESIS XXIII.

Death is an ever constant monitor that this life is not our rest, nor earth our home. We rise up from before our dead to confess again what we held when we first started at the summons of God—that we are only strangers and sojourners among men, claiming only ground enough for our graves. And yet the care with which the old man negotiated this purchase, and had it properly attested, indicated his fixed belief that it would play an important part in the future of the land and his people. That grave would hold the land in fee until it should be possessed as the Lord had said. Now it was bought, then inherited. So the graves of the Lord's people, scattered over our world, hold it for Him whose right it is. There is not a land anywhere which has not been seamed by the grave of a saint; or an ocean in whose depths the purchased bodies of the redeemed do not await the Easter day of the Church. And by this token we are taught that the kingdoms of this world must become the kingdoms of Christ, and we shall inherit the earth, and reign with Him. Till then let us be careful in all our transactions with men of the world, that they may have no cause against us, save as concerns the law of our God.

FRIDAY, MAY 13.—GENESIS XXIV.

If the faithful servant be taken as a type of the Holy Ghost, who seeks a bride in a far country for the Son, how full of holy and blessed suggestion is this chapter. Blessed indeed is the soul that obeys his earliest promptings. It shall be adorned with priceless jewels of character, and shall come to the Bridegroom in broidered work, with gladness and rejoicing. But how replete with instruction this glimpse into the habits of those early saints who care not to join themselves in marriage with the ungodly! What certainty that in so important a choice as that of a wife the angel of the Lord would go before! What anxiety not to go back to the land from which they had come out! And then how lovely the influence of the master on his servant, whose highest thought of God seems to have sprung from the memory of his master's worship. "O Lord, the God of my master, Abraham." Do we each morning ask Him to send good speed for the coming unknown day? Do we attribute the tiniest events, and even the courtesies of others, as symptoms of his will? Do we adore Him when we see Him working for us, and acknowledge openly his leadings? Are we so set on his business as to be indifferent to our own comfort? Have we such unlimited faith in prayer? Do we meditate at eventide till visions of coming rapture break on us? We have surely much still to learn!

SATURDAY, MAY 14.—GENESIS XXV.

May we die, if that be our lot, full, as a shock of corn cometh in in its season. If we would die full, we must live so. "Filled with all the fulness of God." What a gathering of the people is going on; thither come the Abrahams, the heroes and fathers of faith; thither also the Ishmaels, wild and lawless at the first, but included in the everlasting Covenant; and thither also shall come our children's children, when the discipline of their life is complete. History repeats itself. In every family there are Esaus and Jacobs. The good-natured, sensual, hairy huntsmen; the plain, smooth, polite, scheming Jacobs. How different are the world's heroes to God's saints! Perhaps more inviting to the natural sense, but they sell their birthright for a mess of delight, which only stills hunger for an hour. But God's saints are rough stones when first drawn from the quarry; it is only through sorrow and anguish that their true nature becomes revealed; and men bow to crave their benediction. Prize that birthright of thine. Thou hast been made a king and priest to God. Do not pawn it for pottage. But live to plead for and bless mankind.

SUNDAY AFTERNOON, MAY 15.

A Song of Praise—Psalm ciii.

Golden Text: Verse 2.

A Psalm of David.—The title is doubtless correct. Its contents indicate that it was written in the Psalmist's later years. Psalms ci., cii., and ciii. have been called a trilogy. In ci. 1. the song of thanksgiving is promised; in cii. an earnest cry for deliverance comes out of David's deep distress; and in this Psalm full deliverance is enjoyed, and the promised song of thanksgiving is sung. The hints at distress and affliction are found in vv. 6, 8, 9, 13, 14, 16. No one could rise to these heights of praise who had not first been in the depths of trouble.

1, 2. Here is the preparation for praise—like the tuning of the instruments before the full burst of harmony from some grand orchestra. To bless is the highest form of praise (Psa. cxlv. 10). It supposes not only appreciation of God's works, but acquaintance with and affection for God Himself. It demands the best part, and every part of man's being. "Soul music is the very soul of music." Without this there can be no true worship, however perfect the externals may be. Heartiness in worship is not secured without effort. It is easy to be dilatory and formal, hence the twice-repeated call to his own soul. Memory needs to help in this work. Think and thank are closely connected. If we would be thankful, let us be thoughtful. Memory adds fuel to the fire of gratitude.

3-5. David's personal reason for Praise. Memory, called to assist David, immediately responds by recalling this rich cluster of blessings. See how valuable they are. Forgiveth, healeth, redeemeth, crowneth, satisfieth, reneweth. These are beyond all price. They meet our deepest need. God's work is perfect. To receive all these without praise would be basest ingratitude. See how continuous they are. Not once only has God done these things for us; but he is ever doing them. The need never ceases, nor does God weary of supplying. See the connection of these blessings. They are joined together as links in a chain, the first of all being pardon. Sin is the great hindrance to blessing; when grace removes that, every other blessing may be ours. See how personal they are (thy). The best kind of praise is prompted, not by generalities, but by the appropriation of blessings for ourselves.

6-18. Further cause for praise in God's dealings with his people. Not to think of our own individual blessing would be ingratitude, to think only of that would be selfishness. 6. Deliverance for the oppressed comes in connection with judgment for the oppressor; as salvation comes to us through the defeat and ultimate destruction of our great enemy. 7. Moses saw more than the people of Israel. God answered his prayer (Exod. xxxiii. 13. See Psa. xxv. 4, 12, 14). 8, 9. "His anger is so slow to rise, so ready to abate." To use the chastening rod is no delight to Him; yet He can be angry, and his children, when disobedient, have had experience of it. But it does not continue for ever. When the chastening has accomplished its purpose the rod is removed. 10. His severest chastisement falls short of what our sins deserve; otherwise we should feel, not the smiting of the rod, but the piercing of the sword. 11-14. Here are three illustrations of the Divine mercy. The height of the heavens suggests that his mercy is infinite (Psa. lvii. 10); the distance between the East and the West suggests how completely mercy removes our sins (Mic. vii. 19); the father's pity for his children suggests that God's mercy is tender mercy. All this is true even in the hour of chastisement. Our grief is not from the wrath of God the judge, but from the anger of God the Father. He knows and remembers and will not, therefore, make the burden too heavy. 15-18. In Isa. xl. 6-8, man's frailty is contrasted with God's eternal word; here it is contrasted with his everlasting mercy. Thrice we are reminded that the mercy of God is for them that fear Him (11, 13, 17). Without this condition it is presumptuous to hope in his mercy.

(19-22). This is the grand burst of song with which the Psalm closes. The choir includes, first, the angels (20), who are no novices at this exercise (see Job xxxviii. 7); then, all his hosts (21) to whatever race of creatures they may belong, and in whatever way they may minister to Him; then, all his works (22) The Psalm closes where it began—in the soul of the Psalmist.

Elizabeth Adamson, who attended the preaching of John Knox, was led to Christ and rest on hearing this Psalm. She asked for it again before she died, saying, "It was in receiving it that my troubled soul first tasted God's mercy, which is now sweeter to me than if all the kingdoms of the earth were given me to possess."

The connection between forgiveness and healing (3) is illustrated by the man sick of the palsy (see Mark ii. 1-12).

The Book World.

The Two Crowns, by Eglanton Thorne, has been issued in an attrative form for 2s. 6d. by the Religious Tract Society. It is a capital story for young people.

Our Little Lads, Mr. Benjamin Clarke's record of Christian work in connection with the Homes for Little Boys, has been enlarged. The contents have a general as well as special interest, the May issue giving good portraits of the Earl and Countess of Aberdeen. (1d. Office: Bank-buildings, Ludgate-circus.)

Our Mothers and Daughters, Mrs. Reaney's monthly, is a magazine worthy of high commendation. There is chit-chat on practical questions, as well as several instructive articles. A sketch of the Countess of Aberdeen, and an appeal to mothers by Miss Frances Willard, with portraits of both these ladies, make the May issue very attractive. A serial story, by the editor, is entitled "The Mystery of Cruel-tree Hollow." (1d. John Haddon and Co.)

The Book of Revelations, explained and corroborated by History, by "Veritas." (3s. 6d. Elliot Stock.) The writer gives in a concise form the interpretations of Elliott and other apocalyptic writers. On two or three disputed points he gives original opinions—e.g., the two witnesses, which he holds to mean the true believers in the Jewish and the Christian Churches. The author's tone is spiritual and Protestant throughout. The book he endeavours to interpret is, however, not "Revelations," but "Revelation."

Work and Workers in the Mission Field, the new monthly edited by Rev. F. W. Macdonald, makes a good beginning with its issue for May. Devoted to the interests of foreign missions in general, and of the Wesleyan Missionary Society in particular, it contains a large amount of information about the Gospel in Fiji, India, Burmah, China, Rome, and the West Indies. As well as records of work, there are discussions of practical topics, and the pages are admirably illustrated. (3d. Wesleyan Methodist Mission House.)

The Tongue of Fire: or, The True Power of Christianity. This famous work, by Rev. William Arthur, has been issued in a handy form at 1s. 6d., by Bemrose and Sons. Prayer for revival must be accompanied by a recognition of the Holy Spirit and his work. This fact is powerfully enforced by Mr. Arthur, whose book was well designated by Mr. Spurgeon as "an English classic, whose flaming pages should be read by all who wish to teach and preach Jesus." We trust this "People's edition" will have many readers.

What Subject Shall I Take? Bible studies for pulpit and class, by Rev. J. J. Hunt. (1s. 6d. Marshall Brothers.) Here are between four or five hundred heads of addresses prepared by the Vicar of St. Paul's, Penzance, for week-night services held in his own church. Rather than choosing a Bible text and splitting it up, he takes a subject and illustrates it from various portions of the Word. The little book is a mine of suggestion and help for preachers and teachers who would conduct Bible readings on a plan which many have followed with great success.

The Sermon Bible.—Acts vii.—1 Corinthians xvi. Here are hundreds of sermon outlines, and thousands of references to published discourses. The volume is the ninth of a series which cannot but prove of great service to preachers. Many works have been laid under contribution by the compiler, who has exercised much care in condensing the discourses which, with a wise judgment, he has selected. Though the contents are not of uniform quality, there is good value throughout. The pages convey seed-thoughts which, turned over by studious minds, may germinate into really instructive and useful sermons (7s. 6d. Hodder and Stoughton.)

The Place of Authority in Religious Belief. By V. H. Stanton, D.D. (6s. Longmans, Green and Co.) This is a deep, solid, and well-argued treatise on a momentous question. Where lies the true balance between free inquiry and religious authority? Are they antagonistic or complementary? What are the just claims of reason, personal faith and authority in things divine? These and cognate questions are boldly asked, and if we do not give to all the same answers as Dr. Stanton, we do not value less his thoroughness and catholicity. His views concerning the Bible and the Church we cannot but endorse, and trust his book may be widely read by ministers and religious teachers.

Correction.—The author of The Five Great Offerings points out that in our recent notice, the sentence beginning "The first part of the Book of Leviticus" should refer only to the first section of seven chapters, inasmuch as the author deals with this section only, and not with the whole book.

JAMES GILMOUR OF MONGOLIA.

We gave in July last a portrait and sketch of this famous missionary, and we now welcome the story of his life,* as told by his friend, Rev. Richard Lovett, M.A., on the basis of his diaries, letters, and reports. It is a volume of substantial worth, embellished with portraits, maps, and illustrations. In its details the life was as peculiar as the man himself was extraordinary.

After sound mental equipment, he went out in 1870 to revive mission-work in Mongolia, and laboured with signal devotion among Chinese and Mongols. He grieved over reverses, but refused to be "cast down." He toiled and proposed for the future, but had to endure many disappointments. He was a man of large practical resource and child-like Christian faith. He lived as a nomad among a benighted people, and inspired the regard of men of the coldest nature.

Mr. Gilmour married, in 1874, Miss Emily Prankard, sister-in-law of a Chinese missionary, Rev. S. E. Meech. He proposed to her by letter, and the young woman went out to be the wife of a man whom she had never seen! It was a marriage made in heaven, and attended with temporal and spiritual blessings. After the death of his wife, in 1885, the children being under guardians in England, the father addressed himself with undiminished ardour to his much-loved work. He believed in God's present and immediate influence in the passing events of daily life, and that the right attitude of life is one of absolute dependence upon, and submission to, the will of God. His diaries abound with proofs of this. He wrote: "The great object of my life is to be like Christ. As He was in the world, so are we to be. He was in the world to manifest God; we are in the world to manifest Christ."

In a characteristic letter to a missionary colleague in a distant field, he wrote:—"All alone I have gone on the 'headlong for Christ' way of things here, even when preaching to the most intellectual English and American audiences, and they have received me royally. Man, God has waked me up these last years to such an extent that I feel a different man. I sometimes wonder now if I was converted before. I suppose I was, but the life was a cold, dull one. Just the other day Jesus, so to speak, put out his hand and touched me as I was reading a hymn, something about desiring spiritual things and passing by Jesus Himself. I wanted his blessing more than I wanted Him. That is not right. Lately, too, I have become calm. Before, I worked, oh! so hard and so much, and asked God to bless my work. Now I try to pray more, and get more blessing, and then work enough to let the blessing find its way through me to men. And this is the better way. And I work a lot even now. Perhaps as much as before; but I don't worry at the things I cannot overtake. I feel, too, more than I did, that God is guiding me. Oh! sometimes the peace of God flows over me like a river. Then it is so blessed; heaven is real, so is God, so is Jesus."

Mr. Gilmour was more than a missionary; he gave generously to the missionary cause—making God his banker. Writing to his children letters full of pathos and love, he urged them to give at least a tenth of their money to the Lord's cause. In a letter of brotherly remonstrance to one who, in a moment of depression, and without adequate cause, thought he was slighted, he said: "What you do is done, not for the L.M.S., but for Him, for Him; and He sees and knows, and won't forget, but sympathises and appreciates, and at the end will speak up straight and open for his true men. I often lug portmanteaus, walk afoot, and, as the Chinese say, 'eat bitterness' in China and in England. I am not thanked for it, but He knows. No danger of being overlooked. Now, don't be 'huffed' at my lecturing you, and don't think I must think a lot of myself to suppose that I am running up a bill of merit, like a Buddhist, and think I am Jesus's creditor. My dear fellow, you know better than that. I point out to you and remind you of the only way I know to be persistently useful and at the same time happy."

When he died last year, Christians who had been gathered from among the people whom he laboured to enlighten, bore touching testimony to his faith and character. Moreover, all who knew him mourned the loss. The life is full of inspiration, and we cordially commend the book to our readers. Mr. Lovett concludes:—"James Gilmour, in season and out of season, in almost constant solitude, in superabounding physical labours that often overburdened him, and once nearly broke him down, in the long disappointment of the most cherished hopes, and under the constant strain of what would have crushed any but a giant in faith, lived a life which, if it taught no other lesson, was yet well worth living to teach this—that Jesus Christ can and does give his servants the victory over apparent non-success, after the most vehement and long-sustained effort to secure success, and that this is the greatest victory possible to renewed and sanctified human nature."

St. Luke's Medical Mission.

The last report of the St. Luke's Gospel Medical Mission shows that during the past year there were 6879 attendances at the dispensary in Roscoe-street, Bunhill-row, E.C. Miss Beck, one of the committee, writes:—

"These are some of the results of nurse's visits to one case:—A mother restored to health when her life was despaired of, now a regular attender at the Mothers' Meeting; a home growing brighter and cleaner, a girl of thirteen placed in Dr. Barnardo's Home, and rescued from the influence of a young woman who had enticed her from home, and was training her systematically for a thief; and a prospect that her two brothers will soon, in the same way, be taken from their evil surroundings.

"Any one unaccustomed to the total absence of what would be called necessities in a case of serious illness would have felt little hope for the recovery of another of our patients. It was late in the evening when nurse first went in, and the family were settling for the night—the mother dangerously ill with high fever in their one bed, the new baby by her side, the ex-baby at the bottom, one little lad with his head on the bed and his body on a chair, another on the floor propped against the wall, and a half-intoxicated husband, who was out of work, leering at his wife. Unpromising enough; but it did not take long to turn the husband out, persuade one kind neighbour to take the children, another to sit up for the night, and, following the doctor's instructions, bring about an improvement which ended in recovery; but who can wonder at the poor woman's words: 'I am not sure that I care to live, after all!' Deeper needs than the physical ones come within the province of a Bible-woman nurse, and over and over again words spoken, perhaps while her hands are busy—and it is real trained nursing that is done—sink into hearts touched and softened with the thought that someone cares."

Drs. Hingston Fox and Bedford Pierce are the physicians, and the hon. sec. Mr. G. M. Gillett, 314, Camden-road, N.

THE ALBANY INSTITUTE, CAMBERWELL.—This work, which began in a cartshed, has now developed, and through the personal labours of the members a new hall has been built. The annual meeting was held on Wednesday week, Mr. Thomas Dabbs presiding. A touching letter was read from Mr. A. B. Smith, one of the most devoted workers in the Mission, and now suffering from cancer in the throat, exhorting all to work while it is called to-day. Addresses followed by Messrs. E. M. Jones, J. R. Kelly, M.P., C. Ford, and others. The secretary is Mr. W. G. Ramsay, 157, Camberwell-road, S.E.

HEBRON.—Mr. D. C. Joseph, of the Evangelical Mission to Israel, Jerusalem, writes:—"It is my desire that the Lord should send more labourers to Hebron. Our evangelist, notwithstanding his rough exterior, is in many ways well suited for the place. Much prejudice and hostility have been removed and lived down; the houses of the Jews are visited, and there is even a willingness on the part of the people to converse with the missionary in the street. Two young men from Hebron are now receiving instruction at the Home of the London Society for the Promotion of Christianity among the Jews. In addition to our Mission to the Jews, the Berlin Mission has a school and Medical Missionary for the Moslems, with whom we work in perfect harmony. There are now more than a score who bow their knees to the Lord Jesus, whilst, when I first visited Hebron, there was not a single Christian in the place."

Letters to the Editor.

THE DOMESTIC PROBLEM.

Dear Sir,—I think your readers may be interested in hearing of an experiment tried some ars ago by the Y.W.C.A. in a large town, with iew to providing recreation for servants. In at neighbourhood the weekly "day out" is ite a recognised institution amongst servants. ny of them coming from the country round ve no friends with whom to pass the time, and danger of such a state of things needs no nment, especially when the young girls are not pected home until ten at night. In order to et this difficulty a "recreation evening" was rted once a week at the Y.W.C.A. Servants' me, to which servants were invited to come two hours, 7 to 9 p.m. Ladies took it in turn meet them there, and to direct the proceedings. At first materials for work were provided for se who were inclined for useful occupation, a y reading to them meanwhile, and later in the ning quiet games were introduced. But as ie went on, the servants themselves decided to p the games entirely, and to give up the whole ie to working. One year quite a large quantity rticles were thus made for a charitable instition. Scripture, hymns, a short address, and yer, all varied the proceedings, and many of servants expressed their deep gratitude for ving such a place in which to spend their iday evenings. Unfortunately, lack of workers rfered with the continuance of this plan, after ad worked well for some winters.

n another parish, the curate's wife started a vants' working-party, on slightly different s, but with the same high spiritual and moral ject. She was very successful in getting at girls, talking to them about their interests l her own, and getting them to look on her te as a friend. H. S.

Dear Sir,—I do not presume to dictate to others, my own twenty years' experience has been so sfactory that I venture a reply to G. W. F.'s or." First let me very thankfully acknowledge goodness of God in the comfort we have had in servants. I think if as mistresses we envoured to act upon the Divine principle in tthew vii. 12, we should find the result a happy have never adopted the modern custom of weekly nings, but allow my servants to go out whenever y ask permission, and always find they study my venience. I seek, when possible, to know their nds, and if at a distance take an interest in them, in so doing gain my servants' confidence. As g in a great degree responsible for the well-being hose under my care, I shou'd never allow theatres, cing-balls, or such-like amusements. Firmness nistresses and obedience in servants are indisable to the comfort of a home.

instead of expecting so much work for so much ey, mistresses would strive to reach their serts' hearts, they would experience, as I and many ny friends have done, the most unselfish and oted service. A word as to their health: Do not that be neglected. A change of servants is fly of very rare occurrence in my home.—Yours truly,

One who Values her Servants.

Dear Sir,—Judging from my own experience as a ekeeper, extending over fifty years, and in ous neighbourhoods, I cannot avoid the conclu- that the initial step towards having better ser- is to better their mistresses. If aggrieved tresses, while dealing with their servants, and g mindful of their own frailties, were more care- o abide by the Scriptural command, "Do ye to rs as you would they should do unto you," there d, I am persuaded, be less cause for legitimate plaints of our servants.

Mary Jane accidentally breaks a glass, burns a , or the oven won't heat somehow, or she is seen king with her young man somewhere, or (having aps missed her way) arrives home ten minutes or te, and then, wh le naturally venturing on some l of explanation or remonstrance, in reply to her resses' charge of carelessness or misconduct, is ped by the unfortunately too common retort, "I t be answered," &c., &c.—can it be wondered r blamed that, while denied the common right of rd in self-defence, poor Mary Jane's sense of ice should be touched, and she, as a consequence, betrayed into some hasty or petulant reply, wed from one side or the other with a notice to and inconvenience and loss of respect on both ? All this may arise from some really trifling e, which a few quiet words of wisdom and kindly e from a good mistress would not only have ded, but would probably have made Mary Jane tter girl, as well as a better servant.

THE CHRISTIAN SABBATH.

Sir,—Where or when have the Divine Command and the human obligation to keep the fourth Commandment been annulled, set aside, or weakened, any more than the other nine?

Does not the Christian Church, in the keeping of its Sabbath as really and essentially observe the fourth Commandment as did, or do, the Jews? With Christians, is it not as really and literally "Six days labour, and the Seventh the Sabbath of the Lord their God"?

As to the way of spending the Sabbath, is not this much, at least, clear from the fourth Commandment, viz.: 1st, That it is to be kept "Holy" (separate, sacred) unto the Lord? 2nd, That it is to be a day of "Rest" from work such as characterises the other six days?

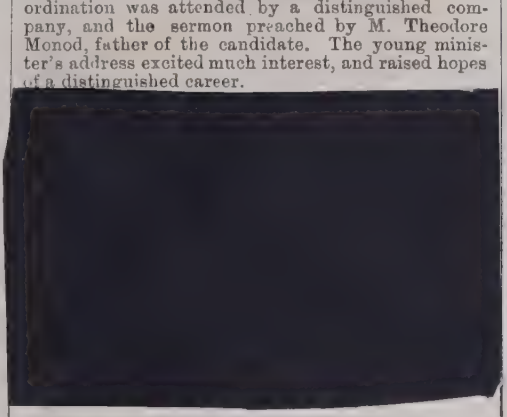
Rev. J. Ernest Clapham, General Secretary of the Wesleyan Home Missions, has seriously broken down in health, and has been ordered entire rest for some weeks.



Miss Bowesman, who went out to Antananarivo about eighteen years ago to take Miss Byam's place at the hospital, has been compelled by ill-health to give up her work.

Rev. J. MacGowan, who, with some other members of the Amoy Mission, has suffered from influenza, has been compelled to take a voyage for the sake of restoration.

Pastor McCaig has now entered on his new duties at the Pastors' College, although he intends returning to Ireland next month to deliver his address as president of the Irish Association.

Mr. J. L. Stanley, who for some time has been assisting Pastor Frank White, at Talbot Tabernacle, has accepted a call to the pastorate of Chatsworth-road Baptist Church, West Norwood, vacant by the resignation of Mr. Gooch. Mr. Stanley enters on his new duties on Sabbath next.

M. W. F. Monod, who has just been ordained to the pastorate of Condé-sur-Noireau, in the Reformed Church of France, is the son, grandson, and great grandson of Protestant pastors. The ordination was attended by a distinguished company, and the sermon preached by M. Theodore Monod, father of the candidate. The young minister's address excited much interest, and raised hopes of a distinguished career.

TARSUS AND CILICIA.—On Saturday evening last, at the prayer-meeting held at the East London Tabernacle, Mr. Krikor Behesnilian (of Cilicia) gave a short account of the work being done at Tarsus and Cilicia. The address was deeply interesting and warmly commended by Pastor Archibald G. Brown, who earnestly hoped that he (Mr. Behesnilian) would get the practical help and sympathy of all Christian friends.

CITY MISSION WORK IN WEST SOUTHWARK.—The annual meeting of the Friar-street branch of the London City Mission was held at the Mission-hall, Friar-street, Blackfriars-road, on Tuesday last week, under the presidency of Mr. R. K. Causton, M.P. The report, read by Mr. Jones, the secretary, quoted and endorsed a statement made by Mr. Charles Booth that the south-eastern district, from Blackfriars-bridge and the High-street, Borough, to the Elephant and Castle, contains more poverty, squalor, and disease than any other part of this great city. The district dealt with by Mr. Siden, the missionary, is in the very heart of this dark and degraded district, and comprises 14 streets, lanes, and alleys, containing about 450 houses and a population reaching nearly four thousand men, women, and children. The committee acknowledged the great interest taken in the Mission by Lady Hope, who, besides attending and speaking at the meetings, has attached two Bible-women to the district. Mr. C. M. Sawell, secretary of the London City Mission, made an earnest appeal for help

OBITUARY.

REV. THOMAS WALTERS, NEWTOWNARDS.

The Irish Presbyterian Church loses in the death of one of its oldest and most respected ministers, who passed away on April 26, in his eighty-fifth year, and ministered for the long period of fifty-seven years to the same congregation, a model minister and pastor, and an earnest advocate of temperance and missions.

REV. WILLIAM CLARKE, BANGOR, CO. DOWN.

Much regret is felt throughout the North of Ireland generally, at the death of this well-known Presbyterian minister and ex-moderator of the General Assembly. He was a scholarly man and took a great interest in Continental Missions, especially the Waldensian. As an earnest preacher, a faithful pastor and a liberal supporter of every good work, his death creates a blank not easily filled.

REV. JOSEPH YAIR, OF ECKFORD.

For the long period of sixty-two years, Mr. Yair had the pastoral charge of the parish of Eckford, Jedburgh, and now, in his ninety-fourth year, he has been called to his rest. Writing in February last, he said: "I owe to the great goodness of God to his servant that I am in the full and unimpaired possession of my intellectual powers." Mr. Yair passed away quietly and restfully on Monday week, in the Manse at Eckford.

REV. DR. MACDONALD, INVERNESS.

This well-known Highland minister passed away on Thursday last, at the age of eighty. Two years ago he resigned the pastorate of the High Church, being succeeded by Dr. Norman McLeod. In an obituary notice The Inverness Courier says:—"Dr. Macdonald was by nature and habit a student and a preacher; he never became an author. In intellectual power, he was, however, among the foremost men of his day. He possessed marvellous gifts as a preacher. There are some who still remember how, in his younger days, crowded audiences hung upon his lips as he preached from the High Church pulpit. His vast range of information, his wide reading, his fine literary taste, and his clear and philosophic thinking, all contributed to make his sermons and lectures weighty and memorable." The funeral on Monday last was a public one.

Outings for Young Women Workers.

Sir,—We appeal to residents and kind friends who possess large gardens in or near London on behalf of the young women who belong to our association. We plead for between sixteen thousand and seventeen thousand young women, the greater number of whom are hard toilers from year's end to year's end, with but little to brighten their lives, and often a great deal of sadness and poverty to shadow them. We shall be most grateful if kind sympathisers will send us invitations for parties of girls from twenty to one hundred in number to spend Saturday or Thursday afternoons at any place within easy and cheap access from London. In some cases friends have been able to provide tea for the party; others have simply opened their gardens.

Will any one who can help young women in either or both ways kindly send their names and addresses to the Secretary, Mr. Henry Kidner, 16A, Old Cavendish-street, London, W., stating the number that can be received, and whether or not tea can be provided.

Victoria Carbery, President.
Emily Kinnaird, Hon. Secretary.

ANGLO-INDIAN TEMPERANCE ASSOCIATION.—The annual meeting of this association was held last Thursday at the Memorial Hall, Mr. Samuel Smith, M.P., in the chair. Mr. W. S. Caine read a satisfactory report of the active work which is being carried on among the natives of India to suppress the drink traffic and the opium dens. The number of affiliated societies is 106, an increase of twenty-seven during the year. Many reforms had been introduced in the excise administration, especially in the reduction of the out-stills in Bengal from 3437 in 1889 to 1719 in 1891. This action has affected the revenue to the amount of seven hundred thousand rupees. The association is also directing its attention to the hemp drugs, which are a fruitful source of crime among the people, and urges the Viceroy to give effect to the recommendations of Mr. Plowden, Commissioner of Hyderabad, by prohibiting the cultivation and sale of these drugs. It is the opinion of the reformers that no solution of the excise problem in India can be satisfactory which continues to thrust liquor and drug shops upon a naturally sober people. They point out that the exercise of the direct veto would enable heads of families to prevent the issue by the local excise authorities of any licence for the sale of liquor or opium. A series of resolutions embodying these views was adopted after remarks by several Indians resident in this country, who pointed out the evils arising from indulgence in narcotics. Addresses were also delivered by Mrs. Caine, Messrs. J. G. Alexander, M. Williams, and Conrad Dillon.

Temperance Notes.

More men (Mr. Spurgeon was wont to say) have been killed by grape juice than by grape shot.

Dr. Ross, of Newcastle, declares "there is no barrier which nullifies the effort of the Gospel so much as intemperance."

Sunday last was observed, by appointment of the Bishop of London, as "Temperance Sunday" in many churches; sermons were preached on the evils of intemperance.

Half-a-million persons, it is said, are, in one way or another, employed on the Lord's Day in connection with the drink traffic in England, and two hundred thousand of these are young women.

At the Presbyterian Synod last week it was stated on behalf of the Temperance Committee that there are 242 temperance associations with a membership of twenty-four thousand in the English Churches.

At Ash, near Dover, a Temperance Mission, recently conducted by Mrs. Gauntlett, was attended with solid results. Twenty-four persons signed the pledge, to which number others were afterwards added.

During the May Fair in Bolton, it has long been the custom to allow the publicans extended hours. This extension is now, however, being opposed by the ministers of the town and with some measure of success.

The venture of Rev. F. Willett, of Seaynes Hill, Sussex, in personally conducting the village public-house on a six days' licence is proving successful; any disposition towards excessive drinking and noisy conduct is strongly curbed.

At the close of a recent sitting of a German circuit court, in which a heavy sheet had been dealt with, the Judge President drew attention to the fact that with one exception all the cases coming before him that day had arisen through the brandy bottle.

Signor F. Martini, writing of Abyssinia, thinks it useless to try to civilise the natives, and suggests that the white man must help the native to disappear (like the Red Skins in America) by the means furnished by civilisation—i.e., by intermittent fusillades and daily brandy!

Mrs. Eccles read before the Good Templars' Lodge an excellent paper on "Women's Hidden Dangers," making special reference to those arising from grocers' licences, home-made wine, alcoholic wine at sacraments, medicated lozenges, &c., the use of which she condemned.

Mrs. Ward Poole has recently concluded a fortnight's tour in the North of Ireland, in the course of which she visited nearly a dozen towns, spoke on about twenty occasions, was everywhere well received, and in some places was successful in forming Branches of the W.T.A.

Speaking last week in the Baptist Mission House, Rev. James A. Clark strongly denounced the action of England, America, and other nations in forcing upon Central Africa, against the will of her chiefs, intoxicating liquors. To describe the bad quality of the rum imported, he said it was sold at 4s. 6d. per half-dozen bottles, and the gin at 2s. 6d. per dozen.

There is a feeling growing that something should be done by London Methodists in the way of opposing the licensing of public-houses, and endeavouring to suppress some at least of the many superfluous drinking-places in the Metropolis. This feeling found expression at the recent meeting of the Wesleyan Council, when it was strongly urged that the matter should be taken up.

A Great Temperance Demonstration has just been held at Eastbrook, Bradford, by the Wesleyan Temperance Committee. The Chairman, deploring the small increase in the membership of the Wesleyan denomination during the last year, said he believed that directly and indirectly this unsatisfactory result was largely caused by the influence of the drinking customs of society.

Professor Schmoller, of Berlin, one of the ablest leaders among German political economists, says: "Among our working people the conditions of domestic life, of education, of prosperity, of progress or degradation, are all dependent on the proportion of income which flows down the father's throat. The whole condition of our lower and middle classes—one may even say, without exaggeration, the future of our nation—depends on this question."

The British Consul at Wenchow gives, in his report, a shocking insight into the extent of the opium trade in China. He says that of late years no proclamations have been issued, as was formerly the case, restricting the growth of the poppy, or the opening of opium dens. There are over six hundred opium divans in the city and suburbs, of various sizes, some possessing three to four lamps, others ten to twelve; also that about 10 per cent. of the adult male population have opium craving.

In a rousing and remarkable Temperance sermon preached by Rev. W. J. Morrison, of Sheffield, in the parish church, on the text, "And the Lord said unto Cain, where is Abel thy brother?" &c. (Gen. iv. 9-10), the preacher points out that the cause of drunkenness is drinking, and if men don't drink they cannot get drunk, and if they do drink, they at least may get drunk. Every sort of cure has been tried except the radical cure, that of stopping the tap, which, however, is the only effective cure.

The sixteenth annual demonstration of the Tower Hamlets Band of Hope Union was held in the Queen's Hall of the People's Palace, Mile-end-road. The large hall was crammed in every part with an enthusiastic audience, and there must have been quite six thousand people present. Mr. J. William Benn, L.C.C., presided, and gave an account of the work of the Union in the cause of temperance. It had been remarked that when poverty came in at the door love flew out at the window; at any rate when drink came in at the door, everything else, food, and furniture, and clothes, as well as love, flew out. The secretary, Mr. J. Colbert, read the annual report, and addresses were delivered by Rev. Crossley Williams, Mr. J. H. Raper, and Mrs. Ormiston Chant.

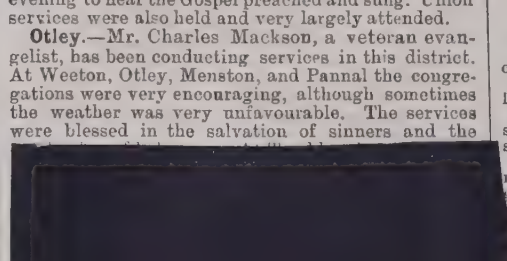
Evangelistic Notes.

Ireland.—Rev. P. E. Donovan, of Portadown, has just held a successful Gospel Mission in the Methodist church, Dungannon.

Leicester.—Gipsy Smith held lately a most remarkable mission in Old Bishop-street Chapel, and the work thus begun is still going on well.

Slough.—A successful eight days' mission has been conducted at Slough by Mr. F. H. Lodge, and many young people professed to give themselves to Christ.

Lewes.—The members of Lewes Y.M.C.A., Sussex, have formed a mission band for the purpose of conducting evangelistic services at the outlying villages during the summer.



Rev. Thomas Waugh has concluded a ten days' mission in Kingswood—a place closely associated with the labours of Wesley and Whitfield. These special services have been with much power, and many have professed conversion.

South Molton.—Mr. John Elliott, of the Evangelization Society, who recently conducted a mission in the Assembly Rooms, is now preaching in a Gospel-tent in this town, and the prayers of God's people are requested for much blessing to accompany the Word.

Mr. J. C. Rainey is just commencing the season's Gospel tent work in South Devon, and hopes shortly to visit Cowley and Dorchester, Oxon. This week the tent is pitched at South Pool, Kingsbridge, where, ten years ago, many were led to Christ who have stood faithful witnesses to Him.

Dr. L. W. Munhall, assisted by Prof. J. J. Lowe, has been labouring in Hornellsville, the various denominations in the city, Baptist, Presbyterian, Methodist, uniting in the work. For nearly three weeks, large congregations assembled afternoon and evening to hear the Gospel preached and sung. Union services were also held and very largely attended.

Otley.—Mr. Charles Mackson, a veteran evangelist, has been conducting services in this district. At Weeton, Otley, Menston, and Pannal the congregations were very encouraging, although sometimes the weather was very unfavourable. The services were blessed in the salvation of sinners and the up to more earnest and diligent Bible study. Everywhere the evangelist is greeted with wonderful congregations.

Cork Y.M.C.A.—Mr. T. P. Bailey, general secretary of this Association, which has an institute at 54, South Mall, writes: "As some of your readers may visit the South of Ireland during this summer, I should like them to know of our small association at Cork, where they will be heartily welcome. If communicated with beforehand, I shall have great pleasure in furnishing information concerning other towns and places of interest. We will gladly afford opportunity to speak at our Gospel meeting to such as may be able to spend Sunday in the city."

Charter-street, Manchester. — The Baroness Burdett-Coutts opened, on Thursday last, the new buildings of the Charter-street Ragged Schools and Working Girls' Home. The Mayor said the new buildings were a monument of the zeal, indefatigable industry, and earnest work of many who had devoted themselves to that district, and whose object was to raise the moral, social, and spiritual tone of the great masses of people crowded together in that immediate vicinity. He remembered well the character of that district some years ago, when it was considered scarcely safe to go into Charter-street, which was inhabited by the lowest class. Some earnest workers, however, commenced operations there about thirty years ago, and the result of their labours had been most gratifying.

Among the Churches.

CHURCH OF ENGLAND.

Many earnest clergymen in various parts are now taking a leading part in open-air work.

The decision of the House of Lords in the Bishop of Lincoln's case is now expected daily.

Bishop Williams, of Quebec, well known as a High Churchman, has just died, after thirty years' labour in a difficult diocese.

The Bishop of Ripon, acting under medical advice, has announced that he will not be able to hold his visitation as originally arranged.

Two clergymen from Manitoba, Revs. W. G. Armitage and T. R. O'Meara, are now in England seeking to enlist fresh helpers for work in the great North-West.

The C.M.S. Committee took leave on Thursday afternoon of a band of eleven who go to reinforce the missionaries in the Eastern Equatorial Africa. Probably five of these new labourers will go on to Uganda.

A meeting was held on Friday afternoon at the Mansion House on behalf of the erection of the parish institute in St. Andrew's, Bethnal Green. The Lord Mayor spoke of the condition of the parish, and made a strong plea for help.

From the report just issued by the Council of the Chester and Liverpool Diocesan Open Church Association it appears that of the 150,700 church sittings in the diocese of Chester, thirty-five thousand are rented and 115,700 are free and unappropriated.

The late Sir John Coode's Will contains the following among other, bequests—£500 to the Colonial and Continental Church Society; £100 each to the British and Foreign Bible Society, the Church Missionary Society, and the Church Pastoral Aid Society; and £50 each to the Religious Tract Society and the Spanish and Portuguese Church-Aid Society.

Archdeacon Denison, in his visitation charge, delivered last week at Taunton, dealt with the New Criticism, maintaining that the new critics asserted that our Lord's citation from the old Scriptures had no force, because Christ's knowledge of the old Scriptures was a self-limited knowledge. From such assertion it followed that our Lord, knowing He had so self-limited Himself, had nevertheless employed the old Scriptures in his teaching, as if He were not self-limited, employed them to illustrate and enforce his teaching when He had Himself deprived Himself of the knowledge whether what He was citing or referring to was truth or not. A more awful heresy had never been spoken in the Church.

Rev. J. G. Gregory, in his annual report of the work done at Emmanuel Church, Hove, shows the amount collected during the past year to be £2,686 16s.; and, after reviewing the various efforts carried on adds, "We give, we can give, but a poor return at best for the deep love of God to us. That love which He has shown in Providence; that love which He displayed so wonderfully in the gift of his dear Son; and of eternal life and endless blessedness in Him. But if our hearts are touched by that great love, and if by grace we have been taught to love Him Who has so loved us, then, I know, we shall be ready to give according to the ability which God has imparted, so that in all things He may be glorified and His work advanced."

CONGREGATIONAL.

The church at Wheatley has just celebrated its jubilee.

The results of the L.M.S. Self-denial week, up to the close of the financial year, were £9662 1s. 5d.

A week of special services for the deepening of spiritual life have been held at Milton Church, Widnes.

The Places of Worship (Sites) Bill has been read a second time in the House of Commons, and referred to a select committee.

The Derbyshire Congregational Union held its annual meeting in Chesterfield last week, when encouraging progress was reported.

Rev. A. J. Wookey is visiting the Bakoba and Batauana tribes in Lake Ngami Country, South Africa, in order to open new mission stations.

The West Lancashire Auxiliary of the London Missionary Society raised £1705 last year, an increase of £600 on the previous twelve months.

Mr. George Ingall, who has been pastor of Saltley-road Church, Birmingham, for the past thirty-five years, preached his farewell sermon on Sunday evening.

To meet the need at Rushden, Northamptonshire, a shoe-making community, which in a few years has developed from a village into a town of several thousand inhabitants, a Congregational chapel is to be built.

The bi-centenary of Bullhouse Chapel, Thurlstone, which was erected in 1692 by Elkana Riche, an ancestor of Lord Houghton, has been celebrated. The chapel originally cost £2000, a great sum in those days, and for many years it was a flourishing cause.

The leading Congregational ministers of Wales have been trained in Brecon Memorial College. Many of the students have settled in England, which fact supports the view of the committee that substantial support should be forthcoming from churches outside the Principality.

Some two years ago a young men's missionary band was formed in Sheffield with the object of awakening practical interest on behalf of the London Missionary Society. The organisation has been eminently successful, and is now sending out as its first representative an artisan missionary to Central Africa. Mr. W. H. Nutt, the new recruit, who is skilled both in theoretical and practical engineering and building, is going to the south of Lake Tanganyika. A meeting to wish Mr. Nutt God-speed was held last week when Dr. Lavington Hart, who is preparing for mission work in China, Dr. E. V. Cooper, from the South Seas and Captain E. C. Hore, recently returned from the Central African Mission, spoke.

BAPTIST.

Great preparations are being made in Kettering for the Centenary celebrations, to be held in June.

At the twenty-fifth anniversary of the church at the Six Ways, Aston, held last week, encouraging indications of progress were forthcoming.

On Sunday week a new place of worship was opened on a portion of the ground known as Raleigh-park, Brixton-hill, by Rev. F. Carter and a small company who have been working in the neighbourhood.

Rev. Thomas Law, of Bradford, addressing by specific invitation a conference of Nonconformist ministers at Oldham, presented the main features of the recent house-to-house visitation in Bradford, and strongly urged the adoption of a parochial system for Nonconformity.

At the annual meeting of the Cottage Mission Society, in association with Graham-street Chapel, Birmingham, an

THIRTY-NINTH SERIES OF CASES.

CASE FOR THE WEEK.

PERMANENCE OF CURE—PLEASING REMEMBRANCE OF A CASE THIRTY YEARS AGO.

It is pleasing sometimes, after the lapse of many years, to come accidentally upon the circumstances of the recovery of a patient who has been lost sight of in the interim.

The sister of the patient alluded to is a Miss K., of Pimlico-road (to whom I will willingly refer any bona fide enquirer). Writing on the 30th of November, on another matter, she says:—"Thirty years ago my sister, who was very ill, and never likely to get about again, was induced to see you" (by recommendation of another patient). "You expressed a doubt of her final recovery." (On referring to my old consulting book I see that I did so, but I nevertheless strongly advised her to use the means to the last, and not sit down in despair.) "I well remember when you asked her to count. She could only count five. However, she gained her health. She is now 51 years old. She has never had a relapse or any such illness since."

On referring to my memoranda of cases in '61, I find that Mrs. Wright (then married between two and three years, and aged 21) resided at Brixton. There had been a very great amount of Consumption in the family on both father and mother's side, and she had lost one brother and three sisters. She had been treated at first for a severe cold, and this, unchecked, had developed into Consumption. All the symptoms of decided disease were present, and flesh and strength had rapidly failed. YET SHE RECOVERED, AND HAS HAD GOOD HEALTH FOR THIRTY YEARS.

(I consider it the height of folly the neglecting even a common cold or cough by one in whose family there is a tendency to disease of the lungs.)

Mr. Aked and the Baptist Union.

In common with the entire Christian world, we have been watching with great interest the Unitarian controversy in the Baptist Union. Letters which are now being published in various papers seem to us to show the true meaning and drift of the resolution, which was carried with practical unanimity, and of the way in which it is regarded by those primarily affected.

As to the resolution itself, we regarded it as a strong affirmation of the Evangelical character of the majority of the Baptist Union, and in this opinion we are confirmed by the effect which it has produced upon Rev. R. A. Armstrong, the Unitarian minister at Liverpool. He says:—

> By age-long struggle, all the best and most generous minds of many generations have been striving to make men understand that, in the sight of God and Christ, what a man is is of more importance than what he thinks; that to do right and think wrong is to be nearer to the real Christianity than to think right and do wrong. It is truly a grievous awakening to learn that the Baptist Union solemnly, almost unanimously, renounces this principle, and declares that the one thing not secondary, but primary, is not that a man be of the spirit of Christ, but that he think as they think in regard to Christ....
> I had looked on the Baptists as friends of freedom, and, above all, as protesters against measuring men by creed. I had believed them inspired by the traditions inherited from their own saints and martyrs. They have taught me in this resolution that the ecclesiastical vice of creed-making and heresy-hunting lives in them as it has lived in Rome and in Geneva.

We need scarcely say that these sentences are a gross misrepresentation of evangelical teaching; nevertheless, they show that in Mr. Armstrong's judgment the evangelical character of the Union has been so distinctly affirmed, and the position of the Union with respect to association with men like himself so unmistakably accentuated, that there is now a wider gulf than ever between him and them; and for this we are devoutly thankful.

Turning from the resolution to the attitude of Rev. C. F. Aked, we feel that the latter has laid himself open to the most serious charges that can be brought against a Christian minister in a great crisis. The speech which he delivered before the Union was remarkably clever in turning off the discussion from the doctrinal standing of Mr. Armstrong to his position as a moral reformer. In doing this, it was obviously to his purpose to make as much as possible of the moral reforms which Mr. Armstrong had instigated in the city of Liverpool, and he took care to make it clear that in the reforms described Mr. Aked bore a leading and influential part. He said, for instance: "The municipal elections were fought on purity lines, and we revolutionised the whole policy of Liverpool." It now appears, however, from a letter over the signature of Mr. Armstrong himself, that this minister is compelled to disclaim the description given of his social work. He says, very honestly and fairly, that many others share with him whatever credit is attached to the recent crusade against immoral houses. He also distinctly denies the statement made by Mr. Aked that he had imperilled his life in the work which he did in the cause of social purity. In addition to this, a correspondent, who has, perhaps, the very best means of information accessible, writes to us:—

> A more barefaced statement than Mr. Aked's I never read. The agitation against the immoral houses was red-hot before Mr. Armstrong came into it. Mr. Aked had hardly time to touch it, as it was well on in 1890 when he came here a stranger.

It appears that the movement was initiated by Mr. Thomas Matheson, a Presbyterian elder, who wrote a long letter to the Liverpool papers, and moved the Society for the Suppression of Immorality. His efforts were furthered by Rev. Dr. Lundie and Mr. A. Guthrie; and all this was nearly two years before Mr. Armstrong's pamphlet was published.

We hold, therefore, that Mr. Aked will have either to substantiate the statements he made before the Baptist Union or withdraw them, at the risk of being charged with insincerity in having made them.

We also view with great concern a letter written by Mr. Aked to The Liverpool Daily Post on his return from London, in which, in our judgment, he attempts to take all colour out of the resolution to which he gave his "candid adherence both in spirit and letter." In his letter he declares that the broad school in the denomination "has won all it fought for, and has moved a step in advance." This is the first time we have discovered that the broad school in the Union was fighting for anything. Mr. Aked had said that he invited Mr. Armstrong to fill his pulpit, not on the ground of his theological standing, but of his philanthropic work. But if Mr. Aked's statement in his letter is to be accepted, it would appear that all along it was a carefully prepared plot to achieve some step in advance for the broad party of which he poses as a representative. He also says that the resolution leaves it to every man's judgment to say "what is and what is not legitimate co-operation." But surely, when he so distinctly pledged himself to observe it in spirit and in letter, and when he knows that the whole incident arose out of interchange of pulpits, he must admit that the spirit, if not the letter, of the resolution distinctly discountenances any association of a similar nature in time to come.

As we review the whole incident, we are sorrowfully compelled to express our fear that no resolutions will be able to adjust the difficulties of evangelical men in this important crisis, so long as they have to do with those on the other side who are not perfectly candid in their admissions and pledges.

The Missionary Societies.

The revival of the spirit of missionary enthusiasm is a hopeful sign of the times. There are symptoms of it on all sides, of a very noticeable sort. We question if the Church Missionary Society, for instance, ever celebrated its anniversary with more enthusiasm and with greater numbers than last week. Exeter and St. James's Halls were crammed to excess. And, in our judgment, these vast crowds were attracted, not so much by the published list of speakers, or by the alarmist telegrams from Zanzibar, as by that deep and passionate devotion with which this particular society is regarded by a large section of the Church of England. It announces its income for last year as having reached the noble total of £260,000.

The Baptists are making good progress in raising their Centenary Fund, having obtained £70,000 out of the £100,000 at which they are aiming as a special gift to mark this memorable year in their history, and altogether apart from their ordinary income. The London Missionary Society reports an increase of £38,000 on its yearly receipts, and an aggregate of £10,000 from its self-denial week.

This awakening is no less obvious in the quantity and quality of the candidates for missionary work. The numbers offering are largely in excess of any former time, and of the present existing facilities for going forth; and the missionary societies are applied to by young men and women, who have passed through the College course, or are fully equipped as medical men or trained nurses. Some are surrendering home-comforts and prospects of the most attractive character. Indeed, there is a possible danger of committees overlooking real solid worth and character, which, for various reasons, are not associated with the completer education possessed by others.

The results, too, are of a marvellous character. It would be, of course, as impossible to summarise them here as to put the ocean into a tea-cup; but we would advise our readers to do as we have done—first read Sydney Smith's essay on missions in India, in which he uses without stint his sharpest, bitterest irony on the Serampore missionaries, their diaries, and their methods, and then turn to the last two chapters of Dr. Pierson's "Divine Enterprise of Missions," one of the most readable, interesting, and convincing books which has been published in recent years on the general missionary question.

Those two chapters are headed "The Fruit of Missions," and "The Challenge of Missions" respectively, and present in a concise form some of the results, not only in the direct conversion of men, but in the civilising and elevating influences which have swept away idolatry, cannibalism, fetishism, infanticide, and the immorality of the heathen systems.

It seems to us that a clearer conception is emerging among Christian people of the true condition of the heathen world and its needs. They are beginning to see the wisdom of sending forth two classes of missionaries. The one to cope with the claims of Buddhism and Confucianism and other hoary systems of false religion, which have held sway for so long over untold millions. The other to move more rapidly from place to place, proclaiming the message of the kingdom, and with the herald-tones of the Forerunner calling on men to repent and turn from sin to God. For each of these classes there is ample room; and in the case of the latter especially, openings may be found for the many young spirits now knocking at the doors of our great societies.

It is also to be noticed that a truer and more Scriptural conception is being entertained of the Divine purpose during the present age. We do not hear so often now the phrase, "converting the nations," which used to convey an impression that the Divine ideal would be realised if a nation replaced its heathen customs by a public proclamation of Christianity, acknowledging the Bible as its law, and the Sabbath as its day of rest. As a matter of fact this conception is false and illusory. The Apostles never attempted to Christianise the Roman empire, but to win individuals out of it.

It is refreshing, therefore, to hear from the lips of speakers the phrase, "the evangelisation of the world," and to realise that there is an increasingly intelligent comprehension of the Divine purpose in the present age, which was fitly expressed in the memorable words with which James began his address to the first council: "God did visit the Gentiles to take out of them a people for his Name." What can be clearer or more decisive than our Lord's own words, "The Gospel must be preached for a witness"?

In every nation the truth of God must be lovingly and earnestly presented as an alternative to the systems of Falsehood and Evil; and an appeal made to the human conscience, which is God's witness in every breast. How much of this work has yet to be done before the end can come is known only to God. But there are vast tracts of continent which have never been trodden by the beautiful feet of the messengers of peace. And it would be a great gain for the entire campaign if the various branches of the Christian Church would reduce their points of difference to their true proportions, and raise their minds to the magnitude of the Gospel of the glory of the blessed God, that every nation under heaven might hear the message of salvation ere the present century close.

The various proposals for self-denial are chiefly valuable, if they lead to permanent habits of self-denial in respect to superfluities and luxuries. The mere denial for the space of a single week, to be followed by a relapse into the former habits, is neither heroic nor Christian. Lent, under such circumstances, is only too likely to be followed by a carnival. But if self-denial weeks lead people to see how much they can do without on behalf of God's work, and if they induce a simpler and more frugal style of living, we have nothing but satisfaction at their adoption.

Perhaps, however, the greatest reform of all would be for every wealthy Christian, who could not go forth, to maintain a substitute in the field; for every Christian family to constitute itself a missionary society, for the support of one of its members; and for every community of believers to support its own representatives in "the regions beyond."

HOW IT WENT ILL WITH HIM.

NUMBERS XX.

It was but one act, one little act, but it blighted the fair flower of a noble life, and shut the one soul, whose faith had sustained the responsibilities of the Exodus with unflinching fortitude, from the reward which seemed so nearly within its grasp.

The wanderings of the forty years were almost over. The congregation which had been scattered over the peninsula had converged towards the given meeting-place in Kadesh. There the encampment remained for some months, and there Miriam died, one of the few with whom that lonely spirit could still hold converse of that life which lay beyond the desert sands, the valleys of Sinai, and the waters of the Red Sea in the distant mighty land of the Pharaohs and the Pyramids. Aaron, Caleb, and the younger soldier Joshua were the only relics and survivors of that vast triumphant host whose voices had rung out their challenge on the morning of emancipation; and each of the four thought himself sure, and his comrades also, of going over to see the good land that was beyond Jordan, that goodly mountain, and Lebanon.

But this was not to be. Unknown to any of them an event was approaching which was to sweep away two out of that quartette, and leave the bones of the two brothers to lie with those of the sister on the threshold of the land for which they had yearned, and planned, and prayed. It was very sad, perhaps the saddest episode in the whole of these bitter experiences; but it led to the realisation of the Divine plan, and the fulfilment of a type which was to speak to all the ages.

I. How it Befell.—The demand of the people on the water supply at Kadesh was so great that the streams were drained, whereupon there broke out again that spirit of murmuring and complaint which had cursed the former generation, and was now reproduced in their children. Oblivious to the unwavering care of all the preceding years, the people assembled themselves together against Moses, and against Aaron, though it was against Moses that they principally directed their reproach. In words, which long after recounted the incident, the Psalmist tells us "they were rebellious against his spirit."

They professed to wish that they had died in the plague that Aaron's censer had stayed. They accused the brothers of malicious designs to effect the destruction of the whole assembly by thirst. Although the cloud of God brooded overhead, and the manna fell day by day, they cursed their abiding-place as evil. They taunted Moses with the absence of figs, vines, and pomegranates. They demanded water. And this was the new generation of which he had cherished such high hopes, the new growth on the old stock! It could hardly have been otherwise than that he should feel strongly provoked.

However, he resumed his old position, prostrating himself at the door of the tent of meeting until the growing light that welled forth from the Secret Place indicated that the Divine answer was near. Unlike the injunction on a similar occasion, which now lay back in the haze of years, Moses was bidden, though he took the rod, not to use it, but to speak to the rock with a certainty that the accents of his voice, smiting on its flinty face, would have as much effect as ever the rod had had previously, and would be followed by a rush of crystal water. Yes, when God is with you, words are equivalent to rods; the gentlest whisper spoken in His name will unlock the secrets of rocky chambers, and roll away great stones, and splinter sepulchres where entombed life awaits a summons. Rods are well enough to use at the commencement of faith's nurture, and when its strength is small, but they may be laid aside without hesitance in the later stages of the education of the soul. For as faith grows, the mere machinery and apparatus it employs becomes ever less, and its miracles are wrought with the slightest possible introduction of the material. Years ago you were bidden to use the rod because your faith was untried, but by this time the greater faith should work through a slighter and more fragile means.

Moses might have entered into these thoughts of God in quieter and more tranquil moments, but just now he was irritated, indignant, and hot with disappointment and anger. When, therefore, the assembly was gathered together in their thronging multitudes around him, he accosted them as rebels. He spoke as if the gift of water depended on himself. He betrayed his sense of the irksomeness of their demand, and then vehemently smote the rock with his rod twice. And as those blows re-echoed through the still air, they shivered for ever the fabric woven by his dreams and hopes. The vision that had allured him through these long years faded as light off Alpine snows at sunset and angels were sent to choose the site beneath the cliffs of Pisgah, where his body should keep guard at the gate of the Land, in which he had hoped to lie. Oh! pitiful lot wrought by his own act, the result of a condition of soul which crystalised in that one disastrous incident! What a warning is here, admonishing us that we sometimes fail in our strongest point, and that a noble career may be blasted by one small but significant and forever lamentable failure. "The Lord said unto Moses and Aaron, Ye shall not bring this assembly into the land which I have given them."

The people did not suffer through their leader's sin. The waters gushed from out the rock as plentifully as they would have done if the Divine injunctions had been precisely complied with. "The water came forth abundantly, and the congregation drank, and their cattle." Man's unbelief does not make the faith of God of none effect; though we believe not, yet He remaineth faithful, He cannot deny Himself, or desert the people of his choice.

II. The Principle that Underlay the Divine Decision.

(1) There was distinct disobedience. No doubt was possible about the Divine command, and it had been distinctly infringed. He was not to strike but to speak, and he had twice smitten the rock. In this way he had failed to sanctify God in the eyes of the people. He who ought to have set the example of implicit obedience to every jot and tittle, had inserted his own will and way as a substitute for God's. This could not be tolerated in one who was set to lead and teach the people.

God is sanctified whenever we put an inviolable fence around Himself and his words; treating them as unquestionable and decisive; obeying them with instant and utter loyalty; daring to place them high above all dispute as the supreme rule and guide of conduct. Therefore, when Moses set them aside to follow the behest of his own whim, it was equivalent to a desecration of the holy name of God. "Ye did not sanctify Me in the eyes of the children of Israel."

It is a solemn question for us all whether we are sufficiently accurate in our obedience. It is a repeated burden of those sad chapters of Hebrews, which tell the story of the wilderness wanderings—the cemetery chapters of the New Testament—that they could not enter in because of unbelief. But throughout the verses the margin suggests the alternative reading of disobedience, because disobedience and unbelief are the two sides of the same coin, minted by the devil's coinage. They who disobey do not believe, and they who do not believe disobey. May the great High Priest, with his sharp, two-edged sword, pierce to our innermost heart to cut away the least symptom of disobedience; then shall faith be strong, and through its gates we shall pass into the land of rest.

(2) There was unbelief.—It was as if he had felt that a word was not enough. As if there must be something more of human might and instrumentality. There was a too evident reliance upon his own share in the transaction, or on the mysterious power of the rod which had so often wrought great wonders. He thought too much of these to the exclusion or dwarfing of God's eternal power. He did not realise how small an act on his part was sufficient to open the sluice-gates of Omnipotence. It reminds us of the shattering of the Hell-Gate Rock at the entrance of New York Harbour. The touching of a tiny button by a little child set in action the train of gunpowder by which that vast obstruction was blasted to atoms, and heaved for all time out of the path of the ships. A touch is enough to set Omnipotence in action.

It is very wonderful to hear God say to Moses, "Ye believed not in Me." Was not this the man by whose faith the plagues of Egypt had fallen on that unhappy land, and the Red Sea had cleft its waters, and the daily manna had spread the desert floor with food, and the people had marched for thirty-eight years unhurt by hostile arm? What had happened? Had the wanderings impaired that mighty soul, and robbed it of its olden strength, and shorn the locks of its might, and left it like any other? Surely something of this sort must have happened. One act could only have wrought such havoc by being the symptom of some unsuspected wrong beneath. Oaks do not fall beneath a single storm, unless they have become rotten at their heart.

Let us watch and pray, lest there be in any of us an evil heart of unbelief, lest we depart in our most secret thought from simple faith in the living God, lest beneath a fair exterior we yield our jewel of faith to the solicitation of some unholy passion. Let us especially set a watch at our strongest point. Just because we are so confident of being strong there, we are liable to leave it unguarded and unwatched, and therefore open to the foe. So shall we be saved from a fall that shall shut the gates of Canaan against us, and consign us to an unknown and untimely grave.

But how much there is of this reliance on the rod in all Christian endeavour? Some special method has been owned of God in times past, in the conversion of the unsaved or in the edification of God's people, and we instantly regard it as a kind of fetish. We try to meet new conditions by bringing out the rod and using it as of yore. It is a profound mistake. God never repeats Himself. He suits novel instrumentalities to new emergencies. He puts new wine into new bottles. Where a rod was needful once He sees that a word is better now. It is for us to consult Him and to abide by his decision, doing precisely as He tells us, and when and where. What does it matter if the means He ordains appear to our judgment inferior to those which He commanded once. This is no business of ours. We have but to use the jaw-bone of the ass, to speak the word, to sling the stone, to stretch out the rod, and it is for Him to do all the rest by the right hand of his power.

(3) There was the spoiling of the type.—That Rock was Christ, from whose heart, smitten in death on Calvary, the river of water of life has flowed to make glad the City of God, and to transform deserts into Edens. But death came to Him and can come to Him but once. "Christ was once offered to bear the sins of many." "The death that He died He died unto sin once, but the life that He liveth He liveth unto God." "I am He that was dead, and behold I am alive for evermore." These texts prove how important it was to keep clear and defined the fact of the death of Christ being a finished act, once for all.

It is clear that for the completeness of the likeness between substance and shadow, the rock should have been stricken but once. Instead of that it was smitten at the beginning and at the close of the desert march. But this was a misrepresentation of an eternal fact, and the perpetrator of the heedless act of iconoclasm must suffer the extreme penalty, even as Uzzah died for trying to steady the swaying ark.

But there was something even deeper than these things. There was an eternal fitness in the nature of the case in Moses not being permitted to lead the people into the land of rest. Moses represented the law. It came by him, and he therefore fitly stands before the gaze of the ages as the embodiment of that supreme law, whose eye does not wax dim or its force abate, under the wear and tear of time. But the law, the motto of which is Do, can never lead us into rest. It can conduct us to the very margin and threshold, but no further. Another must take us in, the true Joshua, Jesus, the Saviour and Lover of men. But we shall say more of this when we stand together on the summit of Pisgah, to see the lawgiver die under the kiss of God.

III.—The Irrevocableness of the Divine Decisions.—Moses drank very deeply of the bitter cup of disappointment. And it seems to have been his constant prayer that God would reverse or mitigate his sentence. "Let me go over, I pray thee, and see the good land that is beyond Jordan, that goodly mountain and Lebanon." No poet could have painted that land with more glowing colours. He dipped his brush in rainbow tints as he spoke of that good land, that land of brooks and fountains and depths, that land of wheat and barley, of vines and pomegranates and figs, that land of oil, olives, and honey. And no patriot ever yearned for fatherland as Moses to tread that blessed soil. With all the earnestness that he had used to plead for the people, he now pleaded for himself.

But it was not to be. The Lord said unto him, Let it suffice thee; speak no more unto Me of this matter. The sin was forgiven, but its consequences were allowed to work out to their sorrowful issue. There are experiences with us all in which God forgives our sin, but takes vengeance on our inventions. We reap as we have sown. We suffer where we have sinned.

At such times our prayer is not literally answered. By the voice of his Spirit, by a spiritual instinct, we become conscious that it is useless to pray further. Though we pray, not thrice, but three hundred times, the thorn is not taken away. But there is a sense in which the prayer is answered. Our suffering is a lesson warning men in all after-time. We are permitted from Pisgah's height to scan the fair land we long for, and are then removed to a better. We stand on the soil of Canaan, on the goodly mountain of Lebanon, beside the living Saviour. And we hear his voice saying, My grace is sufficient for thee; my strength is made perfect in weakness.

But, oh! that God would undertake the keeping of our souls, else, when we least expect it, we may be overtaken by some sudden temptation, which befalling us in the middle, or towards the close of our career, may blight our hopes, tarnish our fair name, bring dishonour to Him, and rob our life of the worthy capstone of its edifice.

Mr. Henry Thorne at Tunbridge Wells.

This evangelist has been labouring with unabated zeal for some ten days in the Baptist Tabernacle at Tunbridge Wells. Much interest was displayed in the afternoon Bible readings, and the evening Gospel meetings continued to increase in interest from the first; and on the closing evenings of the Mission the building was filled from end to end with interested hearers. The faithful preaching of the Gospel was accompanied by "signs following"; many were inquiring the way of salvation. Many believers were helped and quickened in the Divine life.

At the praise meeting, which closed the Mission, addresses were given by Revs. Jas. Mountain and T. O. Jackson, and Mr. John M. McAuliffe. The pastor of the church is Rev. Jas. Smith, formerly of Yorkshire.

BATH RACES.—During these races crowds of people flock into the city, and the Bath City Mission is anxious for a large supply of Gospel booklets and tracts for distribution. These should be sent to Mr. G. Snook, 5, Dover-place, Bath.

The Northfield Training School.

Among the recent interesting news brought to us by The Christian from your side of the Atlantic, we have noted especially the movement in Scotland for the establishment of Christian training-schools. That our own beloved evangelist, D. L. Moody, should raise his voice in behalf of such institutions is what we should expect. It is on the line of his great life-work. The marked success of the schools he has founded in Chicago, and in his own Northfield have fully proved and confirmed his faith in that agency.

It has been my privilege, as a minister of the Gospel, to see something of the methods and results of the work of these schools. I have just come from the first public closing exercises of the Northfield Ladies' Training School, which is the fourth and last of the Christian educational institutions founded by Mr. Moody. My impressions and convictions of the great importance and value of the kind of training given in that school have been deepened by what I have seen and heard. The school is no longer an experiment, but an assured success. It is a success because it fits perfectly into the working agencies of the Kingdom of God and meets a want long and keenly felt. The blessing of God is upon it.

The closing exercises to which I refer, held March 31st, in the Northfield Congregational Church, marked the end of the second year's work of the training school. Ministerial and other guests from Boston, New York, Springfield, and adjoining towns and country, were in attendance. A statement of the origin, object and work of the school was presented, followed by an address on "The Work and Power of Woman," by Rev. Dr. Burnham, of Springfield, Mass. After a collation at "The Northfield," a number of ministers bore strong testimony to the remarkable effectiveness of trained workers from the school who had been employed in the home mission fields of this and adjoining states. As we listened and pondered we felt that through such agencies as this the Lord was pointing out the way to a solution of one of the most perplexing religious problems of our day.

The declared object of the Northfield Ladies' Training School is to offer facilities for the training of Christian women that they may become ready, skilful, efficient workers in all forms of Christian service to which they may devote themselves. It is taken for granted that, first and foremost in such training is the demand for a careful, earnest, persistent study of the Word of God. Bible truth in mind, and heart, and life, and at ready command for use, must be the instrument of power for effective service. To impart to students this knowledge, and to cultivate readiness and skill in applying it to the various moral and spiritual conditions of those with whom they have to do, is, therefore, the main object of the school.

But ample experience has shown that Christian workers who have, in addition to knowledge and love of the Bible, some practical knowledge of domestic work, of dressmaking and cooking, have a great advantage over others not so qualified. They are thereby enabled to bring God's words into the homes of the poor, the ignorant, the improvident, the sick, the sorrowing, to enter with intelligent sympathy into the practical affairs of their daily life, along lines of humble, loving, helpful service, in a way which would otherwise be impossible to them. It has therefore been wisely arranged to combine with the study of the Bible, thorough courses in dressmaking and cooking, with varied experience in the details of household life and service.

During the first year of the school fifty-six students were in attendance, and seventy-three the second year. About forty-six of the number had home or foreign mission work in view, while others returned to their homes and churches and former spheres of life and duty, prepared and inspired for more Christlike living and better service than they had ever known before. While engaged in their regular school work, some of the students soon found occasion to add practice to theory in actual home mission work in neighbouring districts and towns, on week-day evenings and on Sundays. In school-houses and elsewhere a number of regular meetings were thus sustained throughout the year, under the general supervision of the pastor of the Northfield Church, with results of great blessing to all concerned. This outside work was probably not in the original plan of the school. It came as a development of the life within, and Providence has, in this particular, carried the training beyond the thought and purpose of the founder of the school.

Before this Northfield school was organised Mr. Moody had been enabled to work out a magnificent demonstration of his theory in his Bible Institute, in the city of Chicago, where men and women were trained for all kinds of Christian work with the best results. That school has been wonderfully blessed of God. Out of it have gone scores of trained Christians, whose lives and works bear constant testimony to the value of the school, not a few of whom have come from your side of the sea. Its possibilities and promise are inspiring.

Why should not every church, every pastor, take advantage of opportunity, and secure trained workers for themselves or for others? Is there not in every church some young Christian, full of love and zeal, of good repute and promise, who might be fitted for most effective Christian work by a short course of training, such as the Moody Schools provide? What better, wiser, more profitable thing could be done in the interests of God's work than this? Why should not a church, a Sunday-school, a Christian Endeavour Society, or an individual, select some promising young Christian for such training, and provide for the expenses of it? In this way hundreds of good workers might be equipped and prepared to meet the crying need of the time, who without such help would never be able to attain thereto. And what a means of blessing it would be to a church or society to bear such responsibility. Why should not a multitude of young disciples be sent from your country to ours, to gain the benefits of training under new conditions in the Moody schools of our country?

It is a saddening thought that the work of God should be languishing in so many places, and the white harvest perish in the field, simply because qualified labourers are not sent forth. Equally saddening is the thought that the material for such qualified labourers is not utilised, though so abundant. Certainly there is enough talent, zeal, and power lying dormant in the Christian Churches to meet all demands of a perishing world, if only the proper means were adopted to develop, train, and enlist the individual powers for the service of the kingdom. The time has come when it should be no longer possible for any willing hearts and hands in the market-places to stand idle beneath the shelter of the pitiful plea, "No man hath hired us."

Tottenham Court-road Chapel.

The facts relating to the demolition of this historic structure and the efforts being made to rebuild on the site are set forth in a circular recently issued. It is stated that, for the present, the Building Council have no alternative but to erect another iron church, the plans for which have already received the sanction of the London County Council and a licence granted for the full time allowed by law. Desiring that the funds already collected for a permanent structure shall be used only for that purpose, a deacon of the church has offered to lend the whole of the money required, on most generous terms, which offer has been thankfully and unanimously accepted by the church. An appeal is made to the Christian public to assist the church in their arduous struggle to maintain their witness-bearing for Christ and souls in this densely populated neighbourhood, the centre of the main northern thoroughfare of London. The treasurer of the Building Fund is Mr. James W. Wolfe, 20, Russell-square, W.C.

Dr. Pentecost on India.

On four evenings last week, as announced, Dr. Pentecost gave addresses at Marylebone Presbyterian Church, on the present condition of Christian missions in India. For this task his recent prolonged stay, and his evangelistic labours in our great Eastern dependency, have well fitted him. The addresses were of extreme interest, and were greatly appreciated by the numerous auditors who were present each evening. In the first address Dr. Pentecost dealt with adverse British influences in India; on the second occasion he described the wonderful triumphs that the Gospel has made since the introduction of Christian missions; on Thursday the subject was work among high-caste natives, and was treated in its general aspects. In the closing address, on Friday evening, Dr. Pentecost took up the topic of the previous evening—the work among high-castes—entering more into detail, and gave some very encouraging illustrative examples of the power of the Gospel in the ranks of educated Brahmins. After an interesting description in outline of the origin and development of the Hindu faith, and of the institution of the three-fold caste system, Dr. Pentecost went on to tell of how this system is showing signs of disintegration before the advances of Western civilisation and the levelling power of the Christian religion. These caste distinctions are very far-reaching, and are as exclusive in the lower ranks of the people as among the educated pundits. During a journey up country he and his party were attended by some twenty coolies, and in the small band of natives there were probably ten distinct castes, the members of which would not eat with those of a different caste. Among the educated people a large amount of Christian teaching is being unconsciously incorporated in their systems of belief, and they may be almost said to occupy the position of the Athenians, whom Paul described as ignorantly worshipping the unknown God. Dr. Pentecost spoke of many interesting conversations he had had with Brahmins about the absurdities and inconsistencies of their caste ideas. He showed them how the learned pundit and the sweeper have the same blood flowing in their veins, breathe the same atmosphere, and are the creation of the same Divine hand. Driven into a corner, they were forced to admit that the distinction is now only a social one, and has no higher sanction.

Doctrinally the Hindu is a theist, but in his system there is no place for the ideas of sin, righteousness, sacrifice, and forgiveness. So they teach salvation by human merit and good works. Many of the thoughtful men among them, however, are perceiving the insufficiency of this creed to meet the realities of life and the innate cravings of the human heart. Dr. Pentecost met with not a few who, like Nicodemus of old, came secretly to tell him of their longings and aspirations after a more satisfying and peace-giving faith. He circulated among the high-caste Brahmins who attended his meetings a number of copies of his "Covenant Card," which sets forth the elements of the Christian belief, and expresses on the part of the signer an earnest desire to accept Christ, the Son of God, as Saviour and Lord. Before leaving Calcutta more than seventy of these cards were returned to him, signed by Brahmins; and in many cases accompanied by letters requesting that he would not publicly divulge their names as having given their adhesion to Christian doctrine. One old man, after hearing of Jesus, said, "Oh, sir, I never heard this about your Christ, and I could love Him." There is great ignorance among them, even of their own Sanscrit scriptures. It was intensely pathetic to hear how many of these men had been constrained to accept the truths of Christianity, but were deterred from a public avowal of them in baptism because of the family and social ostracism, and of the pecuniary loss that would follow. They were willing to repudiate idol worship, and to make confession among their friends of faith in Jesus Christ as their Saviour; but they stopped short of the act of baptism, which completely cut them off from home and kindred, and all the ties of social life. Ten years ago it would not have been possible for them to adopt this course, so that very remarkable progress is being made, and a crumbling process is quietly but steadily going on.

SOME CASES OF DEEP INTEREST

were related in detail by Dr. Pentecost. These showed unmistakably that the Spirit of God is at work in the hearts of many of these educated Indians. One specially interesting case referred to was that of the Pundita Rambai, whom Dr. Pentecost described as the ablest and most distinguished native woman in the country, and a great Sanscrit scholar. From her studies she was led to repudiate Hinduism. She came under the influence of the Cowley Fathers in Poona, and was taught by one of them the beauty and superiority of Christianity, and she accepted it, but only as a system and in an intellectual sense. She came to England, and because she was not as clear and orthodox as she ought to have been she got the cold shoulder, just as Keshub Chunder Sen did from Evangelicals. He was taken up by the Unitarians, and went back to India less a Christian than when he came. So the Pundita found her friends among Unitarians in this country. She afterwards went to America to pursue her studies, and the same thing happened there. As a result she went back to Poona commissioned by the Unitarians of America to establish a school for Hindu widows. She was forbidden either to pray where any of those native widows could hear her, or to speak to them on the subject of Christ or Christianity. That, said Dr. Pentecost, is what Unitarian missions mean. The Pundita attended his services in Poona, never missing a meeting for six weeks. One evening, in a testimony meeting, she surprised everybody by standing up and saying she wanted to bear her testimony to the great goodness and grace of God. She subsequently wrote a letter to Dr. Pentecost, stating that up to that time she had not had peace of soul, but on such and such a night at the meeting she was led to see that Jesus Christ is the Son of God, and that his death was for the expiation of human sin. She had cast herself on Him as the Saviour, and since then peace had ruled in her soul, and she now confessed Him as her Redeemer and the Redeemer of the world. If nothing else had been accomplished by his mission than that this brightest among all the women of India should have been led clearly into the knowledge of Jesus Christ and of salvation, it would have been ample compensation, Dr. Pentecost said, for all these months of labour.

Time did not permit any detailed reference to the work among the English people or among the important Eurasian section of the community. Of the latter he said that in Madras alone there were three hundred hopeful converts. Neither was there time to allude to the work of the many societies that are doing good work. A few words of hearty commendation were, however, spoken concerning the needs of the scattered and isolated planters and other English men and women to whose spiritual necessities the Anglo-Indian Evangelisation Society seeks to minister.

A WELCOME MEETING.

At the invitation of Mr. T. A. Denny, a thanksgiving meeting for the late Mission to India, and a welcome to Dr. Pentecost, was held at 7, Connaught-place, on Saturday afternoon.

After the opening remarks of the host, Dr. Pentecost, who was warmly received, said that he went to India a hopeful pessimist, but had returned an enthusiastic optimist. The question of India must be looked at on a larger scale than the conversion of individual souls. In the near future India will exercise a greater influence than we dream of. It would be appalling to think of India passing out of England's hands. Lose India, and England would fall into a second or third-rate power. We must think of India not only politically but commercially, socially, and religiously. Great Britain could not hold India unless she were raised in the scale of nations. The suggestion came from the missionaries that unless she were educated into Western civilisation, England would simply maintain a physical hold upon a barbarous people.

Now, India contains three hundred million people, seething with new ideas, but they have not the conception of righteousness behind their intellectual development necessary to fit them for the franchise and for self-government. The question of righteousness cannot be solved without the Gospel. There is no chance of the development of righteousness in Hinduism and Mohammedanism if the Christian Church does not evangelise India. God has put India into the hands of the Anglo-Saxon for moral ends. How can we trust evangelisation or education in righteousness to a Government which says we must maintain the opium traffic?

In so far as the conquest of India for Christ has yet been accomplished it seems too wonderful to be true. As the visible outburst of vegetation in the springtime is the evidence of invisible powers, so the results which can be seen of the Gospel in India bear witness to the unseen power of the Spirit of God. Our work is garnering. If the harvest is not gathered in it will rot. A learned Hindoo said to him: "You will never convert Hindoos to Christianity, but you will Christianise Hinduism." The other day the Government interfered to raise the age of girls' consent to become wives. It caused a ferment throughout the empire, and set the Pundits to search the old Hindoo writings, and showed that they were divided among themselves.

Dr. Pentecost said he was holding a meeting at which so many questions were asked as to lose the subject of his address in a number of side issues. He therefore asked them to let him finish his addresses on Christianity, and then get up a meeting for themselves to expound Hinduism. They did so, but they contradicted each other to such an extent that he told them that it would be a most effective thing for him to take half-a-dozen of their speakers as his assistants.

Two-thirds of the entire missionary force in India is engaged in education, and so withdrawn from direct Gospel testimony; young Brahmins attend college courses for years and years, and scarcely one becomes a Christian. There is a vast difference between teaching Christianity as a system and

PREACHING THE GOSPEL OF GOD.

The converts of India are not in the neighbourhood of the colleges, nor in the cities, but in the villages; therefore, travellers go to the cities, and return saying they saw no results of missionary work; but in the villages, where active and aggressive missionary work is done, great conquests are taking place. The low-castes can do without the high, but the higher cannot do without the lower; "to the poor the Gospel is preached."

Then there is the marvellous Zenana work. Every husband is as a god to his wife, who stands while he eats; yet she governs him in religion, and in this respect the mother, and still more the mother-in-law, is the head of the whole establishment.

Dr. Pentecost pressed upon young Christian ladies the feasibility of going out to India for a year or two, and out of six who went he believed four would remain. A minister going out for a few months, with twenty well-thought-out addresses, would be of great use, but it must be the direct preaching of the Gospel; the emasculated nonsense of "modern thought," without the blood of Christ, would be of no more use there than here. Again, if each church at home were in touch with one or more missionaries abroad, especially if the missionaries were its own members, we should feel more directly and definitely that we are on a winning cause.

A LADS' INSTITUTE.—On Saturday evening last General Sir R. Phayre, K.C.B., presided at the third annual meeting of the Red, White, and Blue Christian Institute for Lads, Pentonville. The Chairman heartily commended the work, and drew attention to the great physical benefits conferred on the lads and the sound religious influences brought to bear on them. The report was of a very encouraging character, but pointed out that both funds and helpers are urgently needed.

THE NORTH AFRICA MISSION.

Dear Sir,—The Council of this Mission has, for a considerable period, had the spiritual needs of Lower Egypt before them. General Haig, one of their number, has brought these needs before the public, and now Mr. and Mrs. Summers, who have been labouring in Morocco in connection with the Mission, have volunteered to undertake work in this new sphere. Other friends have been constrained to send financial help sufficient for part of the preliminary expenses. It has, therefore, been decided to extend this Mission to Egypt, in the confidence that God is leading us so to do. I am on my way there, where I hope to meet Mr. and Mrs. Summers, who are accompanied by three other new workers. We shall on the spot consult as to the wisest steps to take.

Having visited Tangier, Morocco, I give a few notes with regard to labour for the Lord in that land. Mr. Patrick, who has devoted himself to work among Spaniards and Europeans in Tangier, is returning to England, and will be glad to give information about that section of the field. Dr. Terry and his wife are returning for a time to England, as he has had a serious attack of typhus fever.

Considerable alterations have taken place in Morocco since the N. A. Mission made its first attempt to work there eight years ago; but it is still "Dark Morocco." Then, Mr. Mackintosh, of the British and Foreign Bible Society, who had commenced pioneering, was the only labourer among the Moslems in that country, while Mr. Ginsburg, of the London Jews' Society, and some helpers, laboured among the sons of Israel in Mogador, in the south-west of the country. The instrumentalities now at work are:—The Bible Society, with its agent Mr. Mackintosh, and one or two colporteurs; the North Africa Mission, with between twenty and thirty labourers; the English Presbyterian Mission, with Dr. and Mrs. Kerr and two ladies at Rabat; the South Morocco Mission, with a dozen or more workers under the guidance of Mr. John Anderson, Ardrossan, N.B.; and the London Jews' Society at Mogador, with a native Jewish worker and colporteur. Omitting the workers among Jews and Europeans, there must be nearly forty persons labouring among Moslems, but a number of these are at present only students of Arabic, and imperfectly qualified to make known the Gospel. Yet this is a blessed advance on ten years ago.

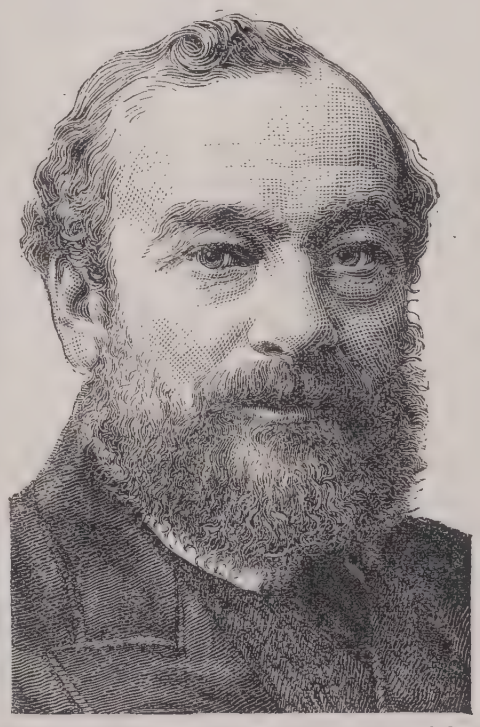
The medical aid given to the people has done much in removing prejudice, and has presented Christianity in a benevolent aspect that has been easily comprehended. The ministry of our sisters has not only brightened many homes and enlightened many dark minds, but shown the immense superiority of Christianity over Islam in the place it gives to woman.

The Moorish Government has tried to resist the influence of this quiet work, but we hope by God's help to go steadily forward. The great need now seems to be prayer that the missionaries may be sustained, and the seed sown may be caused to spring up and bear fruit.—Yours heartily in Christ,

E. H. Glenny, Hon. Secretary.

SS. "Bengal," off the Algerian Coast, April 21.

STRANGERS' REST, RATCLIFF-HIGHWAY.—The workers who met at the Strangers' Rest, on Friday 6th inst., learned with regret that Mr. Gawin Kirkham would be unable to give the address that had been announced on account of illness. Mr. Isaac gave an interesting account of labours during the past month in the Highway, the distant fields of South America, and the West Indies. Their needs were brought before the meeting by Admiral Grant. The Chairman, Mr. Neasby, closed with a few earnest words.



A CONVALESCENT HOME FOR RAILWAY MEN was recently opened at Portland-place, Hastings, in connection with the Railway Mission. Mr. T. A. Denny presided, and addresses were delivered by the Countess of Chichester, Rev. F. Whitfield, Mr. S. Gurney Sheppard, Miss H. S. Gardiner, Mrs. George Gates, and others. The Home will accommodate twelve patients, and will be a great boon to railway men requiring rest and change after sickness or accident. Information as to the admission of patients may be had from the Secretary of the Railway Mission, 18, New Bridge-street, London, E.C.

Death of Mr. Gawin Kirkham,

SECRETARY OF THE OPEN-AIR MISSION.

It is with profound regret that we announce the death of the honoured Secretary of the Open-Air Mission. He passed away in his sixtieth year, after a severe illness of only five days' duration, at his residence in the north of London, on Sunday evening last. His end was perfectly peaceful. In his last utterances he bore noble testimony to the preciousness of those truths he had so faithfully proclaimed for more than forty years, and in a period of unconsciousness he gave a tender communion address to an imaginary audience. His last utterance was—"There is one offering for sin—Jesus."

Our departed friend performed his last public service in the interests of the Mission, to which he was so devotedly attached, at Sheffield, on Saturday, Sunday, and Monday, April 30, May 1, and 2. On the Sunday he preached in the open air three times, and indoors twice or thrice. On the Monday he lectured on his "Broad and Narrow Way" picture. On Tuesday he returned home, having evidently overtaxed his strength and contracted an affection of the larynx. This rapidly developed, together with congestion of the kidneys. On Friday he seemed better, but the improvement was only temporary. Weakness of the heart and extreme exhaustion supervened, and on Sunday, after about two hours of unconsciousness, he departed to be with the Lord.

For nearly thirty years (with a brief interval at Mildmay Conference Hall) Mr. Kirkham laboured with great devotion as Secretary of the Open-Air Mission. His labours extended from one end of the land to the other, and even to Holland, where he was instrumental in starting open-air preaching; to America, where he greatly revived and extended it; and to other countries. He attracted to himself the affection of hundreds of his brethren, not only those most intimately associated with the work of the Open-Air Mission, but others scattered throughout the world, and of every denomination. His private Charity Fund ministered relief to innumerable needy ones; and his personal bounty never flagged. Many hearts will bleed by reason of his removal, and hundreds of prayers will ascend for his widow in this hour of her sad bereavement.

Mr. Kirkham's funeral will take place to-day (Thursday) at the Great Northern Cemetery, New Southgate, at 2.30 p.m.

ANTI-GAMBLING.—On Sunday afternoon the Conference at St. James's Hall took the form of an Anti-Gambling Demonstration, Archdeacon Sinclair, Rev. Hugh Price Hughes, and others taking part. The Archdeacon, in his stirring address, showed gambling to be selfish, debasing, unsettling for regular work, ruinous, immoral, unmanly, and unutterably silly.

REV. JOHN McNEILL IN SCOTLAND.

THE GLASGOW MISSION.

A meeting of a most interesting character was held last week in the Christian Institute. The body of the hall was completely filled with over five hundred persons professing to have received blessing during Mr. McNeill's Glasgow mission. There were letters of apology from a large number who could not be present. Mr. McNeill was not able to come, owing to an engagement in Edinburgh on his way to hold a fortnight's mission in Dundee.

Mr. W. M. Oatts, having explained the object of the meeting, and counselled the young believers to be students of the Word of God, Dr. A. A. Bonar said it was one of the most interesting meetings he had attended for many years. It reminded him of the five hundred brethren to whom the Lord manifested Himself alive after his resurrection. It was of the first importance to abide in the fellowship of the Lord Jesus—never to let a day pass without being able to say, "I have seen Jesus to-day." Then read the Word, and read it early in the day as a letter fresh from the Master. Many timid Christians are afraid of the influence of old companions, of the power of the world and worldlings. The remedy for this is to aim constantly at getting hold of some one and leading them to Jesus—Christ's own advice to Peter when he was moved by curiosity to ask concerning his fellow-disciples, "And what shall this man do?" "What is that to thee? Follow thou Me." This was the way to prevent backsliding and come victorious to the end.

Rev. T. C. Donald said that in the meeting were doubtless many who would in the future be ministers, missionaries, and Christian workers in their various spheres. He counselled them to begin, in their present surroundings, in the home and in the Church, to work in faith and in the power of the Spirit, to avoid censoriousness, and ever exalt Christ.

Upwards of forty persons from the audience having given personal testimony of benefit received at Mr. McNeill's meetings, short addresses were given by Rev. Wm. Ross, Cowcaddens, Mr. D. J. Findlay, Mr. Dunn, Mr. Connell, and Mr. Alex. Sloan.

THE DUNDEE MISSION.

The fortnight's mission here was well begun on Sabbath last by three crowded gatherings in Kinnaird Hall, when addresses were given to Christian workers, to women and to men respectively. Meetings are to be held for business people on the week-days, and Gospel services for the multitude at night. Mr. Burke sang solos at each service.

Homes for Little Boys.

The friends interested in these Homes were favoured with brilliant weather on Saturday, on the occasion of the annual Sunday-school fete at Farningham. The result was that a large number of scholars, teachers, and friends went down from London to enjoy the afternoon's outing in the spacious and beautiful demesne of the Homes, so pleasantly situated in the heart of Kent.

Among the most interesting features of the occasion was the quaint and picturesque ceremony of crowning the May Queen. The honour of providing the "Queen" this year belonged to Offord-road School, Barnsbury, this school being the one which has sent the largest contribution to the Homes during the year, and the young lady crowned "Queen" being the scholar who had individually collected the largest amount.

During the afternoon the visitors were favoured with an abundance of entertainment, including selections of music by the Farningham Boys' Band, singing by the Swanley and Farningham choirs, and musical drill by the girls of the Offord-road Band of Hope and the Farningham Boys. In the intervals the friends availed themselves of the opportunities afforded of seeing the boys at work in the various workshops, and of thus having their interest increased in the practical work of training these boys to become useful members of society.

BISHOPSGATE MISSION TO THE JEWS.—The new Mission House in Devonshire-street, E.C., was opened on Saturday afternoon. Mr. Joseph Peters presided over a gathering of friends, who were hopeful that the spacious accommodation now provided will greatly promote the objects of the Mission. In addition to the preaching hall, there are rooms for classes, and in which interested and inquiring Jews may assemble for reading and conversation. The total cost of the undertaking has been about £1600, of which a considerable portion has yet to be raised. The missionary is Mr. Abraham Hornstein, who may be addressed at the Mission House.

The Pastors' College Conference.

Under the shadow of an irreparable loss, the Pastors' College Evangelical Association assembled last week for their annual conference; and it was but natural that the whole proceedings from first to last should be tinged with sadness. True, no sign of mourning appeared in the familiar College hall; but, behind the chair which the honoured president had been wont to fill, stood a bust, beautiful and life like, yet emphasizing, by its very coldness and silence, the absence of him whose vigorous and hearty tones were wont to ring from that platform. Yet, while the shadow rested on all, and while each speaker made some personal reference to him who has gone, it was made abundantly clear that those who are left behind are resolved that in some sense they shall be "baptized for the dead." He who so long had led them had been called hence, but they who had sat at his feet seek grace to follow in his steps, and carry on the work he loved and the warfare he waged so nobly and well.

At the opening meeting, held on Monday, Rev. Dr. A. T. Pierson said that somehow he felt that if their late friend were not with them in body he might be in spirit, for if there was any communication between the two worlds, what a joy it would be for the immortal spirit of their late president to look upon them!

Rev. James A. Spurgeon said, at the evening meeting, that we had to go and see America before we could understand its people. They had large hearts, and they had showed him no small kindness, thus changing his opinions in regard to Americans. Mr. Ira D. Sankey then sang "Throw out the Life Line," and remarked that when he came to London he always tended towards the Tabernacle, which had been a religious home to him when he first came to London. Mr. M'Kinney referred to the work in the United States. He hoped many more men from the College would go out to America, and he assured them of a cordial welcome. Mr. J. L. Rogers, a missionary from the Congo, gave an interesting account of the Congo, the adjacent country, and the work which was in progress. Sixteen years ago the country was unknown, and now they had five stations and a goodly number of converts.

THE PRESIDENTIAL ADDRESS.

A trying ordeal it must have been for the acting President to stand before students and members and deliver, in his departed brother's place, the annual address. All who have ever been privileged to be present know how on these occasions Mr. Spurgeon seemed at his best, and to strike in his burning words a high key-note of faith and service. Yet the task had to be faced, and well did the speaker acquit himself. On Tuesday morning, after a season of earnest waiting on God, in which Professor Marchant, Revs. A. McCaig, C. Spurgeon, and Dr. Pierson took part,

Rev. James A. Spurgeon based his address on 2 Cor. iii. 18, "But we all, with open face beholding as in glass the glory of the Lord, are changed into the same image from glory to glory, even as by the Spirit of the Lord," dwelling naturally in his opening sentences on the loss sustained in the departure of the President. Passing on, he said that if the Bible was to be to them the voice of God, it must be authoritative, adequate, and finished. They had no hesitation in declaring, "Thus saith the Lord." The view that the Bible gave of Christ was an authoritative view. When they saw Him in that view they might well tell what they had seen, and declare openly and dogmatically what they had felt and tasted and handled of the blessed Word of God. That Word must be adequate, because it was adapted to their need, and because it was available for their aid. Adapted as bread was adapted to meet their hunger, or as water to slake their thirst. This precious book was life to the soul, and music to the heart. It was the water of life from which they might freely drink. He knew of nothing adapted to their needs so much as truth "as it is in Jesus." And it was available. It did not remain at the bottom of a well, but flowed at their feet. They had not to go and fetch it up, or to bring it down, but it flowed by them. All they had to do was to "call upon the name of the Lord and be saved." The truth was within the reach of every man, and with unveiled face they had to look and see the glory of the Lord as it was revealed in the glorious Gospel of the grace of God. Some of them might be regarded as fossils. They wanted a fixed and finished portrait of their Master that was finished years ago, while others required a new one every year. God's Bible never wanted revising, or a list of "errata" added at the end, to which they must refer. They had a perfected revelation of Jesus Christ. They had "the faith once for all delivered to the saints." They had never found their Master change. "Jesus Christ the same yesterday, to-day, and for ever."

At the Social Meeting in the evening Mr. Charles Spurgeon presided, and gave an address on the charms of the Christian ministry as shown in the life of his father.

WEDNESDAY'S SERVICE AT NORWOOD.

On Wednesday morning Professor D. Gracey read a thoughtful paper on "The Gospel of the Times," showing in masterly fashion how the Gospel meets the needs of man in this, as in all ages, and is ever the Gospel for the time. Effete, stale, and old-fashioned as some delight to call it, the Gospel of Divine grace is now, as ever, "the power of God unto salvation to every one that believeth." Addresses followed by Pastor D. Bax, on "The Tongue of the Learned"; and Pastor T. J. Longhurst, on "Power for Aggressive Service."

In the afternoon some four hundred brethren met at Norwood, and held an informal service, conducted by Pastor W. Cuff, who closed a brief address in these words: It had been said that the last of the Puritans was dead; but he thought he voiced their deepest convictions in saying that there were eight hundred of them left who were not ashamed to say: "We are Puritans, and hold the Puritan faith as our beloved and glorified leader has done." It might cost them something in the present day to give trumpet-tongue to these old truths, but they would once more pledge themselves never to furl the flag that fell from the hands of dear Mr. Spurgeon on the night he died at Mentone.

THE SUBSCRIBERS' SUPPER.

The Subscribers' Supper on Wednesday evening proved that friends are hearty and generous as ever in support of the College, inasmuch as they mustered well and gave largely.

Rev. James A. Spurgeon felt that supporters and subscribers ought to know clearly and emphatically that the College was to be carried on on the old lines. The trustees having elected him as President, with full power, so long as vital truth is preserved, he desired it to be understood plainly that the book his brother had loved and obeyed, the faith he had held and taught, would still animate and inspire the whole work.

As to the present operations, the speaker said that there are seventy-three students now in course of training, twenty-seven of whom have been received since the appearance of the last report. During the same period seventeen of the students have finished their college course, and left for pastorates at home or missionary work abroad. In thirty-six years 863 men have been educated in the College, of whom 627 are still in the ranks as pastors, missionaries, or evangelists. Eleven are permanently invalided, eighty are dead, while for various reasons eighty-five names have been removed from the roll of membership. There are as many applications for admission as ever, as many churches calling for true and faithful preachers as ever, as great need for the Gospel as ever, and the work must go on.

Mr. George T. Congreve, who presided, opened with a touching tribute to the late President, whom he characterised as "bold as a lion, yet tender as a lamb; a prophet of fire with a woman's gentleness and pity." As to the College itself, he could not help remembering how dear it was to Mr. Spurgeon's heart—it might, in fact, be termed his first and longest love. When we thought of what God had done by it, when we saw the stamp of men now in the College, when we thought of the need on every hand, we could only say in the old school-boy's rhyme, "Go on, go on, go on, go on!"

Pastor J. Stubbs followed with a stirring account of work off the beaten tracks in the villages around Patna. The land of India is full of darkness which may be felt, but it is accessible, and the Christian Church is surely first of all responsible for the great Eastern empire entrusted to our care. He (the speaker) trusted many would be roused to come to the help of the Lord in India.

A story quite as stirring and moving was next told by Mr. N. H. Patrick, of Tangier, who has spent some three and a-half years labouring among the Jews—"black-capped, bare-footed, and downtrodden;" the Moors, the Sultan's army, the "saints" or devotees, and the prisoners, many of whom, innocent and untried, suffered horrid cruelties. The cry from Tangier, as from Patna, is "More men!"

A young student, Mr. Smith, of Langham, told something of village work near Colchester.

Rev. A. T. Pierson, D.D., followed with a stirring address, in which he spoke of the grand question of the day being "the kind of ministry supplied to the Church of God." Having long been accustomed to lecture to students, he wished to say deliberately, "I have never seen an equal number of students in any institution possessed with an equal amount of ability, moral courage, and spiritual force." Three things he wanted chiefly to say—as to the matter, the manner, and the men. The matter must be the old Gospel, unchanging as the God who never changes. The manner must be simple and direct, not, as one said, "like a cotton bale, soft, downy, fussy, confused." The man is of first importance, and the College turns out men of deep spiritual life, in whom intellectual acquisition has not dulled the edge and ardour of conviction, nor chilled the power of the Holy Ghost. Culture is no doubt desirable, but the brilliance of an iceberg does not diminish its intense coldness. A blade may be sharpened until there is no blade left; a flower may be cultivated until the ovaries disappear. He held that in the education in this institution both dangers were avoided.

In a closing word about means, Dr. Pierson maintained the College is a solemn trust, and to suffer it to want support is to be recreant to a holy trust bequeathed to the Church by one we profess to love and honour.

Rev. David Davies followed in a few vigorous and genial words, after which the friends adjourned to the Lecture Hall, where supper was prepared. As is the custom, gifts and promises were sent in and announced from the platform. The Chairman headed the list with £250, several gifts of £100 followed (one being from Mrs. Spurgeon), and the whole amount reached the sum of £2,269.

On Thursday morning the proceedings took the form of a service in memory of the late Mr. Spurgeon, and in the evening a public meeting was held, when Mr. Sankey was present and sang "When the Mists have Rolled Away," and addresses were delivered by Professors Gracey and Ferguson, Revs. J. A. Brown and W. Cuff; while Mr. Sankey sang a beautiful new rendering of "Rock of Ages." Mrs. Spurgeon expressing the wish that Messrs. Moody and Sankey would give a fortnight to the Tabernacle, Mr. Sankey replied that until Mr. Moody returned from the Holy Land no future plans could be made, but he hoped a visit to the Tabernacle might be arranged.

On Friday the Conference closed with a sermon by Mr. Fullerton—in the absence of Pastor A.G. Brown, owing to the serious illness of his wife—after which all united in the communion of the Lord's Supper, and the proceedings terminated.

Freedmen's Missions Aid Society.

This Society, formed in 1872 to aid in sending coloured freedmen to work as missionaries in Africa, issues a modest little report of work in Sherbro' and Mendi districts (Sierra Leone) We read that:—"At all the stations there are day and Sunday schools, and religious services regularly held by the missionary or evangelist, and at most of the stations industrial work of one kind or another is carried on. At some there are farms of 160 acres, where coffee, arrowroot, and cotton, are profitably grown; at others there are sawmills, blacksmiths', tailors', shoemakers', and carpenters' shops. At Shaingay, the principal town in Sherbro', there is a training institute, built and endowed by Mr. and Mrs. Rufus Clark, where about fifteen students receive from one to three years' Christian training, to fit them to become missionaries, teachers, or evangelists. At the head of it is Rev. D. F. Wilberforce, himself a native of that part, and who has spent some eight years in American universities."

Sending the report the Secretary says:—"We have, this morning only, received a long letter from our Superintendent at Sherbro', West Africa, stating that six of our stations are unsupplied with missionaries or evangelists for lack of means, and yet the people are clamouring for the Gospel, and during last year raised among themselves upwards of £200 towards the support and maintenance of the missionaries and the mission buildings."

Communications should be made to the secretary Mr. W. Jenks, Freedmen's Missions Aid Society, 18 Adam-street, Strand, W.C.

Workers for Congoland.

An interesting gathering of London friends assembled at Harley House, on Wednesday last week, to welcome home Miss Guinness from China, and Mrs. McKittrick and Dr. Harry Guinness from Africa, and at the same time to bid Godspeed to a party of missionaries setting out for Bolololand. An hour was spent pleasantly in conversation and the examination of many interesting curios and photographs brought by Dr. Guinness from the Congo, and then a meeting was held in the large hall of the College, at which Mr. T. A. Denny presided. He opened with a few cordial words of welcome to the returned travellers from China and Bolololand, evidently voicing the sympathy of all present.

Dr. Harry Guinness, before introducing the members of the outgoing Congo party, spoke briefly as to his recent experiences in Congoland. He heartily thanked all for their prayers on his behalf during his absence. No doubt he had seen a good deal of trial whilst in Africa; he was nearly always sick himself or attending to somebody else who was unwell, for the past year had been a peculiarly fatal one on the Congo. Every mission had suffered in this respect, and now he had heard of the death of Mr. Lapsley, of the American Presbyterian Mission, on the Kassai tributary of the Congo. He had himself been present at the deaths of two of the beloved missionaries of the Congo-Balolo Mission, John McKittrick and John Luff. Mr. McKittrick, the leader of the Mission, whose name would be fragrant for many a year, was buried eight hundred miles from the mouth of the river; he lies close by the little path that leads from one town to another, within twenty yards from the spot where he used to preach the Gospel of Christ every morning. There the natives, as they go hither and thither, see the grave, and are reminded by it of the example and the message of one who died for them.

These deaths and frequent sicknesses caused some to say, "Is it worth while to send anybody to Africa to preach the Gospel at such a cost? Are the Africans worth it?" He asked such people another question: "Was there very much that was attractive in us to bring Jesus Christ to Calvary?" He loved us and died for us, and surely we ought to love, and be ready, if needs be, to die for others. Besides, did not Christ die for these as well as for us? If we have not a warrant to preach the Gospel to the Africans, we have not a warrant to preach it to anybody. We ought not to hold back because danger threatens.

He had sad news to tell, but they were swallowed up in the glad tidings which he also carried. When he ascended the Congo he passed on the Upper River station after station, at not one of which was a single soul who had yet received the Gospel of Jesus. He was on the Upper Congo and amongst the rivers of Bolololand about five months, and on retracing his steps he found that the Lord had within those five months entirely changed the state of the missions—had opened the windows of heaven and had sent blessing down, droppings of the promise of great showers that he was persuaded would soon descend. He had the profound privilege of baptizing at Bonginda the first five converts—lads, one of whom was present in the hall,—and there were now some thirty at that one station waiting for baptism.

At all the other stations he had found that God was blessing the Word to the salvation of souls; and he was able to record one of the most wonderful things that has ever occurred in the history of missions—the fact that within three years of the outgoing of the first party of missionaries to Bolololand, at all the four inland stations of the Mission, there are those who now name the name of Jesus Christ. He knew no field in the whole world more promising than this. They had no religions of antiquity that required to be uprooted, no ancient prejudices to be overcome, no false faiths to be fought such as exist in North Africa, China, and elsewhere; they deal with simple impressionable peoples, who were willing to listen to the Gospel message.

In conclusion, Dr. Guinness addressed himself to the outgoing party. He could wish them no greater or better thing than that the Lord should fill them with his own Spirit. He had yet to see the missionary, baptized with the Spirit of God, at whose station the work was being carried out according to God's lines, where blessing was not forthcoming.

The outgoing missionaries then gave brief farewell addresses. Mr. Haupt is going out to the field for a second time, on this occasion accompanied by his newly-married wife, who is the daughter of Dr. Hadden, of Dublin. He quoted as his principle of testimony 2 Cor. iv. 5-11, "We preach not ourselves," &c. Mr. Coote rejoiced in the certainty he had that he was called of God to the mission-field. He was not "taking his life in his hands"; he would not if he could, but he was simply trusting all in the hands of Jesus. Miss Judd spoke equally hopefully. She was glad now to be going in person to the Congo, where her heart had been for many years. Miss Wheldpdale told of the way in which the past four or five years the Lord had laid work on the Congo upon her heart, and had eventually removed all the obstacles.

Miss Guinness spoke a few words of encouragement and help to the outgoing workers, whom she congratulated on their calling to serve the Lord in the foreign field. She produced a rosary which belonged to a Chinese woman, who for thirty-five years prayed day and night for a blessing she could not find. At length light dawned into her dark heart, and to her joy she found the Saviour. Although mission work has its dangers and trials, it assuredly yields in the present life a hundredfold, according to the promise of Christ. The speaker told the new missionaries that what the heathen want is not statements of doctrines, or copies of the Bible, important and precious though these are, but they want Christ in our lives. They will read our books and listen earnestly to our words, but more than this, they want our living. We may talk to them of patience and long-suffering, but what do they know of these? They know them if they see them in us. They read us through and through, and we must be interpreters to them of the precious truths of the Gospel. What is wanted is that Jesus shall appear in our looks and actions. Miss Guinness further spoke of the missionary's responsibility, not only as regards the heathen, but also in relation to his fellow-workers on the field, emphasizing the importance of always being so directly in contact with the Saviour as to be naturally a channel of blessing. She concluded by assuring the outgoing missionaries that in their loneliness and anxiety, in all circumstances, they will find that Jesus does satisfy.

The workers for the Congo having left, a second meeting was held, presided over by Rev. Dr. Grattan Guinness. Alluding to the work of the College, he said that at the present time twenty-two missionaries are leaving; in addition to those for the Congo, some go to North Africa and India, and others to West and South Africa, the Rocky Mountains, and South America. Then there were 145 students in the three colleges of the East London Missionary Institute, preparing for service in various parts of the world.

The work and workers were remembered in prayer to God. Both the meetings were full of earnest purpose, as well as abounding in evangelistic interest. Mrs. Guinness, senior, though physically stronger than of late, was unable to attend. This was the first meeting of the kind at which she has not been present, and her absence was universally regretted.

Mrs. Amanda Smith.

Dear Sir,—May I inform the friends of Mrs. Smith, through your widely circulated journal, that her small annuity of £10 is now secured (particulars and list of subscribers will be found in The Friend for April 29). As there were only two subscribers to the purchase from the United States, I am in hopes that her friends there who are not biassed by the prejudice against colour may subscribe to secure her the same amount.

Her address is 64, Park-street, Newark, New Jersey, but she expects to visit England soon. Her services as an evangelist seem to be in constant demand.—Yours truly, M. Davis.

Foxrock, Co. Dublin.

HENRI LASSERRE, whose translation of the four Gospels had such a large circulation with the the Pope's approbation, and subsequently saw this approbation withdrawn, is about to republish the book. Courage it needs when the book is in the Index, and the author is a serious Catholic! But this courage he has, for he believes it is the Lord's absolute and gracious will that his Word shall be read by all. He is a man of prayer, of faith, of enlightened mind. What he appreciates are Christians who practice the Lord's commands, whatever name they bear. Stiff doctrine with worldly conformity he abhers. He is treading a blessed path. Pray for him, brethren! He has found Christians who, he acknowledges, "have the reaction of life, true life, against vain form."—Evangelical Christendom.

A PRAYER CONVENTION.

The three days of prayer last week at Manchester, referred to in The Christian recently, has been a time of remarkable power. Those present believe they are only the beginning of many similar meetings, and the herald of great blessing to the Church at home to missionaries abroad, and to the heathen, whose needs were laid before the Lord in a chain of believing prayers, every link of which seemed to be welded in the forge of mighty faith and intense devotion.

About two hundred Christians met to spend three days in prayer, and the first words at the opening meeting was an announcement that Miss Campbell, who had called us together, was ill, and could not be at her own meetings. All felt that the human was to be entirely withdrawn, and that the direction was to be cast wholly on the Lord. With the exception of a few words at the closing meetings from Mr. Stevens, from China, Rev. R. J. Ward, who has resigned his church and is going out to India, and Mr. Mercer, lately returned from a journey of inspection in South Africa, the meetings wholly consisted of prayer and singing. The missionary hymns, twenty in number, and written for the occasion, were a distinct feature and a delightful one. The tenderness, pathos, and feeling with which the friends sang showed that they were singing in the power of the Holy Ghost. The impression produced by these sung prayers was most marked. Apart from the real blessing that must flow from direct answers to prayer, the spiritual influence on those present, and testified to by many, was marvellous.

I would not write about this matter at all, for I feel as if it were almost too holy to be paraded in print, but it may be that similar gatherings might be convened in other towns. The Master said: "Pray ye to the Lord of the harvest that He may send out more labourers to his harvest." Has this been done as it should? There have been plenty of meetings to ask men for money and workers, but has the divinely-prescribed method of obtaining labourers been fully or fairly tried?

Many expressed their gratitude to Miss Campbell for having called them together. It is interesting to know that many who could not be present set aside the time for prayer, and that there were little simultaneous gatherings at Kingstown (Ireland), Marseilles, Weston-super-Mare, &c.

PRAYER FOR REVIVAL.

The weekly prayer-meeting for revival was held, as usual, on Monday, at two p.m., in the Y.M.C.A. Rooms, Aldersgate-street, E.C. There was noticeable a distinct improvement in numbers, as well as a deepening of interest in the objects sought to be attained.

After much earnest prayer, a brief, informal conference was held for the purpose of hearing suggestions on the methods to be pursued, when some valuable remarks were made. Dr. Smyth told how in the course of a previous revival sixty persons were, by the power of the Spirit of God, convicted of sin in the course of a single address.

Mr. Meyer said that there seemed yet wanting the perfect oneness in mind and purpose which might be expected to precede the lifting of the veil and the revelation of the inner thought of God in regard to this matter which had drawn us together.

A suggestion was offered by one brother that at a stated hour of every day, wherever they might be, Christians should resolve to plead this cause before the throne of God, and go on until the prayer prevailed. Will friends everywhere join in such a concert of prayer, and see what the Lord is pleased to do for the glory of his great name. They are, however, specially invited to be present at the weekly meeting.

HEBRON.—We are glad to hear of another evangelistic effort in this Judean town. Dr. Alexander G. Dalbak writes to us: "Our society in Berlin—the Jerusalem Verein—has established two houses in Hebron, one for medical work, in which a dispensary is opened every morning to patients of all nationalities. The other house is a school, in which a teacher with his family resides. There are now about ten Christian families in Hebron, and as our work is general these friends meet with us in all our religious meetings and attend our service on Sunday. Though we are like lambs in the midst of wolves, yet we are able to carry the lamp of the Gospel into this dark place and preach in the name of Christ."

A MISSIONARY'S LETTERS TO HIS BOYS

In the life of that brave and noble missionary, James Gilmour of Mongolia, just published by The Religious Tract Society, there are some letters written by him to his sons after their mother's death, and when he was on a missionary journey. We give two of these letters, feeling sure that our young readers will like them:—

Ta Cheng Tzu, Sept. 3, 1887.

My Dear Sons,—I am well, and thankful for it. The three Christians here come daily to every worship. There are here others who want to be Christians, but who have not courage enough. One man's wife won't let him be a Christian; she says she will kill herself if he does. Another man is in the same case. He is a Chinaman; his wife is a Mongol. Still another man has a Mongol wife, and she keeps him back. The other day he came and confessed Christianity. His wife does not consent but only says, "We'll see." Another man's father hinders his son from Christianity. The lad is a very nice lad.

Yesterday was the day when people make offerings of food and fruit at the graves. One of the Christians was sent to do so. He brought the melon here and we ate half of it with him.

Still another man is forbidden by his father to be a Christian. That is, in all five men in this one place who are Christians at heart, and read our books and are learning Christianity, but do not confess Christ. Do you know what Jesus says about such people (Matt. x. 32-39)? Jesus says that if they obey others rather than Him, they are not worthy to be his disciples. I am praying for all these people. I ask you, too, to pray for these and all like them, that they may be able to confess Christ. It is difficult for men in China to be Christians. How different with you! We all want you to be Christians. Your father and friends all help you to be Christians, and if you are not Christians we are all distressed.

Boys, do be true to Jesus. In your words and deeds honour him. Make his heart glad. Jesus wants your love. He loves you and died for you. You cannot but love him if you think how He loves you. I am just going to breakfast, and then for a day on the street trying to tell the people about Jesus. God bless you, my dear lads. . . It is now afternoon, and I write a few lines. A lad in a shop here has a tame dove. He has painted it all over different colours. It looks absurd. I don't like to see it sitting about the shop. Doves look so happy flying about. Mamma, too, liked to see birds on the trees and houses, wild, not kept in cages.

I guess you are just about getting your breakfast. Here it is about four p.m. I wish I could see you. My love to you, my dear sons. May you always, both now and when grown, be boys and men who know and love Jesus. I pray for you. —Your loving father,

James Gilmour.

Ch'as Yang, Mongolia, Nov. 17, 1888.

My Dear Sons,—On the street to-day I saw a crowd standing. I went up to see what they were looking at, and found two Chinese gentlemen showing off a trained bird. One of the men stood down on the street. The other put three little flags so that they stuck on the wall. The bird then flew away, caught up a flag and came flying back to its master on the street, carrying the flag in its bill. It looked very clever. Every time the bird brought a flag it was rewarded by being fed with some nice food that it liked. It was very pretty to see it. But, after all, it was a trifling employment for two grown gentlemen to be engaged in. Even the crowd of ordinary Chinese seemed to think so. . . .

I am a good deal distressed to see the boys in the market-place. They steal just as much as ever they can from the sellers of straw and fuel, pluck out handfuls from the bundles and run away not at all ashamed. If the owner does not chase them they get off with it. If he throws down his load and runs after them they drop the plunder, the owner picks it up, and no more is said about it.

In summer little naked boys follow people carrying fruit in open baskets, and steal it as they can. It all seems so dishonest, and no one seems to care. On the street lots of people will see a thief stealing a man's pipe, and never say a word, because it is not their business.

I often think of you and pray for you. You do not forget mamma, I am sure. She is with Jesus. Be you his lads, and do your lessons well, and He will guide you all through life. Be diligent and careful lads, and you will grow up useful and honoured men. Constantly tell Jesus all your affairs.—Your affectionate father.

NOBODY'S DARLINGS.

In squalid alley, in court and street,
These little ones daily roam;
Cold and hungry, with aching feet,
Strangers to love and home.
Early cast upon life's rough way,
"Nobody's darlings," we sadly say.

There are innocent eyes, all wet with tears,
Haloed by tangled gold;
There are faces wizened, but not with years,
Young hearts grown hard and cold—
Children whose childhood long since has fled,
In the weary struggle for daily bread.

No lullaby tender, no good-night kiss,
Or caress of a gentle hand,
Lulls them, smiling in tranquil bliss,
To the regions of slumberland.
No love to hallow, and guide, and smooth;
No voice to counsel, and bless, and soothe.

Nobody's darlings! Poor waifs and strays!
Take heed ye do not despise,
But love and cherish these little ones,
So dear in the Christ-King's eyes;
Whose guardian angels in heaven above
Behold our Father, the God of Love.

MISS ROBINSON AND THE SOLDIERS.

In an address to a large meeting at St. James's Hall, on Thursday last, Miss Robinson, of Portsmouth, said that her years of experience had forced upon her the conclusion that soldiers, as a class, are restless and discontented. It is usually such traits of character that lead young men to enter the army, and association with others of similar dispositions works no improvement. Many causes of complaint have been removed, but the discontent remains. Soldiers want something—they know not what. They want Christ.

Besides the Soldiers' Institute in Portsmouth, where Miss Robinson and the ladies associated with her live at their own expense and work as God gives them opportunity, other teetotal houses have been established as branches, a private hotel for officers and their relatives, the Sailors' Welcome at Portsea, the Mission Buildings in Nobbs-lane, the Speedwell at Landport, and the Soldiers' and Sailors' Institute at Alexandria in Egypt. At Portsmouth all regiments embark in rotation for foreign service and disembark on their return. In the first case, wives married without leave must be left behind with their children, often friendless and destitute, and these look to the Institute for aid. Formerly, sheer starvation used to drive many wives into sin. Widows and orphans of soldiers who die abroad are landed at Portsmouth and the Institute receives them. Soldiers' mothers, and other relatives who come to meet the troopships, or families awaiting embankment are accommodated at the Institute. The lady associates visit the sick, the wounded, and the military prisoners. Forty meetings are held in the Institute every week. A shop to teach trades to young soldiers has been equipped under skilled superintendence. The advantages of a club and a home are supplied to all soldiers alike as well as to the thousands of time expired men who are landed yearly at Portsmouth. All the Institute work is supported by voluntary contributions. There are no endowments or vested funds, and the task of raising the necessary money rests on Miss Robinson.

While she regretted that now there seems less sterling faithfulness to temperance pledges than in earlier days, she acknowledges with thankfulness that God is moving the hearts of the soldiers to turn to Him in greater numbers than ever before.

MRS. BAEYERTZ IN CORK.

This lady is a convert from Judaism. For some twelve or thirteen years she has been widely known in Australia as a gifted and successful evangelist. She has recently laboured in Canada, and has now come over for a short visit to Ireland and England. Her mission in Cork began on the 25th ult.; in about a week she goes to Belfast, then to Dublin, and subsequently to England.

She is warmly commended to the Christian Church by John G. Paton, missionary to the New Hebrides; Joseph Cook, of Boston; Dr. Gordon, of Boston; N. B. Macartney, vicar of Caulfield, Melbourne; and other ministers of all denominations. These brethren speak warmly of her faithful and instructive unfolding of the Scriptures, her clear and comprehensive grasp of the law and the Gospel, and her power to attract large audiences.

On her arrival in Ireland she spent her first Sunday in Queenstown. In the afternoon she delivered her first Gospel address in Ireland in the Parochial School House, to a large audience, from Genesis iii., and in the evening spoke in the Methodist Church, which was crowded, on "The unpardonable sin." The address was solemn and searching, and, at the after-meeting, a number professed to decide for Christ.

The mission began in Cork on Monday night, in the large hall of the Assembly Rooms, when a large gathering were present, who listened with wonderful interest as Mrs. Baeyertz told of her "conversion from Judaism to Christianity." On Tuesday "The Two Offerings of Cain and Abel" was the theme through which she showed the difference between a "religious man" and a "spirit-born" man. The meeting on Wednesday was for women and girls only, and was, we understand, a time of much blessing. On Thursday night Mrs. Baeyertz delivered a remarkable address on "The Passover," in which she set forth the atonement of the Lord Jesus Christ and the absolute necessity for substitution and appropriation.

Probably no address given during the ten days of the Mission was followed by more blessed results than that on the unpardonable sin, delivered to a crowded gathering on Sunday night. The number of young men who then decided for Christ was a most cheering sight. On Monday night "The Great White Throne" was the subject of a deeply solemn and powerful address. Two addresses were delivered on "The Lord's Second Coming."

On Wednesday night the Hall was engaged, so the Pastor and trustees of the large Methodist church in Patrick-street kindly gave the use of that fine building for the closing meeting, which was a holiness one, and to which admission was by ticket. The church was full long before the hour for beginning the service. This was a solemn and most delightful meeting. The power of the Lord was present to heal. Mrs. Baeyertz spoke on Romans vi. 10, 11, 12, 14. For the prayer-meeting which followed about seven hundred remained. It was truly a refreshing time.

Almost every afternoon during the Mission Mrs. Baeyertz gave "Bible Readings" on Holiness. These were particularly helpful, clear, and stimulating, and were largely attended. Some of the subjects treated at these readings were "Fruit Bearing," "A Clean Heart," "Worry," "Seven Steps in the Blessed Life," "Deliverance from Worry—Rest."

For the visit of this deeply-taught student of God's Word, the churches in Cork are indebted to Mrs. Tottenham, of Wimbledon, Mrs Daunt, of Queenstown; and Mr. T. A. Bailey, and Miss J. Babington, of Cork, secretaries respectively of the Y.M.C.A. and the Y.W.C.A., under whose auspices this united Mission was held. We trust the Christians of England will warmly welcome and "entertain the stranger," and support by earnest believing prayer this much-honoured handmaiden of the Lord.

CHILDREN'S SCRIPTURE UNION.—The following are the portions for the ensuing week:—Sun., May 15, Judges vi. 11-24; Mon., May 16, vi. 25-40; Tues., May 17, vii. 1-12; Wed., May 18, vii. 13-25; Thurs., May 19, xiii. 1-14; Fri., May 20, xiii. 15-25; Sat., May 21, xiv. 1-11.

MISSIONARY REVIVAL.—Dr. Amory Bradford, of Montclair, N.J., in an article in the New York Independent, says that in order to a proper revival of interest in foreign missions there must be (1) a more consecrated and prophet-like ministry; (2) a spiritual and a united Church; (3) a fair and generous treatment of candidates for the missionary service.

Temperance Reform.

NOTES OF AN ADDRESS
BY LADY HENRY SOMERSET.

It is characteristic of this age that evil is no longer considered a necessity. The wide search-light of the Press has brought to light in great measure the hidden things of darkness, and that which is whispered in secret is proclaimed on the housetops. It is no mere spirit of optimism that inspires the world with the deep-rooted and grounded belief that evil must cease and right must triumph. No cause and no reform has ever touched the hidden springs of hatred and of blame; has never won for itself so many friends, or gained so many enemies, as the cause that we are met together to consider to-night. The liquor-traffic has hated it; it has been ridiculed in legislative assemblies; it has been unwelcomed even in the churches; it has been sneered at by the refined and the educated; it has been condemned as fanaticism and folly; and yet, amid the billows of opposition and the waves of difficulty, it has held its own in the opinion of the thinking world. On the other hand, it has been blessed by the fevered lips of those who were ready to perish; it has been sought after by the wanderers who were out on the wilds of sin and of misery; it has been hallowed by the prayers of the pure in heart; it has been baptized by the tears of mothers; it has been consecrated by years of loving toil; it has been endorsed by the principles of Christianity; it has been believed in by the best, and it has been sealed by the promises of God. What wonder, then, that those who have been so long looking for the dawn in the great night of difficulty, whose eyes have been straining towards those leaders who have been on the watch-tower, should to-day cry: "Watchman, what of the night?" And ringing back there comes the answer: "At last we see a faint light on the dim horizon; at last we believe that the day is dawning, and that the Sun of righteousness arises with healing in his wings."

Since last I had the honour of presiding at the annual meeting of the British Women's Temperance Association I have traversed some fifteen thousand miles by sea and land. In that country of the larger hope I have seen the uprising of the cities that stand as if by magic on its rolling prairies. And as I have seen these things, and have realised that the mighty throb of steam could bear me swiftly across the billows of the Atlantic, and that the on-rushing express can traverse these miles of the continent almost at lightning speed, and that the message whispered in the Old World could under the fathomless sea almost instantaneously reach the ears of the New, —all these things have seemed to me to breathe new hope, and to be voices of God to this generation that say, "Prepare ye the way of the Lord." And the reason my heart beats high with hope lies here—that whether we work for the release of our nation from the chains of the liquor traffic, or whether we labour for the uplifting of woman to her true place in the economy of God, or whether we are toiling for the betterment of those whom daily hunger drives to daily toil,—whatever be our goal to-day, ten thousand thousand voices in every land, and speaking every tongue, bid us God-speed; ten thousand hands are held out to greet us; ten thousand thousand hearts beat rhythmic with ours in a great desire for the uplifting of humanity.

In America I have seen the magnificence of the Temperance organisation—that splendid band of women, now numbering 300,000, who stand a great army to defend their country against the wrongs of the liquor traffic. I have seen these women, cultivated and refined, yet willing to bear and to do, so that they may bring liberty to those who are bound down. I have realised the riches of that great land; have seen its magnificent geographical and financial advantages. I have also visited the "dives" of the Bowery in New York, and have seen sights as pitiful, and poverty as great, as anything that disgraces this Christian land of ours. The cause of this lies in the fact that in that one city of a young nation there are already 9506 licensed liquor shops. The saloon in America is the greatest enemy of the national welfare. It is at present one of the centres of political strife. The political life of America is largely as yet centred there, and the strife that now exists between the Prohibition parties and the older political parties is to free politics from the taint of the liquor traffic.

But America has one grand and glorious advantage over the old country. She has at any rate one blessing of which as yet we know nothing —she has a sober womanhood. Throughout the whole of the time I was in America, only twice did I see any woman, in a public-house, at table d'hôte, or restaurant, touch or drink intoxicants of any kind. Wou'd that the time were come when public opinion shall be brought to bear so truly and so grandly upon this question, that those women who now serve drink in public-houses in our land shall be debarred for ever from that employment! There is a strong sentiment in the land over which the stars and stripes wave that will not suffer women to hand drink across the counter. They have a truer view of the sacredness and blessedness of womanhood. I suppose nobody goes to America without entering into the controversy as to whether Prohibition is a failure or a success. Many years ago Longfellow visited my home. His grand bearing and his noble countenance made an indelible impression on my mind, and I often longed to see the town of Portland, where he was born. But when I went to Portland, in the State of Maine, it was not to see the birthplace of Longfellow, but to see the veteran Temperance warrior, General Neal Dow. I found that they had saved up all the liquor confiscated during the previous three months that I might have the satisfaction of seeing it poured into the gutter. I have seen so many men and women dragged into the gutter that I confess when I saw the liquor going there instead I was mightily pleased. In England we hear a very chorus of opinion from the judges on the bench, from those on both sides of the House of Commons, from lawyers, from clergy, from doctors—one great unanimous verdict that the drink traffic to-day is the most ruinous thing that can possibly reign over our land. And we ask ourselves, as the time goes on, and as weary workers ply their every-day toil amongst the teeming millions—we ask ourselves, as voices preach, and hearts pray, and many are trying to redeem England from this great curse, what is the way out of the difficulty? I believe that legislation is the way. I long for the day when men will go from their knees to the ballot-box; when they shall realise that their vote is the modern soldier's sacramental oath of allegiance to God and to humanity. Then, and then only, shall this curse be removed from our land, and those who have been so long bound down shall go free.

In this emergency women must adopt the "do-everything" policy. Where darkness has filled every nook and corner, their light must shine in. The curse of drink has been sustained in the social circle; we have to follow it into custom. It has been maintained by the teachings of false science; we have to follow it into the schools. It has been hedged round by Government; we must follow it to the seat of legislation. Law is based on majorities, and we must see to it that there are majorities that shall support a law that is for the benefit of the many. True to this belief, the British women in Council have passed a resolution in favour of giving the vote to women. This resolution was not supported by some who have had long experience in this work, and who have toiled earnestly in the fields of Temperance reform. At the same time, we believe that the time has come when woman's voice needs to be uplifted upon these great social questions, and when to her should be given that power which will enable her to work effectively for home protection and home preservation. Woman's vote will always be the enacting clause of all Temperance legislation. That leader of women whom in the New World I have learned to love and reverence, Miss Frances Willard, has said: "Woman shall enter every place, and she shall brighten every place she enters." That great heart has understood the real throb of Divine motherhood—a motherhood that does not limit itself to the four walls of home, but opens its great arms and warm heart to all the children of humanity. This is what we need in every nation to-day; for the government of a nation is only the government of the larger home circle.

As we turn the pages of history, and realise that our lives are making history to-day, we remember that in all past reforms the leaders have ever been called, at some period of that reform, fools and fanatics. Wendell Phillips and Lloyd Garrison were burnt in effigy, and dragged with a halter round their necks through the streets of Boston. To-day they stand in their country's history honoured as the heroes of a great reform. It may be that in this fight for clearer brains and happy homes hard names will be heard and motives will be misunderstood; but if we bear these things with true-hearted patience the reward shall come in the homes that shall be brightened and the faces that shall smile upon us. For all reformers are stoned until they succeed, and then the very hands that were used as weapons of offence are raised to bless. Then, when God calls us to lay down our task, we shall willingly put it by, feeling that our life's strength has gone into its performance. And as we look out on the great beyond, death is not death to us, but the lifting of the latch that lets us step into the open air.

MISS MASON'S HOUSE OF REST.

Miss Mason's Houses of Rest, both at St John's Wood and at Eastbourne, afforded during the recent Eastertide opportunities of spiritual and physical recuperation, which were eagerly seized by many. Both Houses were full of guests and the spiritual atmosphere, with the genial and happy intercourse with fellow-workers from the great harvest-fie'd, combined with the invigorating sea breezes of the latter place, sent many tired and worn-out workers back to their labour strengthened and refreshed in body and soul.

The monthly meeting at Finchley-road was held on Friday. Rev. W. Fuller Gooch gave the afternoon address; around the narrative of Paul's shipwreck he clustered some very fresh and helpful thoughts.

Miss Pryde, of Paris, gave a short account of her work among governesses, &c., in that city. She is in England seeking to interest our countrymen in the Homes which she has founded. They form a home for English and American girls who visit the gay capital for the purpose of learning the language or of studying art. The temptations and dangers which beset young and inexperienced girls in Paris were described, and it was pointed out that these are of a peculiar character, owing to the vast difference which exists between English and French life and customs. The Homes situated in the Rue de la Pompe, now being rented, are to be eventually purchased for £6000. Miss Pryde appeals specially to English parents, who appreciate the dangers that beset the path of young girls.

OUR VILLAGES.—Mr. W. Hodson, North Talworth, Epsom, writes: "The cry of the inhabitants of our villages is almost as loud as that of the heathen. The one bows down to gods of stone, the other in many cases to the Ritualistic priest. There are many consecrated Christians who cannot go to India or China, but who could live in a village or country town and do a grand work. If they are not aware of the need, I pray them to come and see."

REV. D. DOIG YOUNG, M.A.,

MISSIONARY AT MAIN, TEMBULAND, SOUTH AFRICA.

IF the Dark Continent has long lain under the curse, it cannot be said in these days that no effort is being made to lift the burden. The eyes of the nations are fixed on the vast territory that Africa contains; so are the eyes of the Church. In Scotland, especially, the story of Livingstone is beginning to tell on the Christian youth of the country. Almost every Free Church Assembly sees one or more of the best students listening to this call, and volunteering for the missionary enterprise in Livingstone's chosen field. We present this week a sketch of one who early set his heart on being a missionary, and, in spite of obstacles that would have deterred any ordinary aspirant, reached the goal, and is now in the heart of the work.

(From a photograph by Messrs. Crowe and Rodgers, Stirling, N.B.)

David Doig Young was born in Liverpool in 1847. His parents, who belonged to Arbroath, shortly afterwards returning to their native town, David spent all his early years in the busy, red-walled town on the east coast of Forfarshire, and lived almost under the shadow of its venerable Abbey. His father was a hard-working mechanic, pious as well as industrious, and strongly attached to the evangelical party in the Scottish Church. For many years he was a highly-respected elder in the East Free Church, Arbroath, then under the ministry of the excellent Rev. Alexander Hislop, well known as the author of "The Two Babylons." Arbroath has long been favoured with admirable schools, and David, early manifesting a keen appetite for knowledge, received a very careful education at the Parish School of St. Vigeans. It is probable that the lad himself would have thought of being trained as a teacher. But quick-witted as he was mentally, he was debarred from the attempt by what then appeared an insuperable tendency to stammering. The career of a public speaker was about the last any one would have predicted for him.

Accordingly, not long after he had entered on his teens, he was apprenticed to the drapery business in Arbroath. Here he was still pursued by the desire for knowledge. Having learned a little Latin at school, he kept a text-book always at hand below the counter, and, like Livingstone himself, snatched every spare moment to master its contents. So far were his employers from chiding him for this, that one of them got him to act as a tutor to his own children in the evening.

It was at this period, while attending Mr. Hislop's Bible-class, that David came to know the Lord Jesus as his Saviour, and forthwith became filled with the longing to serve Him in the ministry of the Gospel. As this aim involved attendance at the University, he devoted himself to study in private, yet more earnestly, without, however, at that time mentioning to any one what his ultimate goal was. After he had been a year or two in the drapery shop, his mother, then a widow, seeing that his heart was not in his work, and that it was affecting his health, thought that the grocery trade might suit him better, and proposed that he should turn to that business. Then at last he opened his mind and said, "It is neither a draper nor a grocer that I want to be, but a minister." "A minister!" cried his mother, thinking of his deplorable stutter, "there'll be twa suns i' the lift the day you wag your head i' the pulpit."

Being a kind son and "subject" to his mother, David went to the grocery trade; but his desire for progress was invincible. Again meeting with kind employers, he was able to arrange with them for liberty to attend the High School of the town for two hours every day, that he might prepare for entering college. Here he had the advantage of the skilful teaching of Mr. John Ross, then, as now, the rector. Mr. Ross, with characteristic eagerness, helped him to the uttermost. At his instance, David got the advantage of a free scholarship in the gift of the Town Council, and was also taken home by him for extra lessons in the classical languages. Rev. S. D. F. Salmond, of Barry, now Professor at the Free Church College, Aberdeen, also heard of the lad, and stepped in to help him with the study of Greek. His mother, again fearing that he would injure his health by studying so hard, and being still convinced that he would never be able to preach, and should, therefore, throw his energies into his business, went to both Mr. Ross and Mr. Salmond, to ask them to dissuade him from going to college. She was advised to let him have at least one session: this would do him good, and might of itself bring about what she wished. After David had been nearly four years at the grocery business, his employers wished him to go to Inverkeilor, a little village about six miles from Arbroath, and take charge of a shop there. When he told this at home his sisters said, "There'll be an end of the college now, for he will have to leave school." Somewhat downcast, he went to Inverkeilor, casting his care on the heavenly Father. Once again the path of duty proved to be the path of progress. The Free Church minister at Inverkeilor at that time was Rev. W. Masterton. Examining David's mouth, Mr. Masterton became persuaded that there was a physical cause for the "stammer" that might be amenable to surgical treatment, and urged him to put the impediment into the hands of a surgeon at Aberdeen. His surmise was right. The surgeon was able to detect the drawback, and remove it. From that time, aided by faith and prayer, David began to speak with a growing freedom that surprised all who knew him. Such progress in his studies did he also make that, gaining by competition the second of several scholarships connected with the Free Presbytery of Arbroath, he was forthwith set free to enter the University of Aberdeen.

We have dwelt at what may appear disproportionate length on the early part of Mr. Young's career, chiefly to record a striking example of perseverance, and to hold out a warning to parents and friends not to be too obstinate in resisting the aspirations of young lads under their care. On his further preparatory studies it is not necessary to dwell so long. Suffice it to say, that for eight years—first at the University and then at the Hall—Mr. Young worked with exemplary diligence. Towards the close of his attendance at the University, his interest in missionary work was greatly deepened. He became secretary to the University Missionary Society; later on its president, and ultimately its agent. While at the Hall he was constantly engaged in the City Mission, and was enabled to make a home at Aberdeen for his mother and sister.

It was at this period that Africa began to attract his attention. Several of the young men who were his coadjutors went out to Lovedale in South Africa as missionary artisans. One of these sent him every month glowing accounts of the grand field that was being opened up there. Having the care of his mother at heart, Mr. Young was preparing to settle down as assistant to a minister at Huntly; but shortly thereafter he himself had the offer of a position in the College Department at Lovedale, and, accepting it, was ordained at Aberdeen in May, 1876, for the work of an African missionary.

What now of the widowed mother? She resolved to accompany her son, taking also her daughter with her. It must have been a touching sight, and deeply suggestive of the strength of the ties that knit the members of a Scottish Christian family, to see the missionary's mother—convinced now, in spite of herself, that this was her son's appointed life-work—leaving her native shores, and preparing to take her share of whatever hardships he might have to endure.

At Lovedale Mr. Young devoted himself to his work with great zeal, and speedily won the confidence of the leader of the Mission, Dr. James Stewart. Here, too, he found an accomplished help-meet in Miss Weir, daughter of the venerable missionary, Mr. James Weir, who was spared to work for no less than fifty years in South Africa. Mr. Young's sister was married to a superintendent of the artisans of the Mission, and settled at King William's Town, where her mother also found a home. This devoted mother no longer lives. Towards the end of 1880 Mr. Young came down to King William's Town, to take his mother and little niece up to Lovedale for a change. They did the journey in a "spider," driven by a native. When comparatively near home they were caught in a terrific thunderstorm, accompanied by a heavy downpour of rain. Sheltered under the canvas of the vehicle, they drove on, crossing the fords of more than one river in safety. At last they came to the Gaga, a stream about three hundred yards from Mr. Young's house. It was so much swollen that Mr. Young hesitated to attempt crossing it. But the driver was confident and headstrong, and they entered the ford, the little child singing, meanwhile, perhaps the only hymn she knew, "There is a Happy Land." No sooner did the current catch the vehicle than it was whirled down the stream and capsized. The little child's voice was at once hushed in the troubled waters; she went to the better country of which she sang, her dead body being found half-an-hour later in a hole of the bank. Mr. Young was carried along by the waves for a hundred yards, but saved himself by clutching the overhanging branch of a tree. The aged mother was too feeble to make any such effort, and found a resting-place in the African river. It was only after a period of utter prostration that the Lord raised up his servant again to resume his work. When he did so, it was to work more earnestly than ever, knowing that "the time is shortened."

After remaining at Lovedale for six years, Mr. Young was led to take part in a new enterprise for the extension of the Mission into the Transkei. Much difficulty was at first experienced in getting a suitable site for a central station, but ultimately he was led to think of Tembuland. The story of his Divine guidance in this work was recently told by Mr. Young himself at the Free Church Assembly in Inverness (1888):—

While I was engaged working for the Master at Lovedale, without the slightest intention of leaving such a hopeful field, away in distant Tembuland an aged native Christian was praying day and night in these words: "O God of Israel, send us a missionary!" Brought up at Macfarlan, she had been led to a saving knowledge of the truth under Mr. Macdiarmid's ministry. In her old age and widowhood she had moved across the Kei with her son, and at the time I refer to they were living in Tembuland. For three or four years her daily cry was: "O God of Israel, send us a missionary!" She did not cry in vain. The guide who went with us, on our first entry into the new territory, took us straight to the home of this aged believer. Until we arrived at her home we knew nothing of her continual crying to God for a missionary to be sent. When we were told about it, need I tell you how overcome we were? With my hand clasped in hers, this aged saint, almost blind from age, and unable to walk about, burst out into loud sobs, weeping for very joy at the visible evidence she had before her that God had heard her. To-day a church stands on the spot which was hallowed by her prayers.

It is at this station of Main—as it is now called, after a late venerable convener of the Foreign Missions Committee—that Mr. Young now carries on his work. It has greatly prospered under his care for the past nine years. Will not our readers pray that one who passed through so much to prepare for the work of a missionary, and who has also drunk so deeply of the cup of sorrow, may still be spared to see great things done for the people he loves, whereof they may be glad?

MILDMAY CONFERENCE, 1892.

Beloved Christian Friends,—It is once again our high privilege to invite you to unite with us at Mildmay in holy worship, devout meditation, and happy fellowship; and the remembrance of the goodness of our God in the days that are past encourages us to believe that He will be no less favourable to us in the Conference that is now proposed.

The servants of God are, as it seems to us, everywhere, feeling the increasing need of coming together—to humble themselves before Him, to seek his counsel for these perilous times, and to encourage each other in their faith and love and hope. They realise, we believe, that in the solemn events with which the year opened—the sudden removal of the heir presumptive to the throne—the withdrawal of some of the most faithful and conspicuous of his own ambassadors—the mysterious pestilence that walketh in darkness—the voice of the Lord has been upon the waters, the God of glory has thundered. They feel, too, that in the sins and sorrows which dishonour Him and darken our land, in the persistent assaults, even from within the camp, upon our Lord's Deity, Atonement, and written Word, in our own shortcomings and lamentable failures to carry out his last command, there is a loud call for us to seek his face in united numbers, as well as in the closet, in order that we may "Search and try our ways—turn again to the Lord, and lift up our heart with our hands unto God in the Heavens."

With the full conviction, therefore, that very many will again welcome the call as meeting their own no less than the Church's needs, we ask you, in all brotherly love, to join us at Mildmay on June 21, 22, and 23, for the purposes we have indicated; and we entreat you to make it a subject of frequent and earnest intercession that we may come together in the power of the Holy Ghost, and therefore in the conscious realisation of the presence of the Master of assemblies.

In suggesting a subject for consideration at the Conference, we have ventured—in some slight degree—to turn aside from the lines of thought that have been dealt with so frequently and so fruitfully at most of our previous gatherings, and to ask you to contemplate the wondrous ways of God in his dealings with the sons of men in Judgment—Providence—and Grace.

Here, no less than in the more commonly handled portions of the Word of Truth, is his glorious Gospel fully revealed; here is meat for the strong as well as milk for the babe in Christ; here are warning, guidance, and consolation for all who are "companions in the tribulation and in the kingdom and patience of Jesus Christ;" and surely from the prefacing visions of a book, the very keynote of which (seventy-one times repeated) is "And they shall know that I am Jehovah," we may and ought to gather wonderful instruction concerning his ways who is "perfect in knowledge." When "His judgments are abroad in the earth" we ought to "learn righteousness;" and it is in the way of his judgments that we are exhorted to wait for Him.

We can doubtless each one say in deep thankfulness:—

> With mercy and with judgment
> My web of time He wove;
> And aye the dews of sorrow
> Were lustred with his love.

And it is, we believe, well that, with prophets of old, we should endeavour to behold in wider spheres his mysterious ways who, by his never-failing providence, ordereth all things both in heaven and in earth. Thus may we better understand his purposes, so far as they are revealed to us, and become better fitted to do his will. And if we cannot apprehend the full meaning of all the mysterious symbols seen by the river Chebar, we may at least gather up many of the simpler lessons that lie upon the surface, and which are "written for our learning that we, through patience and comfort of the Scriptures, might have hope."

With these convictions we have ventured to group together, under each main division of the subject, a few of the passages of God's Word which appear to us to expound the principal teachings intended to be conveyed by the "visions of God." While these passages will not be regarded as in any degree limiting the range of thought or utterance of the brethren who may address us, they may possibly be helpful to us all, as in some measure preparing us by quiet and prayerful meditation thereon, for the days of the Conference itself.

Instead of the numerous side meetings connected with various Christian enterprises, which have generally been held, it is proposed this year to devote the time more exclusively to prayer and the searching of the Scriptures—a departure from the practice of later, but a return to that of earlier Conferences—which we believe the wide and deep range of the subject selected not only justifies, but demands.

And now, brethren, commending you to God, and to the word of his grace, and once more asking your prayers that in all arrangements, great and small, we may be guided by his good Spirit, and, above all, that He will be pleased to manifest Himself in our midst and to show us great and mighty things which we know not.—Your affectionate fellow-servants in the Lord,

S. A. Blackwood, James E. Mathieson, Harry C. Nisbet, Alfred R. Pennefather, J. Herbert Tritton, Edward Trotter, Trustees of the Conference Hall.

J. F. Morton,
Superintendent of the Conference Hall.

P.S.—The Conference will commence on Tuesday instead of on Wednesday, as in former years. The Meeting for Praise will consequently be held on Friday instead of Saturday morning; it is therefore hoped that by this new arrangement many who have not been able to be present at this important gathering will now find it convenient to attend.

THE WAYS OF GOD IN JUDGMENT—PROVIDENCE—GRACE.

Ezekiel I.

I.—The Ways of God in Judgment.

A Whirlwind.—A whirlwind of the Lord is gone forth in fury,...it shall fall grievously upon the head of the wicked. Evil shall go forth from nation to nation, and a great whirlwind shall be raised up. The Lord hath his way in the whirlwind. Then the Lord answered—out of the whirlwind.—Jer. xxiii. 19—xxv. 32. Nah. i. 3. Job xxxviii. 1.

A Great Cloud.—Behold! He cometh with clouds! His pavilion round about Him...thick clouds. How hath the Lord covered the daughter of Zion with a cloud in his anger. Dost thou know the balancings of the clouds? He causeth it to come. Whether for correction, or for his land, or for mercy. To do whatsoever He commandeth them upon the face of the world in the earth.—Rev. i. 7. Ps. xviii. 11. Lam. ii. 1. Job. xxxvii. 16, 13, 12.

A Fire and a Brightness.—Our God is a consuming fire. Who among us shall dwell with the devouring fire: Who among us shall dwell with everlasting burnings? The Lord spake unto you out of the midst of the fire. He is like a refiner's fire. The sight of the glory of the Lord was like devouring fire. His eyes were as a flame of fire. The fire shall try every man's work, Of what sort it is. After the fire a still small voice.—Heb. xii. 29. Is. xxxiii. 14, 3. Dt. iv. 12. Mal. iii. 2. Ex. xxiv. 17. Rev. i. 14. 1 Cor. iii. 13. 1 Ki. xix. 12.

The Ways of God in Providence.

The Likeness of the Living Creatures.—Their faces—their feet—their wings—their hands. They went straight forward. Whither the Spirit was to go, they went. They turned not when they went. They ran and returned as a flash of lightning. They lifted up their wings. They let down their wings. They were full of eyes. I heard the noise of their wings...as the voice of the Almighty. The eyes of the Lord, which run to and fro through the whole earth. His eyes behold the nations. His ministers a flaming fire. The Heavens do rule. His works are truth, and his ways judgment.—Ez. i. 6—9, 12, 14. x. 12. i. 24. i. 18. i. 24. Zec. iv. 10. Ps. lxvi 7. civ. 4. Dn. iv. 26, 37.

The Wheels.—Behold, the four wheels. One wheel upon the earth—a wheel in the middle of a wheel. The spirit of the living creature was in the wheels. Whithersoever the Spirit was to go...thither was their spirit to go. Whither the Head looked, they followed it. They turned not when they went. As for their rings, they were so high, that they were dreadful. As the heavens are higher than the earth, so are my ways higher than your ways and my thoughts than your thoughts. Thy judgments are far above, out of his sight. How unsearchable are his judgments. Oh! the depth of the riches both of the wisdom and knowledge of God!...His ways past finding out! As high as heaven, what canst thou do? Deeper than hell, what canst thou know? Such knowledge is too wonderful for me.—It is high, I cannot attain unto it. Thy way is in the sea...thy footsteps are not known. All his ways are judgment. Just and right is He.—Ez. x. 9. i. 15, 16, 26. x. 11. i. 17, 18. Is. lv. 9. Ps. x. 5. Ro. xi. 33. Job xi. 8. Ps. cxxxix. 6. Ps. lxxvii. 19. Deut. xxxii. 4.

The Ways of God in Grace.

The Throne, The Man, The Rainbow.—Above the firmament...was the likeness of a throne. Upon the likeness of the throne—was the likeness...of a Man. In the midst of the throne...stood a Lamb. As the appearance of the bow that is in the cloud in the day of rain. This was the appearance of the likeness of the glory of the Lord. The glory of the God of Israel. The glory of God in the face of Jesus Christ. The earth shined with his glory. A rainbow was upon his head. All power is given unto me in heaven and in earth. Unto the Son He saith, thy throne, O God, is for ever and ever. When I bring a cloud over the earth, the bow shall be seen in the cloud; And I will remember my covenant. An everlasting covenant, ordered in all things and sure. Thy way O God is in the Sanctuary. I will sing of mercy and judgment. Unto Thee, O Lord, will I sing.—Ez. i. 26. Rev. v. 6. Ez. i. 28. xi. 22. 2 Cor. iv. 6. Ez. xliii. 2. Rev. x. 1. Matt. xxviii. 18. Ho. ii. 8. Gen. ix. 14, 15. 2 Sa. xxiii. 5. Ps. lxxvii. 13. Ps. lxxiii. 16, 17 Ps. ci. 1.

THE MAY MEETINGS.

THE BIBLE SOCIETY.

The Earl of Harrowby presided over the meeting of friends of the British and Foreign Bible Society on Wednesday morning last week. A brief statement from the annual report, read by Rev. John Sharp, affords ground for expecting much that will be deeply interesting in the voluminous record for the year. The total circulation of the year in Bibles, Testaments, and detached books of Scripture only falls short of four millions by 10,785 copies. It shows an advance of 62,080 copies on the issues announced in 1891, and an advance of 1,050,670 on those of 1882, ten years ago. The advance is in this respect specially satisfactory in that it is due to increased issues from depôts abroad. The gross receipts for the year amounted to £211,384, and the expenditure to £234,782, leaving a deficit of £23,397. This was met for the time from capital retained in more prosperous years to meet working expenses.

The Chairman, in the course of an address full of warm sympathy with the work, uttered a word of warning against one phase of modern criticism. He urged that scholars should handle the Book in a spirit of reverence, and not with levity, as if they were analysing some ancient classic. Alluding to the demands that have been made upon reserve funds, he said that there are no more resources available for meeting deficiencies, so that an endeavour must now be made to secure an additional £20,000 a year in the form of subscriptions. No Christian who knows the condition of the world will advocate retrenchment in the work of Bible circulation. Having mentioned a hope, expressed by the late Mr. Spurgeon, that it is by way of the Bible that all believers may one day come together, the speaker asked: Will you allow this work, which has great and good man believed might, in time, lead to that which is the genuine wish of all our souls — the re-union of Christendom — to be starved and stinted and discredited for want of funds?

The Bishop of Exeter maintained that Bible work is a great need of our time in view of the growth of scepticism and superstition. The unevangelised sadly need the Book, and believers in Christ require to read it more. The Society is more needed than ever in prospect of the ever-nearer return of our dear Lord. The world is asking, "Where is the promise He has given?" Since the Father fell asleep all things continue as they were since the beginning of creation; but the voice of the Master is heard in his Word from the very beginning. He laid his right hand on Enoch, and He said, "Behold the Lord cometh with ten thousand of his saints." He laid His left hand on John in Patmos, and said, "Behold He cometh with clouds, and every eye shall see Him." From the beginning to the end of the Word of God it stands. He cometh to judge the earth, and the voice of the Master echoes in our hearts, "Behold, I come quickly." Is it so? Then the time is short for work. I speak to you as an old man; I shall very soon have finished my course on earth, but may God grant that we may do all that in us lies to spread the blessed knowledge of the Word of God.

Rev. J. C. Gibson, of Swatow, enlarged upon the needs of China. He said: Suppose you put before you as an object to place in the hands of every Chinese one copy of a portion of the Word of God, and suppose for a moment you could forget all the rest of the world and concentrate the whole energy of the Society upon China. Suppose these four millions of copies year after year could be printed in Chinese and distributed on Chinese soil; how long would it be before you had accomplished your task of placing one copy in the hands of every one of these millions of God's creatures before you had issued the 400,000,000 copies required to meet their needs? Ninety-five years would have rolled by, and would your task be accomplished then? No. During those ninety-five years three generations of mortal men would have passed away. The greater part of your books would have fallen into that swift decay which overtakes all earthly things, and your task would be hardly begun. We need surely to increase the energies of all missionary societies, and not least of this Bible Society. Having spoken of the evangelistic value of distributing portions, Mr. Gibson told of an old man who somehow became possessed of a New Testament. He read it, with no assistance from any missionary or Christian teacher. After reading it, especially in the Book of Revelation, he turned to his sons, and said, "This Book does not come from man; this Book is from Heaven." He charged his sons that they should worship God (he himself was baptized); that when the end of life, which he foresaw was not far off, should come to him, they should bury him as a disciple of Jesus Christ. That man became the centre of a little circle of Christian worshippers. These are isolated cases, but they are proofs, if we needed them, of the real and living inspiration that breathes through the Word of God.

Archdeacon Hodgson, of the Universities' Mission, told of progress in Central Africa. He said: We have not yet heard even the names, I suppose, of a hundredth part of the languages of Central Africa. If the Bible Society produces three hundred versions, we shall soon have to see that it produces three hundred more. This lies before us. I know a district myself in Central Africa which will soon be ready for the Bible Society's work; and Mashonaland and other places will require new versions in new dialects. The work grows and the opportunities grow, and you must see to it that the Society is able to avail itself of them in the future as in the past.

Rev. Dr. Prochet, of the Waldensian Church, Rome, deplored the Papal hostility to the Bible. The Book of God is still in the Index among prohibited books, and the people of Italy, France, Spain and Portugal are in much the same case as those of Pagan lands. Illustrating the prevailing ignorance, he related something that occurred only a year ago at Catanzaro, in the South of Italy. A priest, in his ignorance, burned a number of Bibles, New Testaments, and portions, which a colporteur had sold. The priest justified his action by saying that the books were "poison," and he wished to protect his flock from spiritual injury. The colporteur asked the priest if he would accept and read a book called "Compendium of Controversy," and on receiving assurance in the affirmative gave him a copy. That little work reviews the doctrines of the Church of Rome, comparing them with Holy Scripture. Struck with the contrast, the priest sent to Florence for a Bible—paying for a copy of the book which he had burned. He was convinced, sought instruction, and threw off his priestly garb. To-day he is in Naples selling the very books which he formerly burned as an auto-da-fé! The story was listened to with great interest by the audience.

Rev. Dr. Morrow, of the American Bible Society, also addressed the meeting, enlarging upon work among foreigners in Philadelphia.

CHURCH MISSIONARY SOCIETY.

The annual meetings in connection with the Church Missionary Society have been largely attended and characterised by much enthusiasm. On Monday evening, in St. Bride's Church, the Dean of Norwich preached from Mark iv. 35, "Let us pass over to the other side." When the Lord gives such an order, a storm must be expected. But when this has passed, we shall see some Gadarene for whom a purpose is being worked out. At the close of the service two telegrams were read, one from Mr. Eugene Stock, speaking of the wonderful openings he was finding in his special work, and the other from Bishop Tucker, asking, "Who, then, is willing to consecrate himself this day unto the Lord?"

Three large meetings were held on Tuesday. The principal one was in Exeter Hall in the morning. An abstract of the annual report was read by Rev. R. Lang. Affairs in Africa claimed first attention, the removal of promising young labourers by death, sickness, and other causes, being mentioned as a sore trial. In the Eastern Equatorial Mission, out of eighteen men who had been enrolled during the past two years, no fewer than seven have died on the threshold of their work. Passing on to notice encouraging features of the work, the report stated that, in February last, Bishop Tucker baptized the first converts at Taveta, and at Mochi under the shadow of Kilimanjaro, and at the capital of Uganda, thirty-three men, four women, and ten boys were baptized in December. In India there has been a further development of the policy of sending out bands of associated evangelists.

Notwithstanding the riots, the Society's missionaries in China have been graciously protected. In the Fuh-Kien province the adherents have increased in the year by only seven short of one thousand, and at Ku-Chang eighteen lepers were baptized. During the awful earthquakes in Japan all the missionaries and the native Christians connected with the Society's missions were preserved. In British North America the chief of the Kitkatlas Indians has publicly professed Christianity, having for long been amongst its most determined opponents. The cry for reinforcements was great from many parts of the world. A large accession of offers of service is expected in consequence of the recent February simultaneous meetings held in the province of Canterbury. A letter has been received signed by fifty-four Cambridge University men, notifying their readiness, if God should open the way, to go forth to the mission field. The gross expenditure has amounted to £251,374, and the gross receipts to £269,377—only exceeded on one previous occasion.

Sir John H. Kennaway, Bart., M.P., who presided, in the course of a hearty address, said that since the resolution was passed that every suitable candidate for service should be accepted, trusting to God to supply the means for their maintenance, the directors had been encouraged to find that the contributions had enabled them to carry out that policy. Referring to the situation in Uganda, which he described as one of anxious peril, Sir John said: We went there independently of the civil power. Our work is a spiritual one, and its results have surpassed our expectations. We wait for the future, in hope that God will help us to carry out his plans for the evangelisation of the country, and that our labours there may be crowned with success.

The Bishop of Exeter, recalling his recent travels, spoke of Japan as a mission-field. He described the people as hardy, industrious, quick-witted, and ready to welcome the Gospel of Christ. For a while the army of evangelists must be officered by American and English leaders, but at length these will gladly yield their posts to Japanese Christians, and that, as his son—who is Bishop of Japan—said, would be the happiest euthanasia of Western missions. Fifty more men were sorely needed in the next two and a-half years.

Rev. W. H. Ball, missionary from Calcutta, spoke of the Society's work in equipping native evangelists. At the Divinity School, in Calcutta, the native Christians were trained to preach to their fellow-countrymen, but what was wanted was more well-qualified missionaries. "Christ calls you, the missionaries call you, the native workers call you, the perishing millions call you; will you go over and help them?"

Canon Taylor Smith, of Sierra Leone, was the next speaker. He attributed the practical failure of Romish missions in Free Town to the fact that the people had been instructed in the Word of God. After an address by Rev. C. W. A. Clarke, of Masulipatam,

Rev. G. F. Pentecost, D.D., spoke on the progress of the Gospel in India. He said:—It is possible, in the mutation of human events, that the British Empire may be overcome in India, which God forbid! But it is not possible in human events that the Kingdom of Jesus Christ can ever be expelled from India. There is behind the Gospel a power that all the combined world-powers cannot overthrow. "Why do the heathen rage, and the people imagine a vain thing? The kings of the earth set themselves, and the rulers take counsel together, against the Lord, and against his Anointed, saying, Let us break their bands asunder, and cast away their cords from us. He that sitteth in the heavens shall laugh; the Lord shall have them in derision." That is the power that holds in subjection the world-powers all combined. No matter whether empires remain, whether they rise or fall, whether monarchy succeeds republic or republic succeeds monarchy, the power of the Gospel holds the people, absolutely irrespective of any political power. Whilst giving all credit and being profoundly grateful, under God, for the providential intervention, on many accounts, of the political power now governing in India, let us remember that Christianity has not grown and established itself in India either on account of the protection or the patronage of the political power.

Addresses were also delivered by Mr. Samuel Hoare, M.P., and Rev. Jani Alli, of Calcutta, the latter speaking of the arduous, but hopeful character of his work among the Mohammedans.

Sir T. Fowell Buxton presided over a meeting held at the same time in St. James's Hall. The Bishop of Saskatchewan and Calgary described his work among the Indians of the North-West. The majority of the red men in his diocese are now Christian, and education is going forward among them. Never before was the outlook so promising in regard to the children. During his episcopate the number of schools had trebled. The principal difficulties to be encountered were the prevalence of polygamy and the persistent opposition of the Romanists.

After some remarks by Sir Charles Bernard,

Canon Tristram, who has just returned from Japan, spoke on what he saw and heard. Among the encouragements to increased labour were the devotion and thoroughness of the native Christians. One blind newspaper hawker gave twenty dollars to the building of a church, though many men earned only threepence a day there. The Japanese were opposed to anything like sacerdotalism, but they were looking at Christianity with "respectful hesitation."

Rev. Cyril Gordon, of Uganda, appealed for more men for East Africa. Other speakers were: Rev. J. Stone, of Telugu, South India; Dr. H. Martyn Clark, and Prebendary Eardley-Wilmot, of Kensington.

In the evening another crowded meeting was held in Exeter Hall, the Bishop of Sodor and Man presiding. Addresses were delivered by missionaries and others, the sustained interest of the proceedings showing how strongly entrenched the Society is in the confidence of Evangelical members of the Church of England.

LONDON CITY MISSION.

The annual meeting of the London City Mission was held on Thursday last, at Exeter Hall. Rev. T. S. Hutchinson, secretary, read extracts from the report. "Greater London" contains, according to the last census, no less than 5,633,332 persons, more than one-fifth of the entire population of England at the present time. Unequalled in the number of persons which it contains by any city on the face of the globe, either in ancient or modern times, the metropolis is still increasing, according to the average of the past ten years, at the rate of 86,667 souls per annum.

The number of missionaries on the Society's staff on March 31 last was 498. The expenditure during the twelve months was £60,274, which, though £353 less than in the preceding year, is greater than the receipts by £701. Mission-halls and rooms have, as usual, proved a most valuable auxiliary to the "house-to-house" visitation. Many who avoid the personal visit of the missionary, are led by curiosity, or by spiritual concern, which they have not the courage to avow, to attend the halls or rooms where the Word preached, and applied by the Holy Spirit, often manifests its power.

One of the most striking cases of blessing through this work in the open air which have occurred during the past year is narrated by a missionary, who writes:—"On one occasion, after the meeting was over a man came to me and said, 'Sir, you have saved my life. I was on my way to the Thames to drown myself, for I have led such a wretched life that my wife and children have left me.' He then took a letter out of his pocket which he had intended to post, and which informed the man to whom it was written that the poor fellow's dead body would be found in the Thames. I spoke to him of the love of God in Christ, and put him into the workhouse for the night. The next day a friend of mine procured him work at a place, where he is still employed, and living a God-fearing life." Every successive year proves the importance of the missions to public-houses and coffee-shops. Work among the Jews also has a peculiar interest, owing to the fact that during the year no fewer than 30,000 refugees, chiefly from Russia and Poland, landed in the port of London.

Mr. F. A. Bevan, who presided, in the course of a hearty address, grieved that though the need increases, it was imperative, through lack of funds, to diminish the number of missionaries. He said, our military men are always finding out new weapons of precision—and our naval architects are always building a new class of ships to resist the penetrating qualities of new guns. In like manner, we find that Satan is always trying to invent new forms of evil by which the hearts of men may be drawn away from God, by which especially the youth of our land may be seduced into Sabbath-breaking, into bad-living, into every form of ungodliness. There is the armour-plate of unbelief, the armour-plate of scepticism, of Sabbath-breaking, of lust. I am afraid that these plates are getting thicker and thicker. But, thank God! we have one weapon—we don't want any other—with which to resist those who are drawing away people from the right path. We find that the old weapon is enough. We find that "the sword of the Spirit," wielded by godly men, faithful soldiers and servants of Jesus Christ, can penetrate the thickest armour of the enemy. We find that our Captain—we have only one Captain, "the Captain of our salvation"—will lead us on to victory, and we feel our trust in Him.

Canon Barker described London as the world in miniature. We have the highest civilisation and the most abject degradation, the greatest wealth and the greatest destitution. There are in the metropolis men from all nations—from Russia, Poland, Italy, France, America, and from every known quarter of the globe. All the Acts of Parliament which the wisdom of the Legislature might devise would be absolutely inoperative unless there were underneath the seething life of the City deep and broad moral and religious principles. He ventured to say that the work of the Church of Christ was never so important, so necessary, so crying as to-day. There was never a period in the history of our land when it was so essential that every single religious denomination which had at heart the real welfare of the people, which desired the real moral growth of the nation, which was ambitious for the extension of Christ's Kingdom, should draw close together and present one great phalanx against crime and immorality.

Mr. Sydney Gedge, M.P., spoke of the Society as a rallying ground for Evangelical Christians of all denominations. The history of the religious revivals of the last hundred years taught them that the workers required should be of the same class as those to whom they were to speak, and it was because that principle was followed out that their missionaries succeeded in gaining the confidence of those whom they taught.

Rev. F. W. Macdonald, in a capital speech, said: There is a widespread notion abroad that it is in the power of legislation to raise the whole quality and character of our citizenship; but any expectation of regenerating English society which rests upon political or social problems to be hereafter carried out must yield one more bitter disappointment. To have the new world we must have as its community new men, and then we might build up a regenerated society. The first of British interests is religion—not by any conventional order of it, but because, in the deep essential order of things, the primary relation in which man stands is his relation to his God. That truth is, thank God! not merely capable of being set forth now and again by scholars and eloquent preachers; every witness of Jesus Christ may practically embody it in his life and spirit. The good Christian men whom the Society employs—men who visit the courts and alleys and slums, and pray with the sick and dying—are the best possible witnesses to the truth of the priority of religion in human life.

THE WEST LONDON MISSION.

An enthusiastic audience filled St. James's Hall on Friday evening on the occasion of the May Meeting of the West London Mission, and the anniversary of the Cleveland Hall, which was opened three years ago for the further development of the special mission work. The report states that though "only commenced three years ago, we have eight or nine classes, with between two hundred and three hundred members. We have services every night of the week. Every Sunday night we have rejoiced over sinners yielding to Christ. We have had each Saturday night, for thirty nights in succession, a crowded hall, and capital gatherings on Wednesday nights at the Lantern Services. We have a Children's Band, with seven hundred on the register, and a Children's Week-night Service on Tuesdays, with an average attendance of nearly five hundred. We have also a large Sunday-school and Band of Hope. We have also a Room-to-Room Band of about thirty, who regularly visit the neighbourhood week by week. Open-air bands and public-house visiting. Above all, is the Christ-like service of the sisters and the nursing sisters, whose presence and help in the sick-room has brought many to the feet of Christ."

Rev. Hugh Price Hughes very briefly opened the proceedings of the evening meeting by telling something of the good work done at Cleveland Hall, and announcing that the sum looked for from the audience was £500.

Rev. Mark Guy Pearse said it had been declared that "the Sisters of the People were shaping the future of the country." That was a bold statement, but the facts were behind it, as those who were familiar with the work of the sisters knew well. He himself felt more and more the need of righteous legislation. He would have no one vote for any man who will not seek to have the public-house question put in the hands of the people. If we could get rid of the liquor traffic the need for such missions would be well nigh gone. Next the speaker dealt with the land question as viewed by those who are constantly brought face to face with multitudes sinking to the lowest depths simply because they have left the country to come up to this great city where there is no room for them. He wished sincerely warning were published all over the land against villagers coming up to this overcrowded London. Lastly he would urge the reform of parochial relief. It was dreadful to think that poverty had become a crime, and that criminals were actually better treated than the destitute poor. Some touching incidents were given in illustration of this point, bearing especially on the separation of aged couples and the refusal of outdoor relief to those who had lived respectable and honest lives.

Mr. H. Marden told how five years ago he came to this hall, a Christian, but an idle, unprofitable servant. Here he had been taught the joy of service, and he trusted that many would learn that night its sweetness. He believed that if a hall twice the size of St. James's Hall could be obtained it would be filled every Sunday.

Rev. Hugh Price Hughes began with thankful reference to the success of the Polytechnic, resting, as it does, on a Christian basis; and, passing on, said he was glad to be able to report progress in the truest sense in every one of the halls connected with the West London Mission. Not only are there great crowds, but there is real spiritual work and genuine conversions. The very backbone and strength of the work lay, he believed, in the sisterhood. The work of the sisters is beyond praise, and, besides, they have proved it is possible to have devoted women linked in holy bonds of service without vows and all manner of adjuncts distasteful to Evangelical Christians. Various phases of the work of these sisters in the Crèche and in the homes of the poor, and of the medical mission were graphically described, it being noted, in passing, that a Home of Peace for the dying is about to be opened. So, also, it is hoped that a Home at Walthamstow will shortly be opened by Mrs. Hughes and Sister Lily for the rescue and reformation of poor lost girls; but for this the sum of two thousand pounds will be required. Some account followed of the work of God in St. James's Hall, which has been much blessed during the past year. Various agencies for getting hold of outsiders, young people, and others were described, such as "the handshaking brigade," the mission band, the coffee concerts, and the work among soldiers and policemen. Mr. Hughes closed with a stirring appeal for financial help to enable this grand work to go on and grow. He looked for such a response as would encourage them to advance upon the present work more hopefully than ever.

Rev. W. Darlow Sarjeant felt profoundly thankful that while much is done among the poor, this Mission has also been emphatically a mission to the rich; God having blessed it very considerably among these. He had learned since coming into this Mission that one of the most disastrous evils of the day is gambling. Among those who had been saved by Divine power in this very hall had been not a few hardened gamblers, who are, of course, gamblers no more, but faithful and earnest followers of Christ. He had learned, too, that one of the most dangerous hours for young men in London is after nine o'clock on Sunday night; and on behalf of these tempted ones the Social Hour had been started after the evening service, and this had proved most valuable. Another thing he had discovered was that many of the poor girls on the streets might be saved, if only means were provided and more Homes opened. Many of these miserable women are to be found in the services; not a few have been soundly converted, and on behalf of these Mrs. Hughes must be enabled to open the Home already referred to.

Mr. Quintin Hogg, who presided, but till now had not spoken, said that nothing he knew of could express the wants of London better than the words, "When Jesus saw the city He wept over it"; and with the same great sympathy must He look down on this great modern city. As to the needs of the Mission, after all, in this, as in every true work, it is workers rather than halls, men rather than money, that are really needed. Men may bring their purses, and not themselves, but those who yield spirit, soul, and body to God for this service do not forget to bring their purses along with them. A few burning words followed on personal service in seeking to witness among those around us to Him who loved us and died for us. As we water others we shall be ourselves watered, and men shall see the beauty of holiness stamped on our life and conversation.

MORAVIAN MISSIONS.

The pressman who attends many meetings ds now a large hall with a mere sprinkling of ple on the chairs, and again a small hall ercrowded and insufficient for all who wish to present. Certainly the latter is the more inriting of the two. We need not particularise y example of the first, but the second was the e of the Moravian Missionary Meeting on iday afternoon. The committee had ventured y the Council Chamber at Exeter Hall, and, believe, a hall twice the size could have been ily filled; for it was packed, the central aisle cked, and the edge of the platform lined. The akers doubtless felt the inspiration of enthuism, for most of them seemed at their best.

Rev. W. Wetton Cox presented an outline of most satisfactory report, showing that the ndon association in aid had reached an income three thousand pounds above that of previous ars, and telling how the Moravians—that wonful missionary church—sends out one in sixty its members to the mission-field, whereas the erage proportion in other churches is about e in five thousand; while the converts among e heathen actually number ninety-one thou, or three times as many as the members of parent church. Facts like these speak lumes for the blessedness of loyal obedience to parting command of the great Master. The ited brethren have at present 138 mission tions and 353 missionaries scattered over the rth—from frozen Greenland to torrid Central rica and lonely Tibet. It is interesting to note at this oldest of Protestant missions has oroughly grasped the great importance of dical missions. Their motto seems to be—

> Earth's lost ones are, to us, thy legacy;
> And as we do to them, we do to Thee.

Mr. James E. Mathieson, who presided, rerked in the course of his opening address that had been said that "a lack of faith leads to ack of faithfulness," but in the history of the ravian Missions we had the reverse of this, the faith of the united brethren had led to ense faithfulness. Realising they were blessed, t merely that they might enjoy themselves, t that they might become witnesses to the ds of the earth, the Moravians had yielded emselves to the Lord's command, and had been ed accordingly.

Rev. H. E. Fox, of Durham, said it seemed to n that the poor Moravian Macedonians put to ame the lack of zeal in the rich English rinthians. The Moravians have been well called he forlorn hope" of Christian missions, beuse they have ever sought to reach the most eless and despairing peoples. They are to be nd in the fever-haunted swamps of Africa, the bound regions of the far North, and the windept plateaus of Tibet; amongst the wandering cks of Australia, as well as the despised outt lepers.

Mr. M. H. Hodder very warmly urged the eculiar claims of the Moravians on the support the English churches.

Rev. H. Grattan Guinness, D.D., asked why should trouble ourselves about evangelising world. The answer is, Simply because we are ntees of the Gospel. Jesus Christ has rened the world, and the world does not know We who know it must go and tell the tidings. e publication is committed to us, and if we do publish it we are recreant to our trust. He e speaker) was interested in the work of the ravian Church because it sought to fulfil this ed trust; because it linked, historically, dern missionary effort with the Protestant ness of the Middle Ages; because of the pronence given by the united brethren to the ss of Christ; because of their readiness to ar the cross; because of their weakness and elasticity. In the present day missions need re heart, more love, more spirit. We want to e less of money and more of spiritual power. e speaker urged strongly the need of supersion in the mission field—an element of success often overlooked. Some of the most magnifint missions of these times owe their success gely to the fact of personal oversight by deted men of the apostolic type.

After a few sympathetic words by Dr. Gritton, J. Stuart, of Tabreez, spoke of his interest in ravian Missions since he had known Marx Redslob of Leh, Tibet, and visited them at ir lonely station. His special reason, however, for being present was to plead the cause of ers in Northern Persia. The sad case of lepers h climates was well known, but it was little erstood how they suffered in the intense cold the Caspian Sea.

MISSIONS TO SEAMEN.

The thirty-ninth annual meeting of the Missions to Seamen, held at Sion College, was presided over by the Bishop of Rochester. The Secretary, Commander Dawson, R.N., stated that the year had been in many ways one of great blessing, and of evident advance in proclaiming the Gospel. This was the good news sent in from the fifty-eight seaports, at home and abroad, occupied by the Society's chaplains and readers, and from the twelve hundred vessels scattered on every ocean, bearing the volunteer mission helpers and associates who are promoting godly living amongst their shipmates. In the successful contest against crimps and other enemies of sailors ashore, the great centres of operations are the Missions to Seamen churches and institutes under one roof, planted in the sailors' quarter of the seaports. These are open free of charge to all seamen and fishermen exclusively, and supply for their leisure hours safe places of rest, companionship, recreation, improvement, and worship. The income for last year had amounted to £30,951.

The Chairman urged the needs of the sailors, to whom, under the auspices of the Society, Christian ministrations are extended, and said that, first for evangelistic work, and then for their edification and building up, no argument is required to show that the work may expect with absolute confidence the blessing of Almighty God.

Rev. Dr. L. Borrett White said that whether we think of the number of vessels, steam-launches, and boats employed to visit the ships and to carry the message of the Gospel to those afloat, or whether we regard the rapidly increasing number of seamen's churches and institutes ashore, we must see how much is being done for the encouragement of the sailors in all that is good, and in protecting them from the terrible temptations around them on shore.

Rev. Albert Baillie, late chaplain for the Port of Sunderland, having spoken, Sir Philip Cunliffe-Owen commended the Society as worthy of the best support. Rev. H. W. Farrar, Chaplain for the Tyne, said he believed that on the banks of the Tyne they had one of the most useful of Seamen's Missions, measuring it by what they were able to do. Both the Seamen's church and the institute beneath were largely used by the seafaring class. It was their plan to place a man-of-war's man at the door, and it was his habit to say to well-dressed passers-by as he lifted his cap, "Do you belong to the seafaring class?" If so, he would invite them to enter.

THE NATIONAL TEMPERANCE LEAGUE.

The annual meeting, held in Exeter Hall on Monday week, was largely attended, and an abstract of the report, read by Mr. Rae, showed steady progress and active aggressive work in many directions.

The Bishop of London, who presided, said, in the course of a stirring address:—We are total abstainers for our own sake, but we are also total abstainers for the sake of our fellow-men, who are perishing because they have not yet learned the important lesson that has been taught to us. We are total abstainers for the sake of the whole society of Christians in the world; we are total abstainers for the Gospel's sake. We are not total abstainers simply because we are thinking of our own personal interest—not even because we are thinking of the very highest of all our personal interests. It would be a sufficient ground, no doubt, for any man to become a total abstainer simply because he believed it would be for his own spiritual good, without considering anything else; but though it be a sufficient ground, yet there is a clear call in the condition of our country; there is a clear call upon all those who take any interest in their fellow-creatures to endeavour to persuade others to do what we are doing ourselves. What else can we say to all those who tell us, "I do not want total abstinence; it won't do me any good; I do not think it will help me at all; as far as I can judge, I feel no temptation whatever to exceed, and, therefore, to me it is absolutely nothing." What do we say to them? Why, we say to them: "Look at the state of your fellow-creatures; look at all this misery, all this degradation; look at the transmission of it from generation to generation; look at all the fearful consequences that come out of it; see close at your very doors men and women who are perishing because they are in the grip of this terrible enemy who will not let them go. Can you stand indifferent; can you pass all this by as a thing with which you have no concern?

The Mayor of Lincoln followed in a racy and rousing talk, while Rev. C. Garrett, in a remarkably vigorous address, contrasted the state of things fifty years ago, when "everybody held the drink to be a necessary of life," with the state of things now, when Christians, men of science, politicians, and society are beginning to regard drink as an intolerable curse.

Professor Horsley, speaking from the scientific point of view, and Mr. Miles MacInnes, M.P., from the political point of view, followed, while addresses from Mr. W. Johnston, M.P., and Mr. W. I. Palmer concluded the proceedings.

INTOXICATING LIQUORS AND NATIVE RACES.

There was a time when the free use of rum was a recognised and legitimate item in regular commercial intercourse with the natives of Africa. That there is a marked change of sentiment has been made manifest by the final ratification, on April 2 this year, of the general Act of the African Conference held in Brussels. Seventeen powers have bound themselves to see that the provisions of that international law are enforced. The speakers at the fifth annual meeting of the Native Races and the Liquor Traffic United Committee, held last Friday in Grosvenor House, all based their remarks on the notable achievement in the cause of righteousness by the general adoption of such a law. The Duke of Westminster, who presided, showed how beneficially the new law might operate, and described generally the vast area it affected.

In the report, read by Mr. Clarence Roberts, it was stated that the committee had promised the envoys of the King of Gazaland to render him assistance in ridding his country of the liquor traffic. They had drawn from the Secretary of State for the Colonies the assurance that "the settled policy on the West Coast of Africa is to refrain from the use of spirits as an official present."

Dr. Knight Bruce, Bishop of Mashonaland, showed the evils of the drinking habits, and the necessity, as well as practicability, of the prohibition of intoxicants. Canon Wilberforce added his testimony as to what he had seen of the bad results of liquor in India. Mr. George Cawston declared the willingness of the British South Africa Company to do all in their power to exclude the curse of drink. Rev. Lawson Forfeitt said that the missionaries to a man were advocates of total prohibition of liquor. Rev. G. Armstrong Bennetts, of the Wesleyan Temperance Committee, contended that the new law would act as a potent restraint on the greed of traders, who would stick at nothing in order to make money. Mr. George Smith deplored the fact that the consumption of spirits in India had doubled within the last thirty years, and urged a contraction of the means of supply. Mr. Solomon Farmer and Mr. W. S. Caine were among the other speakers. The outcome of the meeting was a determination to maintain the committee as vigilance officials in seeing that the new law did not become a dead letter.

THE CHURCH ARMY.

The Bishop of Rochester presided over the annual meeting of the Church Army, which was held on Wednesday afternoon last, in Princes' Hall, Piccadilly. Mr. E. Clifford, in an abstract of the report, stated that the total receipts for the year had amounted to £16,647. In connection with working the social scheme, the cost had been for London and the provinces £4980. It was added that there are 170 evangelists and colporteurs wholly engaged in addition to the staff; fifty Mission nurses, partly for rescue work, and twelve thousand working members. Upwards of £15,000 had been locally received and locally expended in working-people's pence. In many parishes the work was carried on without evangelists.

The Chairman emphasized the fact that a spiritual work cannot be done without having to do with the temporal necessities of the people. That double idea of dealing with the things of this world and of that which is beyond, was essential to the whole work there were carrying on. He believed that they must be not only Labour Homes, but small Labour Homes. They must seek to multiply such, as this would tend greatly to help the dealing with individual souls.

A Church Army Evangelist said that what is needed to-day is not more preaching, but better acting. He gave his experience as to the methods he adopted on going to a new place of work, which was to help men in their work so far as he could and then to labour for their souls.

Rev. E. A. B. Sanders, Rector of Whitechapel, said he had but recently joined the Church Army. The first thing that had struck him was that there was no expenditure of money beyond what is absolutely necessary on home administration, and that was much in its favour. He spoke in the highest terms of the Labour Home, the establishment of which had proved of invaluable assistance to him.

The next speaker, Rev. W. Carlile, founder of the organisation, said the work stood in need of a small farm. Only last week a magistrate said to a man who was brought before him, "If the Church Army will take you, I will let you off." He hoped that by-and-by no man would come out of prison without the Army being able to provide him with ten hours a day, so far as work went. They wished to have a small farm, and some clergymen in Canada had written warmly upon the subject, and they were ready to give to those who went out a kindly right hand and to place them amidst better surroundings than they could have in England.

Madame Antoinette Sterling sang a solo, the burden of which was that only when the work is done can the worker lie down to rest. She also gave "The Lord is my Shepherd." Madame Sterling, in some remarks, bade the Church Army ever to keep in remembrance the great fact that God lives now, that he is tenderly looking down upon the children of men. A Church Army nurse also delivered an address.

RELIGIOUS TRACT SOCIETY.

The ninety-third anniversary of the Religious Tract Society was celebrated on Friday evening last by a large meeting of friends and supporters in Exeter Hall. In the course of the evening, as well as before the commencement of the proceedings, a choir of six hundred children from elementary schools sang a number of pieces under the direction of Mr. J. Frank Proudman.

Rev. Dr. Green read extracts from the report. During the year, seven hundred new publications had been issued, 199 of them tracts. The Society has, up to the present time, published in 205 languages, dialects, and characters. The total circulation from the Home Depôt, including books, tracts, periocals, cards, and miscellaneous issues, has reached 57,836,600, of which 24,701,200 are tracts. The issues from Foreign Depôts may be safely stated at 15,000,000, making a total circulation of 72,836,600.

The financial figures were also colossal, the most interesting item being that the expenditure in the form of grants to societies reached the total of £42,264, being an excess of £14,421 above the free contributions to the Society's funds. The publications go throughout the world, and in making grants, the Society knows no denominational distinction or territorial limits.

Mr. R. Holmes White spoke of the widespread influence of the Society—of its help to missionary agencies at home and abroad. Impressing upon his hearers the privilege and duty of making the Gospel known by the distribution of literature if they are unable otherwise to proclaim it, he told of a Christian boy whom he had taught in the Sunday-school. Being afflicted with stammering, and so unable to speak for Christ, this lad bought a lot of tracts. He was taken ill, and then his grandmother, with whom he lived, found the tracts. He explained why he had bought them, and one result of his devotion to Christ was that, after his death, the woman gave her heart to God.

Rev. Gilbert S. Karney spoke of his personal indebtedness to the Society. When, as a schoolboy, he was brought to care about his soul, he found help in The Leisure Hour, and was introduced to a number of valuable books by the then depositary in Piccadilly. Both at home and abroad the Christian Church owes much to the Society, among the publications of which he singled out for special mention the "Present Day Tracts," in which sceptical theories are refuted, and the treatises on the Reformation and Evangelical truth, whereby the errors and superstitions of Romanism are counteracted.

Rev. F. W. Macdonald compared the England of to-day with that of the time in which the Society was founded, and showed how much good has been wrought by means of Christian literature. The printing press is an instrument of evil when controlled by those who are enemies of God and righteousness; therefore, it is the duty of Christians to use it in the extension of religion and morality. He was specially cordial in acknowledging the service of the Society to the young.

Rev. R. M. Thornton, after urging the claims of the Society upon the Christian public, addressed the boys and girls, urging them to be careful in what they read.

BAPTIST PRAYER UNION.

The annual meeting of Baptist Ministers and Missionaries' Prayer Union was recently held at the Shoreditch Tabernacle. There was a large attendance of ministers. Rev. F. B. Meyer took the chair. A brief report, read by the Secretary (Rev. J. E. Martin, of Erith), showed a total membership in all parts of the world of 697, an increase of nearly one hundred on the previous year.

Mr. Meyer, in accepting the presidency for another year, said he rejoiced in the spiritual bond of prayer on which the Union was established, and trusted that it would always be maintained on these lines, apart from all questions of policy that might involve controversy and debate. Men who differed widely on many points might still be one in prayer and intercession.

An address based on Col. ii. 10 was delivered by Rev. Charles New, of Hastings, and a very happy and spiritually helpful meeting was brought to a close by prayer by Rev. A. Tilly, of Cardiff. Communications respecting the Union should be addressed to the Hon. Sec., Rev. J. E. Martin, The Manse, Erith.

COUNTRY TOWNS MISSION

That no one in rural districts or outlying towns and villages of England and Wales might live without hearing the sound of the Gospel, the Country Towns Mission was organised fifty-five years ago. Into neglected manufacturing centres its agents have likewise brought the message of salvation. It appears to have as much vitality now as when it was started, and its usefulness has greatly increased. Last year its fifty-seven missionaries were in exceptional request in consequence of the prevailing epidemic, and found welcome access to homes, the doors of which had formerly been barred against them. It is encouraging to learn that evangelical truth has begun to make an impression among the gipsies and other wanderers in and near the New Forest, where a mission was established about three years ago.

At the annual meeting in Exeter Hall last week Mr. J. H. Buxton presided. The speeches delivered by three of the missionaries present won at once the closest attention of the crowded audience. These men were not at all learned as the world would say; but when they spoke of eternal verities and of wrestling in prayer for the rescue of the sinner, there was an eloquence as well as a simplicity in their utterances that captivated the listeners. At the close of the meeting Rev. D. B. Hankin, of St. Jude's, Mildmay-park, delivered an address to the missionaries, dwelling especially on the necessity of preaching a full Gospel.

BRITISH WOMEN AND TEMPERANCE.

The anniversary gatherings of the British Women's Temperance Association last week were full of life and interest. The welcome accorded to Lady Henry Somerset on her return from the United States was extremely cordial. Her ladyship's eloquent and heartfelt utterances at the various meetings were heard with eager attention and greatly enjoyed. We reproduce pretty fully her presidential speech at the meeting in St. James's Hall on Thursday evening. In the conferences at the Memorial Hall practical topics were discussed The introduction of the question of female suffrage, however, has caused some division of opinion among the members of the Society.

At the St. James's Hall meeting, which was densely crowded, a witty and weighty speech was given by Sir Wilfrid Lawson. Miss Richardson, of Bessbrook, and Mrs. Wynford Phillips were both intensely earnest and most effective in their advocacy of the good cause. Mrs. Massingberd's report as to progress was highly encouraging.

The all-day Conference on Friday at the Memorial Hall, in connection with the World's Women's Union, was a season of extraordinary and varied interest. Short papers were read by a number of well-known ladies actively engaged in different departments of Christian effort on behalf of women. In the evening, under Lady Somerset's presidency, there was a crowded and enthusiastic assembly, when the eloquent Canon Wilberforce and others found congenial listeners.

MISS WESTON'S WORK IN THE NAVY

At the annual meeting in Exeter Lower Hall on Tuesday afternoon last week Rev. Canon Fleming (who presided) referred to the results of Miss Weston's work in the Navy, and said there was not at present a ship which did not carry the Bible. He hoped the time was not far distant when the Bible would take the place of guns and warlike ammunition, and when wines and spirits will no longer be found in our vessels. Christ, when He came to fulfil his mission upon earth, in gathering together the little band of men who were to become his messengers, chose seafaring men. The speaker hoped regard for the Master's example would lead to a larger interest being taken in work among the sailors.

After an interesting account of the past year's work by Miss Weston, Admiral Henry D. Grant, C.B., addressed the meeting, and spoke forcibly of the contrast between the present and past state of affairs in the Navy. Whereas a generation ago every conceivable means were practised by the men to conceal rum, for future times of leisure for drunkenness, now only abstainers were valued in the Navy.

Captain May, who had been thirty-five years in the Navy, said he could remember the time when a seaman's idea of happiness consisted in his being able to get five or six glasses of grog in five minutes, but the work of Miss Weston and her workers, by the Sailors' Rests, Welcomes and Homes, had taught them a love for better things. He hoped "Mother Weston," as she was lovingly called, would be helped and encouraged in her work for the sailors as well as for their wives and families.

THE RAGGED SCHOOL UNION

The Baroness Burdett-Coutts distributed, on Monday evening, in Exeter Hall, over a thousand prizes won by senior scholars of the Ragged Schools of London, and given by the R.S.U. The annual meeting of the Union saw a large and enthusiastic gathering of the friends of poor children, and the proceedings of the evening were delightfully brightened by the sweet singing and happy faces of the children who thronged the platform.

Mr. John Kirk read a summary of the Report, showing a vast and varied amount of work done in connection with the Holiday Homes, Drift Children's Branch, Clothing and Benevolent Fund, pure literature, recreation and industrial classes, institutes, and the encouragement of temperance and thrift. As to the religious work, it was stated that:—"The Ragged School movement is a Christian agency, a distinctive spiritual force, and in undertaking to reach the children of the street, in the forefront of the agencies employed has ever been the Sunday-school. The morning schools record an average attendance of 6509, the 151 afternoon schools have 26,992 present, and 107 evening schools return 22,885 as in attendance. Adding together the afternoon and evening schools, the total thus given is 258 schools, with 49,877 children present.

"The elder scholars are gathered in 204 Bible Classes to the number of 4228. In addition there are sundry Christian bands and Christian endeavours, guilds, leagues, and other agencies under various titles, but all aiming at the retention of the scholar and the continuous influence of the School right on to adult life. Prayer Meetings, as may be supposed, have invariably their definite place in the School programme of work.

"It has ever been the aim to make the children missionaries, and through them to reach their parents. These parents, or adults, are gathered in 297 Gospel Services and Ragged Churches, the attendances at such services having been 25,732, whilst the Lodging House and Casual Ward element has been reached by means of the Free Breakfasts, Refuges for the homeless, and kindred agencies."

An urgent plea was made for liberal aid on behalf of this important work, reaching fifty thousand children, and nearly as many adults.

Mr. T. A. Denny, who presided, warmly and practically urged the claims of the Ragged School Union, inasmuch as it got hold of the children before they were warped and twisted by sin and neglect, and because it did not attempt to whitewash and conceal the evil, but sought to bring them to the Saviour that they might be recreated in Him. He thanked God for the Ragged School Union, and trusted it might meet with the liberal support it deserved.

Mr. QUINTIN HOGG told how the work with which his name is so closely associated grew out of his Ragged School experiences. Proceeding, he gave cogent and clear reasons why he supported the Ragged Schools, knowing as he did what many thousands of children might drift to if left untaught and unloved. In face of London's sorrow and sadness he asked all to rally to the support of the Ragged School Union.

Venerable ARCHDEACON SINCLAIR, in the course of an able and eloquent address, showed that as long as London continued to grow so rapidly, and as long as we had the poor around us, Ragged Schools were a great necessity, and must be maintained. He was thankful these noble workers were found willing to devote their lives to the winning the boys and girls of outcast London to nobler and higher lives. After reviewing various branches of the work the speaker concluded with a stirring plea on behalf of the Union.

Rev. CHARLES JAMES followed, dwelling with all the glow and fervour of a Welshman on London's needs, and the best evidence for Ragged School's—such children as those now present on the platform.

After the prize distribution and a selection of beautiful songs from the children, these were addressed by Mr. BENJAMIN CLARKE, and a few words by Mr. W. A. BEWES, Lord FORTESCUE, and others terminated the proceedings.

A PRAYER FOR REVIVAL.

ARM of the Lord, awake! awake!
As in the glorious ancient day,
When thou the dragon's head didst break,
And from the mighty wrest the prey:
Where Jacob's seed, a ransomed host,
Marched through the deep from coast to coast.

Awake! awake! put on thy strength,
Almighty as of old to save,
Where'er the captive soul at length
Finds bondage cruel as the grave,
O smite the enslaving tyrant low,
And let the groaning victim go!

Strong arm, for Israel made bare,
Still to the upturned eye revealed,
O gird the faint to do and dare
O'er all the world's wide battlefield;
The arm of flesh let faith disown,
And find her strength in Thee alone.

Arm of the Lord, awake! awake!
Then truth divine instinct with power
Shall in a thousand pieces break
The unbelief that rules the hour;
Nor shall presumption dare to doubt
The word that casts the demon out.

Uplift thy standard, while the foe
Comes like an overflowing flood;
Gird on thy sword and conquering go,
O thou with vesture dipped in blood!
Anoint us with the Holy Ghost,
And send thy Church a Pentecost.

Belfast. W. MAXWELL.

JEWS IN ST PAUL'S CATHEDRAL.—On Saturday afternoon, Prebendary Gordon Calthrop delivered an address on "the Jewish question," before a large gathering in St. Paul's Cathedral. The audience included a considerable number of Hebrews, who listened with evident interest. Taking for his text Isaiah ii. 5, "O house of Jacob, come ye, and let us walk in the light of the Lord," he showed that the prophecy to which the appeal is attached is one that yet awaits fulfilment. He looked forward to the golden age when war shall be no more, when the craving and the greed, the drive and the push, the bitter struggle for existence, the terrible inequalities that exist amongst us shall become things of the past. The cause of this change will be the universal acceptance of Divine truth, or, in other words, in the fact that God has been recognised in the beneficence of his sway and in the unspeakable tenderness of his love and mercy to the children of men. The preacher argued that this wonderful amelioration in human affairs is intimately and inseparably associated with the fortunes of Israel. The prophet perceives that no dependence is to be placed upon them while they remain in their present condition. When they walk in the light of the Lord, then these great hopes will begin to be fulfilled. In conclusion, Mr. Calthrop appealed to the Jews present. "O house of Israel, the world is waiting for you; but before you can be the world's true benefactors, you must, you must learn how to retrace your steps."

Letters to the Editor.

THE ACCUSER IN REV. XII.

DEAR SIR,—In the articles on "The Accuser of the Brethren Being Cast Down," I have not noticed that any one has drawn the distinction between accusations against our justification and accusations against our walk as Christians. Against the former no question can possibly be raised, and I submit that the verses referred to in Romans viii. have reference to the former only.

The whole question there has reference to those whom God has justified according to Romans iii. and iv., and the challenge in Romans viii. is who can lay anything to the charge of God's elect, as regards their justification, and it is added, "it is Christ that died, yea, rather that is risen again," making this the unanswerable argument for our complete justification, and Satan knows this well. But to accuse God's people concerning their walk and conversation is a very different matter, and needs the advocacy of Christ for us as referred to in I John ii. 1, 2.

Surely there is a distinction between our relationship to the God who justifies us, and the Father under whose government and discipline we are. It is God that justifies. It is the Father with whom we have the Advocate.

I see another question imported into the correspondence this week, viz., "Who is the man-child of Rev. xii.?"

Now, I would submit that whoever it be, it is some one who comes into existence, or, at all events, appears in the scene, during the time of Israel's travail pangs—those days of tribulation to which there has been no parallel in the world's history, nor ever shall be. I do not think that this man-child can represent Christ, for the time of his birth was not a time of travail pangs to Israel, which the time spoken of here certainly will be.

I believe, then, that there will be a remnant, like the Maccabees of old, who are raised up in the midst of the nation to do mighty acts, or, as Daniel xi. says of them, the people that do know their God shall be strong and do exploits; the Maskilim, who understand amongst the people (Dan. xi. 33), and who fall by the sword and captivity and by flame many days, possibly the 1260 days of Rev. xii. 6.

It has been contended that this man-child can only be the Lord, because it is said that he was "to rule all nations with a rod of iron." But this is the very promise given to the overcomer in Rev. ii. 26, 27.

Here they are also spoken of as "overcoming" by the "blood of the Lamb and the word of their testimony." It is not unreasonable to suppose that if we find in the Book of Daniel persons spoken of as filling the same position, and in the very same circumstances as those spoken of here in the Revelation, that they are identical. Whether they are slain and afterwards raised, or whether they are caught up alive to God and to his throne, I do not presume to say, but that they have part in the first resurrection is sufficiently plain to need no further comment.

That the woman is not the Church seems plain enough, even if the Church could be imported into this earthly scene, for the Church never brought forth Christ, and I suppose it will hardly be contended that she represents the Blessed Virgin Mary.—Yours truly, F. C. BLAND.

FUNDAMENTAL TRUTHS CONFERENCE.—Pastor F. E. Marsh calling a conference for May 24 to 26 says: "In the face of the widespread departure by professed disciples of Christ from 'The Faith once for all delivered to the saints,' it becomes Christians of all names who love the truth, and show their love to Christ by keeping his sayings, to band themselves in holy unity, to gather together for fervent prayer, and in the power of the Holy Spirit to declare and to defend the sacred truth the Lord has committed to our trust. Such an opportunity will be given in connection with the forthcoming conference. The speakers represent nearly all sections of the Church." The subjects are, "The Scriptures and their Authority," "The Saviour in his Atonement," and "The Holy Spirit in his Activity."

MR. ARNOT'S WORK IN CENTRAL AFRICA.—Echoes of Service, for May, gives interesting details of this Mission. Mr. and Mrs. Arnot, with their little one, expected to start early in April for the coast. Mr. Arnot writes: "We have just finished getting out a little book in Umbundu called Komene, being a history of God's dealings in grace with man from Adam to the coming of Christ, which will be a sort of introduction to the Gospels translated by the American missionaries. I am now making what efforts I can at a vocabulary from words collected by the Americans and ourselves, choosing only practical and useful words, suitable for learners. Dr. Clowe has of his own accord written strongly seconding Dr. Walter Fisher's advice to take a rest now, so you will possibly see us in June. Mr. Joseph Lynn has just started building a house outside the gate of our little enclosure, on the road leading to the native village. My wife's school numbers fifteen, varying in age, from young men to children. Several of the lads are very interesting cases, not only confessing Christ with their lips, but leading reformed lives."

The Book World.

An excellent presentation for young people of the eventful and fruitful career of the late John B. Gough is to be found in E. A. Rand's A KNIGHT THAT SMOTE THE DRAGON. (2s. 6d. Nisbet and Co.) It is a story amply worth re-telling, and Mr. Rand tells it graphically, though here and there the narrative is somewhat overloaded with cognate illustration. The book ought to find a niche in Sunday-school and Band of Hope libraries.

ROUND THE EMPIRE, by G. R. Parkin (Cassell and Co. 1s. 6d.), is a compendious handbook to the widely-scattered possessions of the British Empire, intended for schools. The youthful student may here find his lesson in imperial geography as fascinating as a book of adventure or travel. While it may awaken thoughts of patriotic pride, it cannot fail at the same time to create a sense of responsibility in the minds of the rising generation.

TE DEUM LAUDAMUS; Being Addresses on Important Truths therein Contained. By Sir Arthur Blackwood. (2s. 6d. Nisbet & Co.) The author describes his work as "an attempt to bring home to the heart a few of the great and deeply important truths to which such frequent utterance is given in public worship, and which, it must be feared, from that very frequency, lose their power." The attempt is an unqualified success, for Sir Arthur, in seven chapters, opens up with freshness and force the various points of doctrine which are, with special propriety, called fundamental. This is no mere explanation of an ancient hymn; it is a comprehensive statement of Scripture truth, under headings suggested by versicles of the best known and most widely used of all liturgical compositions. The pages are filled with instruction, vigorously expressed, by one who, though not a bishop, is emphatically "apt to teach" (1 Tim. iii. 2).

A WINTER IN NORTH CHINA. By Rev. T. M. Morris, of Ipswich. (5s. Religious Tract Society.) Rev. Dr. Glover, of Bristol, who accompanied the author on a visit to the stations of the Baptist Missionary Society, China, writes an introduction to this very readable book. He well says: "It were greatly to be wished that in this year, which marks the centenary of English missions, there could be a revival of the imperial compassion which the grace of Christ works in every heart that yields itself to its influence. It needs to be recognised that work for others is the business of the Church of Christ, and that the best lives of the Church should be consecrated to the work that is most difficult." The pages refer to the operations of many societies, and tell of work which cannot but move to thankfulness to the God of all grace. Mr. Morris says; "We felt, as we passed from one mission station to another, that 'the half had not been told.' Again and again have we said to missionary brethren, as they have quietly unfolded to us the extent and results of the work in which they were engaged, 'Why have you not told us this at home? It has all the charm of a romance.'" The book conveys a large amount of information as to the empire and its people, including chapters on the principal religious and missionary work and methods.

Messrs. Cassell and Co. send us a copy of Part 8 of their CABINET PORTRAIT GALLERY (1s.), which contains a capital portrait of the late Dr. Henry Allon, besides splendid portraits of Princesses Victoria and Maud of Wales, and of Sir F. Abel.

THE EVERLASTING NATION. In recent issues of this excellent monthly, Rev. A. A. Isaacs, the editor, has been sifting the Anglo-Israelite theory. The May number is replete with sketches and articles which will have peculiar attractions for all who study Jewish literature and history, whether relating to the past or present. (3d. monthly. *J. HOME FOR AGED CHRISTIAN JEWS.—In connection with the work amongst Hebrew Christians which Rev. J. B. Barraclough, M.A., has recently inaugurated under the title of "Christian Help for Christian Jews," a comfortably appointed Home for aged and afflicted Christian Israelites was opened on Tuesday, the 3rd inst., at 13, Fremont-street, The Triangle, South Hackney.

CHILDREN'S CONVALESCENT HOME — The subscribers of this institution held their first annual meeting at the Home, Winifred House, Wray-crescent, Tollington-park, on Thursday last. Mr. Ion Pritchard presided. The Home has received forty-four children during the year, mainly those suffering from acute, but non-infectious diseases; the average number in the Home is fourteen, and the usual length of stay about eleven weeks. Several subscribers spoke of the good work done by the institution.

NOTES ON DAILY READINGS.

SUNDAY, MAY 15.—GENESIS XXVI.

Strong men have sometimes weak sons. Isaac was cast in a very different mould from Abraham. He was naturally yielding and timorous. But the blessing which had been granted to Abraham was continued also to him. "I am with thee, and will bless thee, for my servant Abraham's sake." The great distinguishing characteristic of Abraham's life named here is his obedience. Are we sufficiently accurate in keeping God's charge? And do we realise sufficiently the posthumous blessing which may thus accrue to unborn generations? How independent the love of God is to our deserts! In spite of his cowardice and unbelief, Isaac's path is attended with blessing; he obtains a distinct assurance of protection from the king; reaps a hundredfold from the land; grows until he becomes very great; comes on repeated springs, and digs many wells; and bears everywhere the mark of God's presence, so that his enemies were compelled to admit that God was with him. We, too, are able to dig wells, at which thirsty souls may drink; indeed, we are ourselves to be wells, because the Water of Life, which is the Holy Ghost, is in us as a living spring, rising up to eternal life.

MONDAY, MAY 16.—GENESIS XXVII.

This is a very sad record of scheming and deceit. God had said clearly that the elder should serve the younger, and there was no doubt that it would be so. There was, therefore, no need for Rebekah and Jacob to resort to such unworthy methods as are here described. When God's plan has been once revealed, we may await his own development of its details. And in this there was so much nobility in David, who, though he knew that he was to succeed Saul on the throne, refused to take advantage of the opportunities of taking his life which came within his reach, but quieted his soul as a weaned child, and waited till God's set time arrived. To do other than this, to imitate this mother and son, is to sow the seeds of a bitter harvest. It is probable that Rebekah never saw her favourite son again. But see how men are kept to their ill-bargains. In a rash moment Esau had bartered away his birthright; and now, though he sought eagerly and with tears an opportunity of reversing the decision, it was denied him. He had a blessing—that of a wealthy earthly career; but he missed the spiritual heritage which might have been his. Let us seek the very best God can give us, preferring above all the power and right to help others; and may we learn to be quiet and content and still till He shall give us that which is good.

TUESDAY, MAY 17.—GENESIS XXVIII.

It is in our loneliness of heart and isolation from home and dear ones that we obtain visions of that blessed link between heaven and earth by which our spirit may climb into closest fellowship with God. Ladders are set down beside the heads that are pillowed on stones more often than beside those that rest on beds of down. The angels go and come on their bright and beneficent errands, but the Lord stands immutably the same. Life should be an Ascension, a climb up the ladder, which, in the words of Jesus to Nathanael, is an emblem of the Son of Man. Each stage in Christian experience is another rung in the ladder; let us follow on to know the Lord; let us leave that which is behind, and press on and up to apprehend that for which we were apprehended of Christ Jesus. It is always better farther on; always a ridge of fellowship unreached, from which the view is wider and further. What a blessed epitome of blessing: his presence, his keeping, his safe landing of us on the shore of fulfilled purpose! God can make moor and wastes into the vestibule of heaven, pillows into pillars, and pilgrims into priests.

WEDNESDAY, MAY 18.—GENESIS XXIX.

Jacob's lot was by no means an easy one during the fourteen years described in this chapter. The drought consumed him by day, and the frost by night; his sleep fled from his eyes, and he bare the loss of all that was missing from the flocks. Yet all this seemed unto him but a few days for the love he had for Rachel. Blessed human love that softens the hardest lot, casting a halo over difficulty, as sunset glow over the hard outlines of the hills. To have this a man might well be content to forego the choicest gifts of earthly fortune. But if the love of woman could thus gladden those long dark days, surely the blessed love of Jesus would do the same and more. Life may be long and lonely, bereaved of those dearer far than light, daily tasks irksome, the hills of difficulty many, but if the heart has learnt to take all from the love of Jesus, and to do all in Him, by Him, and for Him, all is changed. The days, as they pass by, become channels down which the strong tides of eternal bliss are ever running at the flood.

THURSDAY, MAY 19.—GENESIS XXX.

There are more compensations in our lives than we are disposed to think. Here was Leah, who had never had Jacob's love, bearing a family of noble sons, whose names commemorated her agonies and tears and triumphs; but Rachel, who had the tender love of her husband, must wait for many bitter years until God took away her reproach. God equalises our lots, and in the saddest lives there are glints of sunshine. It is in the most difficult bits of Alpine climbing that you come across the sweetest flowers. The birds of dull plumage are the sweetest singers. Blind and deaf people have extraordinary gifts of music and touch. Do not think that there is so much inequality in lives as appears on the surface. What a devout woman Rebekah was. Perhaps sorrow was the cause. She connected all with the Lord; so with all our sorrows we must interweave the golden strands of gratitude and trust. The time was coming that when he must be returning homewards; his heart was there, and the blessing strewed on his lot did not make him oblivious to the old father who yet lived. But how strange that he would not trust the blessing which followed him wherever he turned, but insisted on preparing for his flight by a repetition of his double-dealing and chicanery which had already blasted his life. Ah! it would take years of discipline yet ere this Jacob would become an Israel. Yet if God could make a saint out of him, need any despair?

FRIDAY, MAY 20.—GENESIS XXXI.

He who said, Return, pledged himself to be with his servant as he obeyed Him. When we are on God's plan, we may always count upon Him, and when He is with us we are invulnerable. If Jacob had realised this, he would not have needed to resort to stealth and subterfuge in getting away from Laban. The fear of man always breeds a snare, and robs the child of God of that noble upright bearing which commands the respect even of men of the world. The straightforward course is always the wisest and safest. To steal away is only to excite pursuit and angry recriminations. But even though Jacob had acted so meanly and unworthily, there was no slackening in God's love or care. He said to Laban, "Take heed to thyself that thou speak not to Jacob either good or bad." Though we believe not, yet He remaineth faithful, He cannot deny Himself. Our unbelief cannot make his promises of none effect.

SATURDAY, MAY 21.—GENESIS XXXII.

Before we meet our Esaus we are pretty sure to meet God's angels. There are more hosts hurrying over the world than are patent to the mortal eye. The Captain of the Lord's host appeared to Joshua. There are more for us than against. In times of trial we betake ourselves to God, and are justified in claiming his protection, so long as we can show that we are on his plan and doing his bidding And it is in the agony of our dread that God achieves in us a revolution that dates a new era. Alone beneath the silent march of the everlasting stars, face to face with our hour of destiny, God draws near to search us and to show some wicked or selfish way which had alienated us from his gracious help. This must be exposed and dealt with and put away ere He can open to us all his hidden stores of help and deliverance. So the angel wrestles with us. At first we resist in the pride of our strength, but after awhile we are touched in the very sinew of that strength. It shrinks, and we are obliged to go from wrestling to resting, from struggling to trusting, from striving to clinging. Then we cry in an agony of desire, Thou shalt not go till Thou hast blessed as only Thou canst. It is so we conquer, and we who had before been Jacobs, schemers, cheats, become Israels, princes having power with God and man.

The Gentlewoman for last week was a number of exceptional interest. For those who can afford it, and who like to encourage trade by keeping up with the latest fashions in dress, a large number of finely-executed plates are provided. Mrs. Panton, a recognised authority on domestic economy, begins a series of practical papers on household management. The conductors have arranged for a plebiscite of fair readers as to their views on the much-debated question of woman suffrage.

International S. S. Lessons.

SUNDAY AFTERNOON, MAY 22.

Daniel and his Companions—Dan. i. 8-21.

Golden Text: Verse 8.

Babylon, where this lesson opens, was situated on the river Euphrates. It was a great city, its walls were four square, each side of which was, according to one authority, fifteen miles, making the whole circuit about sixty miles. It was the chief city of the Babylonian Empire, and reached its highest position and its greatest splendour under Nebuchadnezzar. The seventy years' captivity of the Jews in this city began when Jehoiakim was King of Judah (vv. 1, 2). It was at this time that Daniel and his three companions were led to Babylon. A much greater number followed after the brief reign of Jehoiachin (2 Kings xxiv. 10-16). The last king was Zedekiah, whose downfall we considered last quarter (Jer. xxxix. 1-10).

This lesson is the more interesting because of the youthfulness of Daniel. He continued in Babylon during the whole of the seventy years' captivity (21). Supposing him to have been eighty-seven in the third year of Cyrus (x. 1), he would be not more than about fourteen when this book opens. Probably his companions were about the same age. Let young people take note of his example. It was because as a boy he could act with such courage and faith that he grew to be one of the noblest of Scripture characters.

Daniel's Temptation.—What was it? (See verse 5.) He and his companions were chosen, among others, to be trained for the special service of the king. This would help to fit Daniel for the useful purpose God intended him to fulfil (Acts vii. 22). The sin involved in eating the food from the royal table arose from two things—first, the Jewish law forbad the use of certain animals for food which might be in common use in Babylon, and secondly, it was a custom in heathen countries to offer of that which was eaten to their gods (Deut. xxxii. 38). Many things made the temptation severe. It was an appeal to his vanity. There was opened before him the prospect of rising to eminence in the king's service—why be so scrupulous? To refuse seemed an impertinence to the king, and injurious to himself. How many have fallen through resolving, in a wrong sense, not "to stand in their own light." The ambition to "get on" has ruined many. He was a captive, and was therefore under the authority of his captor. Could he not yield, and throw the responsibility upon Nebuchadnezzar? As many a youth in a place of business has consented to act against his own conscience at the command of his employer.

His Resistance (8).—He acted from "a heart purpose" (Acts xi. 23). He had evidently been devoutly trained, though nothing can be known of his parents; but he remembered and acted upon their teaching. A youth without principle may do right when right is popular. Daniel did it because it was right. He could meet punishment and even death, but could not be false to his own conscience and to God. Yet he proceeded wisely and modestly. He requested, &c. (8). There are ways of resisting temptation which are almost as wrong as the sin to which the temptation would lead. Daniel acted as became his youth, recognised the position of the prince of the eunuchs, sympathised with his difficulty, and urged that the matter should be put to the test (12-14).

Many things make his resistance more important:—(1) It was his first temptation in Babylon. Much depends upon the first step. Failure here will make resistance more difficult in the future; while a resolute stand now will make other victories possible. Beware of first compromises, especially in little things. (2) It helped his companions. He seems to have been prominent among them. They will find it more difficult to stand if he should yield. Think not only of your own souls, but of your influence upon others. We do not stand alone, nor do we fall alone. (3) It was prompted by faith in God. Daniel did not fear the physical consequences of his action as the prince of the eunuchs did (10). God becomes the strength and sufficiency of all those who dare to obey Him. Pulse was a kind of coarse grain or pease; this, with the blessing of God, would do more for his bodily appearance than the king's dainties.

The Result was as Daniel expected. God was overruling all. (1). He gave Daniel favour with the prince (9). This helped the issue. See how God was working for Daniel before Daniel made his stand for him. See Prov. xvi. 7, and compare with Joseph, Gen. xxxix. 21. (2). He made the physical result all that could be desired (15). Faith was vindicated as it always is. Chrysostom says of these four "that they had better health for their spare diet; and their good conscience and merry heart were a continual feast unto them. They also had God's blessing on their coarser fare, which was the main matter that made the difference." (3). He gave special wisdom (17-20). See 1 Sam. ii. 30. Like Solomon, they sought not their own glory, but God's, and God gave greater honour to themselves (1 Kings iii. 11-13).

Daniel continued, &c. (21)—not merely lived so long, but continued as he began, faithfully witnessing for God among those who knew him not. No career could be more worthy of study and imitation.

OBITUARY.

MR. J. W. WILSON, LATE OF REDRUTH.

We regret to learn of the death of this faithful man, who was for a long time town missionary at Redruth, Cornwall. He was a native of Tasmania, and left England a few years ago to reside in Australia. He died at Geelong, aged fifty-eight.

MRS. NORMAN KERR.

Many will regret to hear that Dr. Norman Kerr honoured and loved for his devoted labours in connection with the Temperance movement, has suffered bereavement in the death of his dear wife, Eleanor Georgina, who passed away at her residence, 42, Grove-road, Regent's-park, on Friday week (28th) at the age of forty-two.

REV. JOHN S. WORKMAN.

Some few years ago this earnest and faithful Wesleyan minister was well known for his successful work in Southwark and elsewhere, being blessed to many. Lately having been a great invalid he has been heard of but little. Those, however, who recall the past will hear with sorrow that he passed away last week. It is said of him that though "he was not a great preacher, his heart yearned with pity over lost sinners, and few men felt more solemnly the powers of the world to come. Hundreds of sinners have been brought to God under his ministry. In all work he was unwearying and dauntless."

DR. JANET HUNTER.

The sad news of the death from cholera of Dr. Janet Young Hunter, of the Free Church Medical Mission at Royapuram, Madras, has reached this country by cable. The intimation of her death came as a great shock. Miss Young had only been about two and a-half years in India, having gone out in the end of 1889 to carry on outdoor dispensary work at Royapuram, in conjunction with Miss M'Phail, and subsequently the two ladies took charge of the hospital recently erected there. She was the daughter of a farmer at Barassie, Ayrshire. Her unexpected death at the early age of 31, and in the outset of a work and career of great promise, is a heavy loss to the Church.

REV. ARCHIBALD BLACK, DUNDEE.

Rev. Archibald Black, of Ogilvie Free Church, Dundee, died last week. Fully a year ago he became somewhat infirm in health, and took a voyage to Canada. He recovered so far as to be able for a partial discharge of his ministerial duties, and a month ago thought himself so much better that he dispensed with the services of Rev. A. C. Abel, who had acted as his assistant for some months. In a few days, however, his old complaint returned in an aggravated form, and he succumbed. Mr. Black was in the fifty-first year of his age. As a young man he came under the spiritual influence of the late Dr. Sommerville, for whom he retained through life a profound veneration. He became pastor of Ogilvie Church in March, 1880, and threw himself into the work with great zeal and energy. When he took charge of the congregation the membership was only 386; it is now upwards of 800. In addition to his strictly congregational duties he devoted much time and attention to home mission work, with the result that a new mission hall has been built in the Clepington district at which much good work is being accomplished. He was most assiduous in the prosecution of his pastoral labours, and continued the systematic visitation of his people in their own homes up to the very last days of his life.

REV. DR. LOWE, EDINBURGH.

Rev. John Lowe, F.R.C.S.E., died at his residence, George-square, Edinburgh, shortly after six o'clock on Sunday evening, from syncope, after a few days' illness. He was the son of a Congregational minister, and when a young man went to Travancore as a medical missionary of the London Missionary Society, returning to this country after eight years' service. A little later, in March, 1871, he became superintendent of the training institution of the Edinburgh Medical Missionary Society, and in 1883 was appointed secretary of that Society, both of which offices he held until 1890, when the directors gave him Dr. Hoernlé as assistant superintendent. Dr. Lowe worked zealously for the institution until a few days before his death, and during his term it has progressed in every department. The Society, which celebrated its jubilee last February, has twenty-nine male and several lady medical missionary students, while its annual income is about £6000, and fully seventy former students are at work on foreign missions. Dr. Lowe was of a genial and zealous nature, and as he was the principal director of the institution for so many years, it will be easily understood that his unexpected death must be a painful surprise to many interested in foreign missions. He was the author of "Medical Missions: their Place and Power"; a brochure on the work of the Edinburgh Medical Missionary Society; and a Life of Dr. Elmslie, of Cashmere. He is survived by a widow and two daughters, one of the latter being married and residing in Travancore.

Cornish Fairs.—The Redruth Town Missions would be thankful of a large supply of Gospel books and tracts for distribution at the Fairs and the Meeting of the Cornwall Agricultural Association.—G. Burrells, 12, Sparnon-terrace, Redruth.

Evangelistic Notes.

Mr. Henry Lakin has been holding an interesting mission at Earlham Hall, Ball's Pond-road, with indications of blessing.

Mr. W. Henry Collins, who is now labouring in Ireland, hopes shortly to visit the United States, and would be glad of prayer for his work there.

Whitehaven.—A special evangelistic mission has been conducted at the Friends' Meeting House, Whitehaven, by Mr. Howard Nicholson, and the spiritual results seem satisfactory.

Carrickmacross.—Rev. J. P. Cushing, of the Church Parochial Mission, who has recently conducted several Gospel missions in Ireland, has just concluded a very successful ten days' series of evangelistic services in the parish church, Carrickmacross.

Messrs. Fullerton and Smith have had a fruitful mission at Bromley. The services have been well attended and much spiritual blessing has been received, and it is hoped that considerable additions will be made to the membership of the various churches.

Messrs. Harmer and Jenner have closed a nine days' mission at Barking. The Queen's-road Baptist Chapel being too small for the Sunday evening gathering, the use of the Board School was secured. Much interest was awakened, and many professed to accept salvation.

The Grange, Bermondsey.—A seven days' mission has been conducted at this hall by Mr. G. Hefford, of the Evangelisation Society. The congregations were encouraging, believers were quickened and refreshed, enquirers spoken with, and several professed to receive Christ.

Rev. E. P. Hammond has lately held meetings in nine different localities in New Haven. The Lord's blessing has been upon them. Many theological students have, from time to time, taken part in the services, and will doubtless find their ministry greatly benefited by having come in contact with this work. Rev. John C. Collins says that over six hundred have professed conversion in these meetings. This does not include many in some other churches where Mr. Hammond has not been, who recently professed conversion.

Major J. H. Cole commenced work early in the year at Kansas City, Kan., and, with the assistance of the six leading churches, has accomplished a work greater than any since the great revival in Lawrence, conducted by Rev. E. P. Hammond in 1872. Over one thousand persons have come forward and professed their faith in Christ. Most of these are young people; but there has been a large number of conversions of adults. Professional and business men have closed their stores in the busiest parts of the day, and the movement was felt by all classes of the people.

Mr. Lane at Leighton Buzzard.—A very successful week's mission in connection with the Y.W.C.A. has been conducted here by Mr. W. R. Lane. Good audiences were attracted from the first, and these steadily grew as the mission advanced. At a meeting for men only a profound impression was produced upon the crowd of men which filled the hall. Every address was listened to with deep attention, those on the "New Birth," and "The Great White Throne" being marked by special power. Several cases of conversion are known to have resulted from the mission. The spiritual life of many Christians has been stimulated, and the various Christian communities have been drawn more closely together. Nearly all the Nonconformist ministers in the town took part in the services.

Mission Work in Paris.

DEAR SIR,—People interested in Christian work may like to know of our Mission-hall at 20, Rue Clairant, Batignolles, Paris, where we hold a public service every evening but one, Monday being reserved for private meetings of believers and enquirers. We beg Christian visitors to come and see this most flourishing work. We have nine stations in and around Paris, and also missions in Havre, Rouen, Elbeuf and St. Servan, but I mention specially the Rue Clairant as having a good restaurant attached to it, with several bedrooms, where ladies and gentlemen can be comfortably, though plainly, lodged and boarded for the small sum of 5s. per day, inclusive (all profits to go to the work). I will gladly answer letters.—Yours truly,

HELEN W. GIBSON.

7, Boulevard de Versailles, St. Cloud, Paris.

BATTLE.—Some time ago a lady held a fruitful mission here, and now, returning once more, she has held services which appear to have been much blessed.

THE CIRCULATION OF THE SCRIPTURES in the Madras Presidency during the past year has been greater than during any previous year since the Madras Auxiliary of the Bible Society commenced the work. During the twelve months nearly 200 000 copies of the Bible were distributed. It is remarked that there is satisfactory evidence that "the Bible is being read most diligently by a very large number of educated Hindoos" and that the Scriptures are "being deeply read and pondered over in secret."

Cambridge Notes.

On May 1, Rev. Principal Cave preached at the Emmanuel Congregational Church.

The open-air services were held for the first time this term in Barnwell; the children's service was quite a success, and also the open-air service on Parker's Piece.

The University sermon on May 1, was preached by Rev. E. A. Stuart, of St. James's, Holloway. There was a large congregation. He preached from 1 John i. 2. At the Alexandra Hall about 250 University men gathered in the evening when Mr. Stuart gave a stirring Gospel address from John iii., emphasising three heavenly things that our Lord revealed to Nicodemus. (1) v. 13. The Incarnation. (2) v. 14. The Incarnate one crucified. (3) v. 15. Faith.

On Thursday afternoon and evening Rev. Hugh Price Hughes preached in the Guildhall to a very large congregation. He took Rev. xxi. 5 as his text in the afternoon, "Behold, I make all things new." The earth was polluted by grim, widespread evils. Slavery, drunkenness, lust, gambling, crime, pauperism, ignorance, disease, and war. Jesus Christ came into this world to abolish every one of these evils. In the evening Mr. Hughes spoke on the work of the West London Mission, stating that its work was not to make Methodists, but to bring the people of London to the Lord Jesus Christ.

A meeting was held on Friday, May 6th, in Cambridge in support of the Waldensian Church Mission in Italy. The master of Corpus College was in the chair and the speakers were Rev. E. Rivoire of Ancona, and Major M. Frobisher, secretary of the English Committee. Signor Rivoire said it had always been a missionary Church. In past centuries their pastors went two by two—an old man and a young one—throughout Italy. In some parts of the country they had now eighty and eighty-two per cent. of the people who could not read a single word. They owed that to priestly government. They had the grossest superstition alongside of ignorance and unbelief. In Italy practically the greater part of the population were heathen. They had forty-four settled churches, fifty-four missionary stations, and 150 localities visited by their evangelists.

Personalia.

The Archbishop of York has gone for a brief rest to the Continent.

The Bishop of Ripon has, we hear, been ordered complete rest for some little time.

Dr. Talmage will visit this country in June and fulfil a number of preaching and lecturing engagements.

Rev. John J. Sargeant, superintendent of Great Queen-street, having broken down in health, has been compelled to rest awhile.

Rev. W. J. Woods, of Clapton, was appointed Secretary of the Congregational Union at its business meeting on Monday evening.

Rev. J. C. Stuart Mathias has, we learn, been unwillingly compelled, by private circumstances, to relinquish the treasurership of the Figueras Mission.

Rev. Eustace R. Conder, D.D., who began his ministry in 1844 and succeeded Dr. Reynolds at Leeds in 1861, has intimated to his church that the state of his health compels him to resign his charge.

Rev. Edward White has been revisiting the scene of his former labours in Hawley-road, Kentish-town, and giving a series of lectures to artisans, such as those which, years ago, attracted much attention.

Rev. Joseph E. Rogers, formerly a curate of Mr. Webb-Peploe, has, it is stated, accepted the important charge of the Great Yarmouth vicarage. Many will hail this as a thoroughly good appointment.

Mr. Ira D. Sankey has been singing in a number of meetings in London. On Sunday last he was invited by Rev. Dr. Monro Gibson to assist in the evening service at St. John's Wood Presbyterian Church. He sang two solos and spoke briefly.

Rev. D. J. East, who for more than forty years has presided with much success over the Calabar Baptist College, Kingston, Jamaica, has been compelled to resign his post. Mrs. East and he are returning to England, hoping to spend the evening of life in the midst of their family.

Rev. John Edmond, D.D., as anticipated, tendered at the Synod his resignation of the Convenorship of the Jewish Committee. At the earnest request of his brethren he agreed to retain the office, a younger minister being appointed to assist him as joint-convenor.

THE BOYLE LECTURES for 1892-93 will be delivered by Rev. Alex. J. Harrison, B.D., Evidential Missioner of the Church Parochial Mission Society, lecturer of the Christian Evidence Society, author of "Problems of Christianity and Scepticism." Those for the present year will, by the kind permission of Mr. Ridgeway, be given in Christ Church, Lancaster-gate, on Sunday afternoons at 4.15 p.m., in two series. The first series May 15, 22, 29, and June 5; the second series June 26, July 3, 10, and 17. Subject: Certainties in Religion and Science.

Temperance Notes.

The Methodist Church, in Fiji, to-day, is practically a Church of Total Abstainers.

No less than forty-one Police Court Missionaries are employed by the Church of England Temperance Society.

Upwards of two hundred temperance sermons are said to have been preached in London churches on Sunday week.

On American railways, whilst the trains are passing through Prohibition States, the sale of drink to passengers is suspended.

The Baptist Total Abstinence Society return 1454 Baptist ministers as pledged abstainers. There are 129 local societies affiliated with the Association.

The magistrates at Guildford, the other day, convicted and fined a publican for supplying drink to a drunken person—a woman charged with being drunk.

The fifty-second annual report of the Fitzroy Teetotal Association exhibits no falling off in the energy with which this work has been prosecuted in the hall in Little Portland-street.

In some of the Western Provinces of Russia a strong total abstinence movement is going on. In Esthland and Livland, chiefly in the latter, are no less than sixteen active total abstinence societies.

The Pall Mall Gazette states that Mr. Spurgeon's valuable library of temperance literature has been presented by Mrs. Spurgeon to Rev. J. M. Hewson, the secretary of the Baptist Total Abstinence Association.

"It is not" (says the Bishop of Carlisle) "enough to denounce intemperance. We must take every justifiable step towards encouraging temperance, and must not shut our eyes to the fact that teetotalism cannot cover the whole ground."

The total abstinence section of the C.E.T.S. held its annual meeting last week in Holborn Hall, when the chairman, the Bishop of London, delivered an impressive address upon the duty of all total abstainers to advance the cause amongst their fellows.

The Church of England Temperance Society reports an income of £15,035 10s. 9d., a considerable increase on former years, which, however, was mainly due to the receipt of two legacies amounting to £3308 from the late Dean of Wells and Mr. David Carnegie.

Nearly all the Gospel Mission work in London, according to Mr. Caine, is carried on by total abstainers, 97 per cent. of Congregational students, 98 per cent. of Baptists, 97 per cent of Wesleyans, and 100 per cent. of Primitive Methodist students being teetotalers.

May-Day demonstrations may bring unexpected benefits in their train. In some towns in Austria the municipal authorities ordered all drinking saloons to be closed throughout the day on Sunday. Drinking produces ten times more anarchy than Anarchists.—Echo.

The oldest inebriate asylum in the world is the one founded at Lintorf, Dusseldorf, in Germany, in 1851, for the retention and protection of released prisoners whose intemperance has led to the cause of imprisonment. There are five or six more of these asylums in Germany.

An abstinence society exists in St. Petersburg with six hundred members whose activity has shown itself in the establishment of no less than eight tea-houses in that part of the city where drinking places most abound, and the foundation of an Inebriates' Asylum is also contemplated.

Sir U. K. Shuttleworth, addressing a great temperance demonstration at Nelson, Lancashire, last week, expressed himself in favour of Local Option and the Sunday Closing Bill, and would like to see magistrates far more generally exercising the power of granting six-day, instead of seven-day, licences.

The Missions to Seamen branch of the Church of England Temperance Society is a total abstaining section exclusively for sailors, and not including their wives and families. An annual average of 7600 pledges were taken by seamen of various nationalities, fishermen, and bargemen during the last thirteen years.

The late Rev. James Calvert made Temperance Reform an essential part of his great missionary work. The medal attached to the blue ribbon, worn by many thousands of Fijians, was designed by him. The inscription on one side is, "An sa tabu yaqona kece" (to me all intoxicants are unlawful). On the reverse side is an open Bible, and around it are the words: "Total Abstinence—Health, Happiness, and Prosperity."

It is stated that Dr. Allan, the medical officer of the Leeds Board of Guardians, has exercised a wise discretion in the limited use he has made of alcoholic liquors as a medicine. For many years the ratepayers of Leeds have had no cause of complaint as to the consumption of alcohol at the workhouse. Nothing of the kind is given to the officials, and only to the inmates when prescribed by the medical superintendent.

The twelfth annual report of the Gospel temperance work carried on by Alderman W. D. Stephens at the Central Hall, Newcastle-upon-Tyne, states that 870 meetings have been held during the twelve months; one thousand temperance pledges have been taken, 480 of them in connection with the Prison Gate Mission work; lady missioner has paid three thousand visits to the poor and sick women; and 50 inebriate women and girls have been inmates of the Home.

Among the Churches.

CHURCH OF ENGLAND.

A special mission is being held this week in Macclesfield Parish Church.

The Church of England Scripture Readers report 429,574 visits during the year.

A new mission chapel is being erected at Featherstone (York) where there is great need for special work of this kind.

Over one hundred and fifty branches of the Church of England Women's Help Society are now in operation in various dioceses.

The Bishop of Durham has written suggesting a conference in order to bring to an end the unhappy strike desolating the diocese.

Rev. E. B. De Wolf is going to Vancouver's Island in charge of an emigrant party, one hundred strong, under the auspices of the S.P.C.K.

Baron Pollock presided over the forty-ninth annual meeting of the Church Young Men's Society, held in Zion College. A satisfactory increase in the membership was reported.

The Church Army having had inquiries from several quarters to provide managers for coffee taverns—men interested in Church evangelistic work—have now decided to train suitable men for the purpose, as it has long been found very difficult to find men who can attend to this business and also retain their spiritual earnestness.

The Archdeacon of Gloucester advocates a self-imposed rate of 1d. a week by the four and a-half millions of adult population claiming to be members of the Church of England in England and Wales. With the proceeds, he says, the value of every benefice could be raised to a minimum of £250 a year, and there would still remain a large balance.

A correspondent writing from Runcorn says: "In the village of Helsby scarcely a house escaped the influenza scourge. Few cases, however, ended fatally. The patients have all become convalescent, and in commemoration of the disappearance of the epidemic a largely-attended thanksgiving service was held last week in St. Paul's Church, Helsby.

Archdeacon Wilkinson, in his annual charge to the clergy, said they must remember that the Church was on her trial. She was being weighed in the balance as regarded her position and usefulness. A vast machinery had been set in motion by the Church, affecting every town, village, and hamlet, and exercising its power to a greater or less extent throughout the whole world. Organisations of various kinds had been established, besides the ordinary means of grace, for promoting temperance, soberness, and chastity, and ministering to the sick in hospital and home, strengthening the convalescent, relieving the destitute, and in a thousand ways seeking to penetrate the gloom and darkness of ignorance, poverty, and sin, and to show the light of Christian feeling and influence as well as the power of the Gospel.

CONGREGATIONAL.

The little cause which has been forming at Cricklewood in an iron chapel is about to build on a freehold site.

The Cheshire Union is carrying on in various villages most promising missions, likely to develope into churches.

Mansfield College, Oxford, has received from the executors of the late Mrs. Henry Rogers a legacy of £900 for the Endowment Fund.

The anniversary services of the Bishopsgate Chapel Sunday-school, just held, show progress in every direction, and a good work doing.

A Scripture Union at Park Chapel, Camden-town, formed to encourage the steady and intelligent study of the Bible, reports a membership of 556.

At Bootle, the Congregational Church is not only completing its own chapel, but extending its mission-hall; a good work being done among the poor around.

The Sunday evening services for children, held in Stannary Sunday-school, Halifax, from six to seven o'clock, are becoming a most successful feature of the church's work.

A series of fortnightly services for the masses has been started at Trinity Congregational Church, Peterborough, by Rev. R. E. Clegg, which it is hoped will attract many non-church goers.

New Tabernacle, Old-street, has in association with it three Sunday-schools, with a total of 703 scholars and fifty-nine teachers. There are 214 members of the International Bible Reading Association.

A fifteen days' mission has been conducted in Hosier-street Chapel, Reading, by Mrs. Tanser Dawson, "the converted gipsy." Large congregations assembled, especially on Sundays. There has been a great awakening among church members, and many persons, especially young people, sought the Saviour and obtained the pardon of their sins.

Rev. Geo. Manington, of New Malden, preached on Sunday week on "The Gospel in its relation to Business." The demoralisation of business resulting from the prevailing fierce competition was due, he considered, chiefly to the rage for mere cheapness, to meet which demand expenses were cut down to the lowest point, inflicting injustice and hardship upon workpeople, and reducing profits to the vanishing point.

BAPTIST.

A new and promising cause has been started in Dudley-road, Birmingham.

The work at St. Leonards, under the care of Rev. A. Hall, proves most encouraging.

Rev. E. Herries, of North Shields, has accepted the pastorate at Leeds-road, Bradford.

The foundation-stone of the Spurgeon Memorial Chapel, was laid at Fenny Stratford, on Thursday week.

Rev. George Turner, who has been doing good work at Tottenham for some twenty years, has accepted an invitation to Sutton.

For the past five months the pastor of Staincliffe, Yorks (F. Oliver), has conducted with gratifying results a P.S.A. class for men only.

A church, composed of twenty-one baptized believers, has recently been formed at Wynberg, near Cape Town, under the pastoral charge of Rev. E. Baker, of the Pastors' College.

A new chapel has just been opened at Erith, and the pastor, Rev. J. E. Martin, announced that the whole cost, £3000, had been raised, with the exception of £500 from the Tabernacle Loan Fund.

At the annual meeting of the Baptist Ministers and Missionaries' Prayer Union, Rev. F. B. Meyer was re-elected president. The report, read by Rev. J. E. Martin, showed 697 members, an increase of one hundred on last year.

Friends intending to be present at the Centenary meetings at Nottingham, Leicester, and Kettering, beginning on the 31st inst., and desiring hospitality, should send an intimation to the Mission House, 19, Furnival-street, without delay.

METHODIST.

A new Calvinistic Methodist chapel is to be erected at Tarbach, West Glamorgan, at a cost of from £3000 to £4000.

A discussion on the three years' itinerancy, by the Liverpool Wesleyan Council, terminated in a vote against the present system.

The Wesleyans of North Frodingham have opened a new chapel, which has been erected in the centre of the village on land given by Mr. Noble.

The Wesleyan Council in the Potteries has recommended that the large mission at Hanley, hitherto conducted on undenominational lines, shall be taken over by Methodism.

The amount promised to the United Methodist Free Church Wesley Memorial Fund up to the present time is £5911, the intention of the promoters being to secure £15,000 by July 12.

At the annual Cymanfa of Welsh Calvinistic Methodist Churches of London, an increase of 104 in membership was reported. There are now sixteen Sunday-schools and eight churches in London.

The late Mr. E. M. Bainbridge, of Newcastle-upon-Tyne, has left £1000 each to the Wesleyan Methodist Foreign Missionary Society, the Worn-out Ministers and Ministers' Widows' Fund, and the Children's Home and Orphanage.

The Great Bridgewater-street branch of the Manchester and Salford Wesleyan Mission is making an effort to raise £1500 for the renovation and cleaning of the chapel, and for the paying off of the debt upon the property in connection with that branch.

The annual Liverpool Primitive Methodist district meeting has been held at Fleetwood. The report stated that there were 201 chapels in the district, with 47,935 sittings. The total income for the year had been £25,610, and the expenditure £20,911.

PRESBYTERIAN.

The Sustentation Fund of the Presbyterian Church in England maintains this year the equal dividend of £200.

The Presbyterian Church at Cardiff is to be enlarged so as to accommodate one hundred and fifty more persons.

The Women's Missionary Association had a most encouraging anniversary during the recent meeting of the Synod.

Trinity Church, Hammersmith (Rev. Henry Miller) are about, we hear, extending their mission and Sunday-school accommodation.

The work under the care of Rev. R. W. B. Rentoul at Darlington prospers greatly, and has been much blessed, as shown at a recent congregational meeting.

The East India-road Church is carrying on a good work among lodging-house men, and at a tea lately given the Gospel was faithfully spoken and listened to attentively.

Special services have just been held at Trinity Hall, Clapham, commemorative of the seventh anniversary. Amongst the speakers were Revs. J. Monro Gibson, D.D., and D. MacEwan, D.D.

At a Foreign Mission meeting held lately in Woolwich, Dr. Raitt explained the creditable rank the Presbyterian Church held in this matter in comparison with other Christian Churches—i.e., of three hundred congregations, sixty missionaries were out, to say nothing of the native teachers.

SALVATION ARMY.

Mrs. Colonel Pepper's Servants' Agency is prospering.

Rescue work is now being definitely commenced in Copenhagen.

News arrives that the influenza has prostrated nearly all the South African staff.

General Booth conducted most successful meetings on Sunday last at Ipswich and on Monday at Colchester.

Arrangements are being made for the General to leave London on May 24 for a five weeks' tour on the Continent.

Commissioner Railton has had a long tour in the East of Germany. He reports magnificent times and splendid prospects for a good work there.

From the City Colony Elevators of the Salvation Army 13 men are now being transferred weekly "back to the land," or in other words to the Farm Colony at Hadleigh, Essex.

Day shelters for the poor have been opened in Sweden with great success during the cold winter weather, the entire cost being met by the City Council of Stockholm, while the management is in the hands of Salvation Army officers.

His Grace the Duke of Norfolk, with Alderman Beachcroft and Messrs. Leon and M'Dougall—all of the London County Council—have recently, in company with Commissioner Cadman, visited a considerable number of the social operations of the Salvation Army in London. The keenest interest was displayed by the whole of the party in what they witnessed.

In the past twelve months, through the Darkest England Scheme, the Army has succeeded in finding employment for 5558 out of 19,106 applicants. Such a work should commend itself to the sympathy of employers, who could, of course, by co-operation, greatly assist its working, but who, during the year referred to, only availed themselves of its services to the number of 1·04.

The Social Wing of the Salvation Army has now extended its Free Labour Bureau work by means of branch bureaus all over London, as well as into many of the provincial towns. Instead of being obliged to come right into the City for registration, a man or woman may now take advantage of the Army's intermediary offices in any of the following districts:—Whitechapel, Limehouse, Clerkenwell, Ratcliff-highway, Westminster, Blackfriars-road, Bethnal-green, Edgware-road, St. Luke's, Battersea, Drury-lane, and Commercial-street.

SOCIETY OF FRIENDS.

The Friends have now four separate meetings on Mount Lebanon.

Perhaps (says the British Friend) the most noteworthy departure from precedent within the Society of Friends, at least in recent times, has been the institution of the paid pastor.

Read Here what Guy's Tonic can do.

Strength completely failed me.

Thanks to the Guy's Tonic Treatment it is an Enjoyment to continue my duties.

Gentlemen,—It gives me much pleasure to bear testimony to the efficacy of your medicines, viz., Guy's Tonic and Guy's Fruit Pills. Some weeks back, I had a severe attack of Influenza, keeping my bed for several weeks. Enlargement of the liver was a.....er effect. I was advised to take spirits at lunch and din[illegible]time, but as I had no wish to form habits of this kind, the instructions were not carried out. It really seemed as if strength would never return. A hard, dry cough troubled me, and my voice was affected with huskiness. Your medicines have been so beneficial that it is now an enjoyment to continue duties. I attended an "At Home" yesterday, and suffered no fatigue—and when reciting, my voice was as clear as before the influenza. I shall, as occasion offers, extol the virtues of Guy's Tonic. Congratulating you on the success of your remedies, I am, Gentlemen, truly yours, HOPE COMYNS.

Notes and Comments.

NEXT week we purpose giving portrait and sketch of Rev. R. J. Ward, Congregational Minister, St. Helen's, who is resigning the home pastorate to undertake work in India, in connection with the L.M.S.

Owing to pressure upon our space, through the May Meetings, we have had to hold over for a future issue articles on various subjects, and some letters on various subjects.

We received just as we are going to press, a note from Pastor Hugh D. Brown, of Dublin, enclosing a letter to Dr. Booth, resigning his connection with the Baptist Union. While expressing thanks for the kindness shown to him by members of the Union—which kindness he heartily reciprocates—Mr. Brown says he dare not have fellowship with Mr. C. F. Aked, who has spoken of the Lord Jesus "in a manner which awakens in his breast the strongest, saddest feelings of a holy indignation." Mr. Brown justifies his action by reference to Gal. i. 6-10, and 2 John 7-11. We do not think he will be by any means alone in taking this important step.

The crown of Abraham's blessing was that he should be a blessing. When God called him out of Ur of the Chaldees, He not only promised that He would bless him, but that in him should all the families of the earth be blessed. And after fifty years in the school of God, when Abraham had proved his unwavering faith by unflinching obedience, and had offered up Isaac on the altar, God renewed his promise, "In thee shall all the nations of the earth be blessed, because thou hast obeyed my voice." God yearned over the creatures of his hand, and He would make his friend a partaker with Himself in blessing all the families, all the nations, of the earth. But his seed declined the honour. Had they yielded themselves to be a channel for the knowledge of God to the nations, it would have saved them from idolatry and from the manifold curse which has lain upon them.

"Ye shall receive the power of the Holy Ghost coming upon you, and ye shall be my witnesses to the ends of the earth" was the promise of the ascending Jesus to his infant Church; but, like Israel, she has largely ignored the blessing. Every generation of the Church might have evangelised every generation of the world. The power of the descending Spirit was promised for that purpose, and had they continued as they began, this would have been accomplished. Moreover, it would have kept them from the innumerable errors and heresies which grew up, for "Satan finds some mischief still for idle hands to do."

The only remedy for our endless divisions and bickerings; for heresy-making and heresy-hunting (though it is the heresy-makers who produce the heresy-hunters); for the tormenting cant of so-called "higher criticism," and the worse cant of hypocrisy (though the trend of the first is toward the second)—the only remedy is to do the work which the Master has given us to do.

We are members one of another, and "only with all saints can we comprehend the length and depth and breadth and height of the love of Christ which passeth knowledge." All that the Spirit has imparted to one member belongs to every other, not to be memorised and repeated, but to be fed upon and assimilated, and to become his own. Thus can he freely acknowledge his indebtedness to another, and yet maintain his own individuality.

No true prophet of God will be content to be as a very lovely song of one that hath a pleasant voice, and can play well on an instrument, to a Gospel-hardened congregation, who hear his words from week to week, but do them not. Yet in such dismal ruts many able men uselessly live and die. Perhaps no more sanctifying thing could happen to us than an exodus to the ends of the earth of the greater part of our most faithful and best qualified evangelists, pastors, and teachers. They would be as a dew from the Lord in all places whither He sent them; and those left behind would find room for the exercise of gifts hitherto unutilised or repressed.

A speaker at a recent meeting said that the world could be evangelised if one Christian in five hundred became a missionary. But the five hundredth man will not appear if we only talk about him. It must be felt as an individual responsibility. Every church should surely be adequately represented in the mission-field. May God inspire every evangelist, every pastor, every teacher, with this conception, and as the churches pray and wait on Him, He will surely hear from many purged and willing lips: "Here am I; send me."

Those who are interested in the moral well-being of the labouring poor will find a noteworthy article, well worthy of their attention, in the current number of The Fortnightly Review. The writer, Miss March-Phillips, graphically narrates in it her experiences as the proprietor of a cheap lodging-house in the neighbourhood of the Docks—a house established on a commercial basis, with the view of securing the patronage of at least a few of the forty thousand people who have no other resort than the doss-house, the thieves' kitchen, or the low-class lodging-house. The narrative of this endeavour, in a district swarming with gin-shops, and in which dens of filth and immorality abound, is of much value; it shows that such philanthropic efforts can not only be made to pay, but that they would have the result of brightening and purifying the lives of those who are so fortunate as to come under their influence.

In regard to the work, Miss Phillips states that, although there has been much that is disheartening and much that is discouraging, "there seems good reason to believe that cleaner and better surroundings do in time incline the very roughest to a better habit of living, and to a more contented and moderate state of thought."

A correspondent of The Scottish Pulpit has been entering on some researches as to the dark side of Glasgow social life. The description he gives of some of the night resorts of the city's youth, even in the softened form necessary for publication, shows that considerable vigilance needs to be exercised by the police authorities. They have succeeded in purifying the Glasgow streets to a remarkable extent, so that these thoroughfares compare most favourably with those of London or Liverpool. Let them put down such haunts of vice with an equally unsparing hand, and they will still further strengthen the claim of their city to be one of the best governed in the land.

Once more Punch shoots its darts of keen and cutting satire at the fashionable folly of decorating ladies' hats and other attire with the plumage of rare and beautiful birds. Beneath the representation of a female figure dressed largely in feathers and entitled "A Bird of Prey," is the following statement:—

Despite the laudable endeavours of "The Society for the Protection of Birds," the harpy Fashion appears still, and even increasingly, to make endless holocausts of small fowl for the furnishing forth of "feather trimmings" for the fair sex. We are told that to obtain the delicate and beautiful spiral plum called the "Osprey" the old birds "are killed o in scores, while employed in feeding their young who are left to starve to death in their nests b hundreds. Their dying cries are described as hear rending. But they evidently do not rend the hear of our fashionable ladies, or induce them to ren their much-beplumed garments. Thirty thousan black partridges have been killed in certain India provinces in a few days' time to supply the Europea demand for their skins. One dealer in London said to have received, as a single consignment, 32,0 dead humming-birds, 80,000 aquatic birds, and 800,0 pairs of wings. We are told too that often "aft the birds are shot down, the wings are wrenched during life, and the mangled bird is left to die slow of wounds, thirst, and starvation."

An accompanying poem drives home th moral drawn from these deplorable facts:—

They die in hordes that she may fly,
A glittering horror, through the sky.
Their voices, hushed in anguish,
Find no soft echoes in her ears,
Or the vile trade in pangs and fears
Her whims support, would languish.

What cares she that those wings were torn
From shuddering things, of plumage shorn
To make her plumes imposing?
That when—for her—bird-mothers die,
Their broods in long-drawn agony
Their eyes—for her—are closing?

What cares she that the woods, bereft
Of feathered denizens, are left
To swarming insect scourges?
On Woman's heart, when once made hard
By Fashion, Pity's gentlest bard
Love's plea all vainly urges.

Much of this evil is surely done by want thought rather than want of heart.

The following paragraph appeared in T Newcastle Daily Leader of May 6:—

Some particulars of an extraordinary sect, di covered in Belfast, was published in an evening pap yesterday. They are known as spirit-worshipper and their Sunday service is somewhat startling the orthodox mind. In the centre of the room chair, profusely ornamented with flowers, is place and on this the spirit of the most recently-deceas member is supposed to sit. The worshippers kne round, and for nearly two hours prayer and supplic tion are made through this somewhat novel mediu

Our readers will remember the leader this craze as having held meetings at Keswi simultaneously with the Convention. It pitiful to see to what lengths he is leading h dupes. His reputed wife died of cancer la October, and he has now introduced her wo ship into their meetings. At their priva meals food is placed for her, and afterward partaken of by the others as a sacramen Wherever he goes we are told he professes pay for her spirit; £26 was in this way pa as passage-money for her from America wi him in February. "Evil men and seducers said the Apostle, "shall wax worse and wors deceiving and being deceived."

The magistrates sitting at the Londo Sessions, Clerkenwell, have earned the grat tude of the travelling public by the exemplar sentence of six months' hard labour passe on Hon. Patrick Greville Nugent, for assaul ing a young lady when on a journey by trai from Brighton to London. The argument counsel that because he was somewhat und the influence of drink the culprit's offen might be condoned, was happily not heede It is to be hoped that evil-disposed men ever where will take warning; they are to be foun in quiet suburban roads as well as in o crowded city streets and railway trains.

In an article in The Contemporary Revie Rev. H. R. Haweis describes some rece travelling experiences in Spain. He is t reverse of complimentary in his references facilities of transport, the social amenitie and the general honesty of the people. H repeats the remark of a Spanish companio that "Every one robs, from top to botton from king to beggar....Even justice is e ploited and the judges are bribed." Perhap the darkest tints of his picture are those which he portrays his impressions of a Gover ment cigar manufactory he visited:—

I entered this spacious cigar-barrack at Sevill with its six thousand girls and women of all age All the windows were closed, the air reeking wi tobacco. Here are countless, chattering groups disorderly girls and women from seven or eight eighty years old; countless babies in wooden cradles rocked by mothers of all ages; no law or order; the girls come and go when they like, work or idle about, or sleep, chatter, sing, or swear; but most seemed tolerably busy. They are paid for what they do, and at night disperse to low haunts, or the suburbs, or homes of diverse kinds, generally in the Seville slums. At every moment chaff and insults and overtures were made to you all along the line. Such a sense of oppression and sadness overcame me as I thought of the poor children, whom their mothers, as a rule, sell callously to the highest bidder for the most infamous purposes, even as they themselves have been sold before, that I turned away sickened, morally and physically, wondering how such things could happen.

At the recent annual meeting of the Zenana Bible and Medical Mission much stress was laid on the value of medical work as a factor in missionary effort, not only in relieving suffering, but in removing the prejudices of the people and in preparing the way for the proclamation of the Gospel message. An effort is being made just now to erect at Ajudhya—an Indian city sacred among the Hindoos—a dispensary hospital in connection with the Zenana work carried on there. Lady Herbert Edwardes, of 21, Palmiera-mansions, Brighton, undertakes to provide the yearly sustenance needed, but for the £120 required for the building she asks the co-operation of Christian friends.

The Committee of the Peace Society, 47, New Broad-street, London, E.C., have addressed a Memorial to the Committee of the Religious Tract Society, stating that they "have observed with some pain, in the recently issued annual volume of the Boy's Own Paper (and the remark will apply more or less to previous annual issues of the same serial) that a very considerable proportion of its pages are devoted to descriptions of military and naval adventure. Such papers, with others in the same volume, may easily foster the idea that revenge and violence are quite compatible with the duty and character of Christian believers." The Peace Society express a hope that "those gentlemen who are the conductors of the various publications will consider the desirability of bringing their narratives and descriptive literature into still closer harmony with the avowed objects of the Society, as a distinctively religious and evangelical organisation."

SLAVERY IN QUEENSLAND.

Dr. Paton and his friends are earnestly contending for the overthrow by the Imperial Parliament of the Act reviving the Kanaka Labour Traffic between Polynesia and Queensland. Mr. Samuel Smith, M.P., and many prominent members of Parliament have strongly condemned the traffic. We find the Government admit its evils —"deceit, fraud, and cold-blooded murders"— up to the time the Royal Commission sat in 1885, but persist that since that time the regulations that have been made have obviated all the evils of slavery.

One argument, however, upsets the inference, viz., that as twenty-three languages are spoken by the natives of the thirty islands of the New Hebrides alone, it is obviously impossible that the thousands of natives who have been recruited from those islands since 1885 could have understood the conditions under which they were recruited (this is one of the principal "regulations"), seeing that no living individual understands half those languages.

We trust no effort will be spared to save the poor islanders from the greed and lust of evil men, and free the Gospel from the undoubted hindrance that the traffic has been, and is, to the evangelising of the South Sea Islands.

REV. DR. NEWMAN HALL, who some months ago announced his intention of resigning the pastorate of Christ Church, Westminster-road, has definitely arranged to retire in July next. Sunday, July 10, has been fixed for the farewell sermons, and Tuesday, July 12, for a farewell meeting. This concludes the thirty-eighth year of Dr. Hall's present pastorate and the fiftieth year since his ordination at Hull. Rev. Henry Grainger, who has been assistant to Dr. Hall for twenty-three years, will, on the expiry of the pastorate, be prepared to accept preaching engagements. Letters to him should be addressed—Christ Church Parsonage, 152, Lambeth-road, S.E.

Sermon Production.

Considerable attention has been directed to sermons and sermon production by a recent incident in the Congregational Union, in which the nominee for the office of secretary has been accused of appropriating a sermon of Dr. Oswald Dykes, and preaching it without acknowledgment as his own.

In many aspects this incident has been very unfortunate. There was evident unfairness in withholding the charge till the very eve of election, and in publishing it on a Saturday morning, when a preacher is presumably engaged in preparing for the sacred duties of the coming day, and is therefore less able to rebut a charge of that description. Besides, the choice of Saturday for the exposure gave the charge two days to run before an answer could be made. It was probably their strong reprobation of what seemed to be a mere electioneering dodge that so excited the ministers and delegates, and made them impatient of some of their most trusted leaders.

Certainly the scene at the Memorial Hall on Monday week reflected little credit on the temper or judicial impartiality of modern Congregationalism. The meeting may be characterised as unworthy of the high traditions of that important and enlightened Assembly.

The defence was weak enough, especially the assertion that there was less need to avow the indebtedness to another, because the audience would be thin and the occasion ordinary. Surely these accidents cannot touch the rightness or wrongness of the act in question. What would be wrong on a great public occasion is equally so when perpetrated in comparative obscurity, or else we shall have to establish a new code of morals, in which the publicity or otherwise of our actions will have to be taken into account before their true character can be estimated. The Master has taught us that he that is unfaithful in the least is unfaithful also in much.

The gravest side of the circumstance is the opportunity given, not only to the secular Press—which is not slow to avail itself of its opportunity—but also to the irreligious and ungodly, to throw contempt, not only on the morality of preachers, but on the whole system of religious worship and teaching which they represent. It would be in the highest degree disastrous if the world should be led to suppose that whilst ministers of the Gospel advocate and enforce the loftiest religious claims, they will descend to practices which would be abhorrent to the code of morals adopted by an ordinary man of the world. There must be no divorce between religion and morals, between what is taught and what is practised. And those who occupy conspicuous positions must exert extraordinary precautions that their good be not evil spoken of. Cæsar's wife must be beyond suspicion.

But does not this incident involve yet further issues? Is not the whole system of modern sermon production a mistake? It was well enough to expect three sermons a week in times when books were scarce and education limited, and the pastor stood on a great advantage over his hearers by reason of his access to books and magazines which were beyond their reach. But this disparity has been altered by the immense increase of periodical literature, and the wide circulation of the best books, so that the average of modern congregations is much higher and more nearly than in former times on a par with the information and intelligence of most religious teachers. It is, therefore, doubtless a herculean task for an ordinary man to appear before his congregation week after week with three discourses, which shall be original, fresh, interesting, instructive, moving, and in every way satisfactory. No professional man is expected to produce such an amount of material, and this is doubtless the cause of the unacknowledged transference of sermons, which is perpetually going on, but which is undoubtedly as immoral as it is prejudicial to the attainment of the main object of the ministry.

The pressure of this demand for sermons is probably felt more by Nonconformists than by clergymen of the Established Church, largely because the Church of England lays so much more stress on its worship than the Free Churches are wont to do, relegating the sermon to a much more subordinate position; and because its system provides for the employment of several clergy in connection with each of its congregations. The curate is thus able to divide the Sunday duty with his vicar, besides relieving him of many duties during the week, which otherwise would distract his attention and dissipate his energies. The difficulty is thus lessened, though it is not wholly removed.

The fundamental difficulty lies deep in the habits of Christian society. And if we had to devise an ideal system, we should be inclined to ask whether it could not be arranged for all believers to be present at one of the Sunday services, leaving them free to expend the remainder of the day in various branches of Christian usefulness and soul-winning, whilst the preacher should devote himself to the specific work of heralding the Gospel to those who had not come within its range. It seems to us, also, that in the case of many preachers there is too much a bringing of their own thoughts to the inspired Word, and too little attempt to bring out the stores of truth which lie, like mines of gold, in its pages. Many sermons are composed of scraps of the latest science, references to politics and social questions, extracts from reviews and daily papers, garnished with a little poetry from Tennyson or Browning; with no attempt to unfold the deep and glorious truths, the chains of thought with their forged and closely-knit links, the revelation of the purposes and thoughts of God, which are to be found on nearly every page. If ministers would be more ambitious to show how much there is in God's Word than to exhibit their own dexterity or art or literary stores, they would have less inducement to get more or less inspiration from others.

Besides this, how seldom do ministers seem to remember that they are sent to expound God's Way of Peace and to plead with men to be reconciled with Him! There can never be monotony when such changes are rung out from the liquid bells of Gospel love and pity and invitation, by a true heart, passionately eager not to go to heaven alone. For such appeals it is as needless to borrow the words and thoughts of others, as for a lover to express his heart in pilfered phrases.

The fungus is not more symptomatic of decay than a low morality in these matters is of a decay of spiritual vigour; and on this account, as well as on many others, there is the more need to drink into the One Spirit once for all given, that we may be compelled to say again, as of old: "We cannot but speak the things that we have seen and heard." But there is an enriching of the mind through meditation on Scripture, a dependence on the Master for the matter and manner of the message, a consciousness of having been sent by Him for a specific purpose, which mark out the true minister of Jesus Christ beyond all controversy and imitation.

Moses, the Man of God.

HIS COUNTERFEIT.

Num. xxiii. 10.

Pisgah within a few months was trodden by two great prophets, who in character, work, and death, were in strong contrast to each other. The one was Moses, the great Prophet of Israel; the other, Balaam, who throughout the East was regarded as a prophet. "His blessing or curse was irresistible, the rival and possible conqueror of the great Hebrew leader." How often has it happened that Satan has counterfeited the works of God, confusing Jerusalem with Babylon, the plagues with the marvels wrought by the Egyptian magicians, the Lamb's wife with the scarlet woman of the Apocalypse, Moses with Balaam.

His home lay somewhere among the highlands of Mesopotamia, near the springs of the Euphrates. But he was known across the desert, around the distant shores of the Dead Sea, where Moab lay. And wherever his fame travelled, it inspired awe and wonder. As we notice the respect in which he was held, we are reminded of words spoken long after of another, "The whole earth wondered after the beast, and they worshipped the beast, saying, Who is like unto the beast? and who is able to war with him? And there was given to him a mouth speaking great things and blasphemies."

I. The Sources of Balaam's Knowledge.—He was a man of undoubted genius, quick, clever, able to read the drift of the movements of his time; possessed also of a graceful flow of words and imagery when he desired to express the thoughts that, in his rapt moods, teemed in his mind.

He was, moreover, certainly acquainted with the true God, and even posed and spoke as his servant. This was in part due to his living in the country where, not many centuries before, Abraham, Laban, and Jacob had sojourned. But, besides, there can be no doubt that the knowledge of the true and only God has always been diffused among all nations of men, so that they have been able by the light of nature and the inner light of conscience to grope their way to some dim perceptions of his matchless beauty and glory.

In addition to this, he was the organ of Divine inspiration. He heard the words of God, and knew the knowledge of the Most High, and saw the vision of the Almighty. However much this admission may startle some of our preconceived notions, there is no doubt about the necessity of making it. We must admit that often the water of life has flowed through very impure channels. Clearly in this case before us Balaam became the organ of divine inspiration, and spoke words which might have been uttered by the lips of Moses himself.

Or take his own declared wish to die the death of the righteous, so that his last end might resemble his. Could the most earnest soul wish anything better? And can words better express the longing that is common to all men in their noblest hours? The man who could wish that was capable of high and noble impulse; but he was held captive by the love of earth.

Or take your stand beside him, as Keble depicts him:

> His wild hair floating on the eastern breeze,
> His tranced yet open gaze
> Fix'd on the desert haze,
> As one who deep in heaven some airy pageant sees.

What a magnificent panorama was that which the eyes of king and prophet swept! The green pasture lands of Bashan to the north, the red mountains of Edom, the rocky nests of the Kenite, the desert haze on the far horizon, where Amalek ruled; the hills of Palestine, behind which the great sea, the Mediterranean, rolled in its pride, destined one day to bring the ships from these coasts of Kittim and isles of Greece, which represented the wonderful new Western world. But all these scenes were dwarfed in interest when contrasted with that vast encampment which lay beneath their feet, the long lines of tents spread out as gardens by the riverside, as lign-aloes planted by the Lord, as cedar-trees beside the waters.

There before his eye "the giant forms of Empire" passed on their way to ruin. The Lion of Judah, the wild ox of Ephraim, the star that stood over Bethlehem's manger; the sceptre of universal power which should smite Moab, and Edom, and Seir; the conquests of Assyria, beating over the lands as a river that has swept away its barriers; till the distant West should turn the tide of Eastern invasion backwards, as it came to pass when the victorious army of Alexander swept across the first homes of the world's life.

Moses himself had not higher conceptions or further revelations than Balaam. But the one died honoured and deeply lamented on Pisgah, while the other fell ignominiously by the sword, and is held up to opprobrium in all after times. Wherein lay the difference between the two? It consisted entirely in moral character. The one was a genius, with noble intentions and desires, and with a great creed; but destitute of character and of those rudiments of practical righteousness on which alone a great life can be built up. The other was as noble in life as he was devout in spirit and elevated in his teachings.

What a warning is here for us all. We, too, may know the truth, and preach to others the loftiest moral code, and act as the very mouthpieces of God; and yet our moral life may be destitute of pith and grit and power, a sapless, flaccid thing, without colour or robustness, meriting the awful sentence of Christ: "Whatsoever they bid you, these observe and do, but do not ye after their works, for they say and do not."

II. The Cause of Balaam's Failure.—He stands convicted before the tribunal of history of knowing right and doing wrong.

(1) He knew that God could not change his mind. "God is not a man that He should lie, neither the son of man that he should repent." And yet when the elders came a second time from Balak and the Sheikhs of Midian, to seek his aid, with urgency in their accents, and splendid gifts in their hands, he bade them wait another night to see if he could get permission to accompany them, and he divorced the permission which he extorted by his importunity from the express condition on which it hinged, that the men should come to summon him.

(2) He knew that it was useless to curse where God had blessed, or to expect that he or any one else could become the channel through which the Divine malediction could descend on Israel; nevertheless, he accompanied the messengers back over the weary waste of the desert, with the express purpose of finding some way of placing a solemn malediction on the chosen people.

(3) He knew that God was supreme, and could brook no rival; that He was of one mind, and could not be turned; and that rites and sacrifices were incapable of affecting his decisions or of altering his purposes; and yet he thrice bade Balak prepare seven altars, and present seven bullocks and seven rams. It was as if he would bribe God to consent to the eager desire that filled his breast to put the people whom He had blessed under a curse. As if He, in whom is no variableness, or shadow cast by turning, could be deflected by any considerations whatever from his chosen pathway. And how despicable the attempt to extract a curse by confining his view to the utmost part of the camp, as if to cajole or coax the Spirit of God!

(4) But the grossest inconsistency was the last. He professed himself unable to speak other words than God put into his mouth, or to go beyond the word of the Lord his God to do less or more, yet he did not scruple to recommend the atrocious villainy of robbing Israel of God's protection by making them obnoxious to Him. "Let the dark-eyed daughter of Moab mingle freely with the chosen people, and call them to the license of the dark rites of Chemosh; their God is a jealous God, and will not brook this transference of their allegiance. He will withdraw from them, and they will become your easy prey." "He taught Balak to cast a stumbling block before the Children of Israel, to eat things sacrificed to idols, and to commit fornication." How different the indignation of Moses, when, after the slaughter of Midian, he remonstrated with the people for having brought any Midianite women into the camp, lest they might seduce the people from their allegiance to the Most High!

The cause for these strange contrasts between creed and conduct, between belief and act, is unveiled in the solemn words of the Apostles Peter and Jude: "He loved the hire of wrong-doing." "They ran greedily after the error of Balaam for reward." His heart burnt with the slow fire of avarice. It was the thought of those munificent rewards which the princes of Midian offered that drove him to seek an alteration of the Divine decision. To win them, if it were possible, he left his home and came to Moab. Beneath their spell he went from height to height, standing at the altars, or going alone to some solitary peak. And in desperation he made one last clutch at them in his proposal to corrupt the morals of the people and sever their union with Jehovah.

It is an awful illustration of the power of one fatal passion. The noble stag is pulled to the ground by a pack of hounds, but for the ruin of man one sin alone is enough; with one it is impurity; with another pride; with another intemperance; with another avarice. You may know the truth, and admire and preach it; your moral intentions may be sublime and ennobling; you may be as a very lovely song of one that hath a pleasant voice, and can play well on an instrument; but if you are hiding in your heart some secret vice, some hidden lust, it will prey upon your vitals until it has eaten them out. Beware of paltering with any love which is outside the love of God; there can be only one result. If you do not kill it, it will kill you. It is useless to attempt to meet it by a deeper intellectual acquaintance with truth; this will only harden the heart still more where it is not accompanied by a ready obedience. Men sometimes try to condone their faults or appease their consciences by insisting on a high standard of morals, which they preach with elaborate care, and insist on for all others than themselves; but these are only digging a deeper pit in which they will be presently entombed.

Perchance teachers of Christian ethics and preachers of the Gospel may read these words, who are conscious of some hidden inconsistency lurking in the heart of their heart. Let such be warned by the terrible example of Balaam and of Judas. The dry rot will presently betray itself in an awful accident; the smouldering fire will break into a blaze; the fabric of hypocrisy will suddenly collapse with hideous revelations of the gangrene and leprosy within. But write this on the tablets of the soul, that the heart, and not the head, determines the true course of human life. There may be a brief conflict, but in the long run the heart will have its way. And what our love is set on will fix and determine our course, breaking down and sweeping away the feeble resistance of knowing better, as the angry lava overwhelms cities and turns gardens into deserts. What need there is for us to cry, "Search me and see if there be any wicked way in me. Create in me a clean heart, O God, and renew a right spirit within me."

III. Such Men are not Lost without Divine Remonstrance and Warning.—There are many tokens in the narrative of the Divine interpositions to withdraw Balaam from his purpose, keeping back his soul from the pit, and his life from perishing by the sword.

The most notable of these was the vision of the angel who stood in the way between the vineyards, a fence being on this side, and a fence on that side, so that there was no way to turn either to the right hand or to the left. Thus does the love of God often stand in our path to stay our onward progress; but we are self-willed and headstrong. We profess ourselves willing to go back, but are really bent on going forward. God is never in want of voices to protest against our madness, and He does not hesitate to use little children, dumb animals, the pleadings of friends, the slanders and misrepresentations of foes, but we are often obdurate and obtuse, deaf as the adder to the charmer's voice. Let us not be as the horse or mule, which have no understanding, and must be controlled by the bit. Be it ours to seek the sensitive heart and the anointed ear, that we may arrest our feet in time from the forbidden track.

In contrast to all this, how grand and strong and noble is Moses. No thought of himself or of self-aggrandisement seems to have ever crossed his mind. He was absorbed in the welfare of his people, though they repaid his care with gross ingratitude. He could call God to witness that he had not taken one ass from them or treated any with violence. He amassed no personal estate, and left no accumulated stores to his sons. It was enough for him that he had been the humble instrument in God's hands, through which untold blessing had come to his chosen.

This is the secret of a blessed life! If the servant of God looks right or left to the possible consequences which his action may have on himself, his family, his influence, or his prospects, he will inflict deadly injury on himself and the very objects he seeks to conserve. We cannot serve two masters. We must not consider results. We have no right to pick and choose and arrange our path. Our one single aim must be to do the will of God irrespective of all beside, and just in so far as we are single-hearted and sincere in this, there will open before us vistas of untold usefulness, whilst God will make Himself responsible for all those other matters that affect our well-being.

Oh, what a God is ours! He honours them that honour Him. He cannot fail those who absolutely trust in Him and do his will with a single heart. He will perfect that which concerns us because his mercy endures for ever, and He will not forsake the work of his own hands.

COLPORTAGE IN SPAIN.

With brother Nisbet I have just had another tour. Retracing old ground, we found the people had been warned against us and our books. At one town we again visited a Bible-reading couple. Slowly the light is breaking in, and their faces shone with delight as they heard the way of God more perfectly. How delightful is the work of opening up the Scriptures when the will is bowed to God. The priest in vain commanded him to burn the Bible in his forge before his neighbours.

At another place we spent a long evening with the road-mender of whom I have previously written. We found him and his wife full of joy and confidence in God. We were particularly struck by his oft and apt quotation of Scripture. His conversion came about through a man lending him a New Testament. As he failed to persuade its owner to part with it, he copied out by hand the whole of the Gospel of Luke. During one of my journeys with a colporteur we were snowed up in his village. His inspector bought a Bible, the priest condemned it, and he was going home to burn it when our brother met him and gladly purchased it. He needs our prayers, as he is suffering much persecution.

PRIVILEGE, POWER, AND PRACTICE.

NOTES OF AN ADDRESS AT THE HASTINGS CONVENTION.

By Rev. HENRY E. BROOKE.

I heard the other day, from one who has peculiar opportunities of knowing what is going on in the religious world, that there is at present a tendency amongst some who seek to promote holiness, to separate justification from sanctification, and in order to concentrate all their attention upon the latter, to treat the former as something which those who seek sanctification have done with, and which may, so to speak, be laid upon the shelf. My friend felt strongly—and I fully agree with him—that this is a danger which calls for an emphatic counter-protest.

I was glad, therefore, when, on arriving here, I was told that the various speakers at this Convention are not expected to devote the first day to Privilege, the next to Power, and the third to Practice, but that they may, and mostly have, taken all three together. I shall certainly follow this course, and indeed would make it the chief aim of this address to show that, according to the teaching of Scripture, Privilege, Power, and Practice cannot be separated. They are as necessarily conjoined as are the root, the stem, and the fruit of a tree; and those who would separate them are really as foolish as a gardener would be who, on the root being developed, and the stem making its appearance, should cut off the stem above the root and plant it by itself, as if the root was now of no more use, and as if the stem without it could be fruitful.

We have but to look at the Epistles of the New Testament to see how uniformly doctrine comes first and lays the foundation for the power which produces the practice. Faith grasps the privilege set forth in the doctrine. Faith, if it be genuine, works by love, and love is the link between privilege and practice.

When Professor Drummond wrote about Love being the greatest thing in the world—or as he should have said, as it is all that 1 Cor. xiii. says, the greatest of the three Christian graces, Faith, Hope, and Love—he fell into the mistake of setting up Love against Faith. The true teaching of 1 Cor. xiii. is that Love is the greatest but not the first of the Christian triad of graces. If Faith be not put first and foremost, there is no Love to follow. It takes Faith which grasps the finished work of Christ in the past, and Hope which anticipates his second coming, to produce Love, such love as Paul describes in 1 Cor. xiii.

The privilege which in the New Testament is first unfolded to faith is justification. Out of this springs sanctification, but not in such wise that in getting the second we lose the first. The connection is set forth in a passage seldom understood (Rom. viii. 1-4). The just award of "no condemnation to them that are in Christ Jesus," is pronounced because "God sending his own Son in the likeness of sinful flesh and for sin condemned sin in the flesh," that is, in the cross of Christ, "in order that the justification of the law (such is the rendering of the Vulgate, and so is the same word translated Rom. v. 16) might be fulfilled in us who walk not after the flesh, but after the Spirit."

Now, distinguish between a sentence pronounced and a sentence fulfilled. A sentence of condemnation to death is fulfilled, not when the judge pronounces the sentence, but when the man is put to death. God's sentence of justification is fulfilled, not merely by pronouncing the believer in Jesus to be righteous, but by his carrying out the sentence, and putting life into him. "When I saw thee in thy blood, I said unto thee, Live." Hence the remainder of Rom. viii. is taken up with the action of the Spirit of Life in the believer, the result of the sentence fulfilled or carried out, what Rom. v. 18 calls "justification of life."

If Christians put asunder what God hath thus joined together, justification and sanctification, no wonder that the result is disastrous. Sanctification, if not the result of a sentence of justification which has been fulfilled in us, will become a subtle form of self-righteousness. If the life in us be not traced to Christ as its source, and if He be not credited with the righteousness which produces the life, we have not yet learned that He "of God is made unto us righteousness." We are then in danger of being like the branch which, of itself, apart from the vine, can do nothing. To abide in Christ means not only to be grafted into the stem of the living vine, but to be conjoined to the root thereby so as to draw forth the sap from thence. "He that abideth in Me and I in him, the same bringeth forth much fruit. Herein is my Father glorified that ye bear much fruit; so shall ye be my disciples."

When believers at Colosse (ii. 6) are urged to "walk in Christ Jesus the Lord" it is added "rooted and built up in Him." Both of which metaphors point not to the stem of the tree of which they are branches, nor to the next row of stones of the building on which they may be laid, but to the root and the foundation. It is on these that their fruitfulness and stability depend. Hence faith rests not on the Church, or on ministers, or on sacraments, which are of use only as they send us from themselves to Him, but on Christ Himself and especially on Him considered as the root and as the foundation.

Now it was by his death that He became the source of fruitfulness to his people (John xii. 24). The corn of wheat having died "bringeth forth much fruit." It is on his death, therefore, and its blessed result, justification (see Acts xiii. 39), that our faith must continuously lay hold if we are to have any real and abiding experience of the fruitfulness of sanctification.

The 12th chapter of the Epistle to the Romans is not, as often supposed, the commencement of the practical part of that great treatise on Christian doctrine. Details of Christian practice no doubt commence there, but the great principles which produce practical results—the motive power, so to speak, of Christian sanctification is to be found in chapter vi., where Christ's death and resurrection are set forth in their substitutional aspect to be appropriated by faith. "He that is dead is justified from sin (Rom. vi. 7 &c.) In that He died He died unto sin once; but in that He liveth He liveth unto God. Likewise also reckon ye yourselves to be dead unto sin; but alive unto God in Jesus Christ our Lord. Let not sin therefore reign in your mortal body, &c., &c ...yield yourselves unto God as those that are alive from the dead, and your members as instruments of righteousness unto God." Sanctification, if divorced from justification, becomes only a very delusive and dangerously subtle form of self-righteousness.

Orphans at Scutari.

Dr Alexandrian's Orphanage at Scutari contains from twenty-eight to thirty girls, originally gathered in by Mrs. Alexandrian after the terrible fire at Scutari when so many children were left orphans and destitute. The work has prospered, but in consequence of the death of Sir William White, late English ambassador at the Porte, and the departure of Lady White from Constantinople, the Alexandrians have been placed in the greatest pecuniary need. Lady White was a warm and sympathising friend to the Orphanage, and with her departure the chief source of the Orphanage income ceased. It was derived chiefly from liberal gifts obtained by her for it.

The Alexandrians are now burdened with a debt of eighty pounds for rent and food for the orphans, and are wholly without means to meet the pressing demands of their creditors. If timely aid does not reach them, they will be forced to the sad alternative of having to turn out these poor children. Any help will be gratefully acknowledged, and forwarded without delay to Dr. Alexandrian, by Miss Haig, Woodside, Barcombe, Lewes.

YOUNG PEOPLE'S SOCIETY OF CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOUR.—The Second National Christian Endeavour Convention is to be held on Tuesday and Wednesday next, May 24 and 25, in Pepper-street Chapel, Chester, and promises to be a most interesting gathering. The programme announces that papers will be read, bearing on the principles, methods, aims and achievements of the movement, as well as its relation to the pastor, the Sunday-school, and mission work, while a special conference will be set apart for the discussion of the work of various committees of the Society. The public meeting to be held on Wednesday evening is to be presided over by Mr. F. F. Belsey, J.P., and addresses delivered by Revs. M. Stanley (Birkenhead), J. E. Newell (Samoa), and G. Howard James (Nottingham). Mr. Sankey will sing at the Convention.

Dr. Baedeker on the Stundists.

This beloved and honoured servant of Christ gives a simple, yet touching account of the poor persecuted Stundists and of the six months' tour he has just made amongst these scattered and feeble brothers and sisters in Jesus.

This journey was undertaken for the purpose of finding out and cheering famished and banished exiles. He had received a distressing letter, telling of a poor woman whose husband, father, brothers, and sons, had been taken from her and sent away—scattered to the four winds of heaven; each one being sent separately, hundreds of miles from any of the others. He then felt led to go after these and help in the Lord's name, because, however lonely and difficult the place of their exile, where others could go he could go also. The Lord has prospered him on the journey, and led him in safety by rough passages and amongst rough men; over high mountains and in deep ravines; through storms and snows and tremendous difficulties; and now he has returned to say, "The good hand of the Lord has been upon me."

Before starting he had asked prayer for three things, (1) That the door might be opened for the Gospel; and the doors have been widely opened, (2) Safety in journeys oft; and this has been answered so remarkably that even Tartar guides have exclaimed, "This is wonderful; we never knew such weather at this time of year. It is wonderful!" "No," Dr. Baedeker would reply, "it is not wonderful, for we are servants of leading to the astonished inquiry, "What kind of a King is He?" and opening the way for testimony. So the Doctor goes on to tell of wonderful deliverances on rocky heights, in precipitous defiles, wastes of snow and ice, and among men who regard murder not as a crime but as something to boast of. They could not kill him, as he was on the King's business, and in the King's keeping.

The third thing for which prayer had been desired was that the exiled and lonely Stundists might be traced and found; and this too had been answered wonderfully. For example, after passing through a terrible defile, and entering a little hamlet at the foot of a mountain, a man (one of the scattered family sought by Dr. Baedeker) came out of a hut saying, "There is danger; pass on," showing how closely even the exiles are watched; but a happy meeting was contrived later on. At another place far off, the waiter who served a cup of tea looked inquiringly at Dr. Baedeker, who felt led to say, "Do you know any of the —— family?" and he answered, "I am one of them." So in many places and in various ways God had led him to those he sought; and that in strange parts, in lonely huts, in volcanic caverns, in desolate wastes, and in busy towns—in the oil regions of Baku, and in the prisons of Siberia. He was enabled to cheer many of these lonely ones with words of comfort and hope, with the thought that others far off were praying for them, and with a little help—a few hundred roubles perhaps. Sorely do they need this, for great is their distress, being sent often to places where the Tartar can make a bare living, but the Russian cannot. He had asked some why they did not emigrate, and the answer had been, "We love our country. We have homes and would lose them. We have families scattered here and there, and if we go we must go without them."

Many instances, which sound strangely in English ears, are given of police espionage and of the constant watching and worrying. Meetings are absolutely forbidden. A man may join his daughter in singing a hymn, but if a neighbour only look in, there is a policeman at the door to see what is going on. If two men (Stundists) stop to exchange a greeting on the street, there is a policeman listening, or ready to say, "You had better pass on." Even a poor desolated woman, whose husband and father and brothers have been banished, will say, "Do not speak to me. I am watched; you will come under suspicion." The whole system produces a nervous, timid people. Nothing sustains these Stundists but the grace and love of God. They have but little truth, but they hold that little with a firm grasp and it strengthens them to bear much. Moreover, now, as ever, persecution propagates the faith, for wherever these exiles go fresh converts spring up.

Next, Dr. Baedeker describes his visit to the name by which he loved to think of the mountain on which rested the Ark. At the foot of it there is a village, the name of which means, "Where he first went." What can that mean, but that it is the place where Noah first went after leaving the Ark? Now in this village were Stundists, with whom Dr. Badeker had fellowship, while in Erivan he had the joy of uniting with some of these lonely ones round the table of the Lord. To the Baku oil region, many Stundists as well as famine-pressed peasants have wandered, hoping to secure work, and many have found it; and amongst these Dr. Baedeker found a warm welcome.

He is profoundly thankful for the relief he has been enabled, by the liberality of noble friends at home, to afford. One lady, who gave him a large sum for these Stundists, spoke of them as "Brothers and sisters in the Lord, with whom I am not worthy to stand on the same ground, seeing how they suffer and die for Him." Yes; feeble and persecuted as they are, they are members of one family with us, are purchased by the same blood, and rejoice in the same Father's love; and while we thank God for their faithfulness we must seek to help as we may.

THE COLWYN BAY CONVENTION.

I have just returned from spending four delightful and profitable days at this lovely watering-place, having enjoyed the exquisite beauties of nature and the spiritual privileges of the Convention.

More blessed meetings of the class I never attended, and my object in writing you is to point out certain things in this and similar gatherings which, I think, tend to edification. Conferences have become as distinct a feature of our spiritual life as church or prayer meeting, Bible-class or mission. They are the result of a craving in the heart of those who hunger and thirst after righteousness for deeper teaching, and more sympathetic fellowship than they can obtain in their special denomination. The Convention is a kind of safety valve, and is of infinite service to the organised church if it could only see it. It is also a counterpoise to the defects of a "one man ministry." The needs of the soul are varied by age, progress, special circumstances, &c., &c., and no one man can meet all these. At every point the Convention supplies that want, and thus a stop has been thereby put to wandering from sect to sect, or what was weakly called "coming out from all sects," which simply meant forming another one. Now hungry souls go to the Convention representing the nearest approach to their special beliefs, and, choosing there those speakers who seem best to reach them, come away with a real blessing, having got food on the strength of which they can go many days, even if the pastors under whose care they have placed themselves do not "feed them with food convenient for them." I am certain that this is right; but I do not remember seeing it clearly pointed out to the Christian Church. The pastorate is, however, becoming daily more alive to the importance of the Convention as a great Church auxiliary, for a much larger number, and a steadily increasing number, are to be found present, getting a blessing to their own souls and "gathering honey all the day" to be carried back to their own hive.

Conventions are a success; but some things are killed by success. The leading gatherings were becoming overgrown great spiritual fairs, with much of the quiet and rest and peace gone on account of crowding, bustle, want of comfortable hall accommodation, and merciless landladies! But the Master has watched over the movement, and provided overflows. I know many, like myself, who prefer these overflows. Colwyn Bay was one of them. It was so still, so full of peace, and if it is true that "the dew falls on the still night," it is also true that God speaks in the quiet when

> Not a sound disturbs the stillness,
> Not a form invades the scene,
> But the voice of the beloved
> And the person of the King.

The morning meetings were the most enjoyable of all to those who were not seeking enlightenment so much as fellowship. They were not in the programme. Mr. and Mrs. Crossley, the promoters of the Convention, conducted morning prayers at the Hall instead of at their own house. To their surprise many came. "The Spirit of Holiness" fell on the very first morning and abode with us to the last. After prayer the meeting was thrown open for testimony. The Lord opened the mouths of many hitherto silent, and messages from the inner presence-chamber came in an unbroken flow. The stiffness of a large gathering was not felt, and we are certain that all realised as they never had before that the "communion of the saints" was as much a reality as "the forgiveness of sin."

Of the meetings themselves we will not say much. The addresses were solemn, clear, and made one feel that the soul's good, and not personal display, was the one absorbing thought of the speaker. One thing that delighted me personally was that the man who is always combating objectors was absent. I try to fly from that man! The seekers are always many, and the objectors always few. I often think this "answering objectors" is like the priest who asked the ostler if he ever greased the horse's teeth—the idea had never occurred to the man till then. We were very much struck with one testimony, a woman's: "When I listened to their arguments I resisted it all and would have none of it; but when it was put sweetly to me I yielded at once, and it is impossible for me to tell you the blessing I received." Note, "when it was put sweetly to me"! There is the power, and that is the reason why women have been so much more blessed than others in the propaganda of scriptural holiness. They have the art of presenting the truth in a simple form and just as men approach this model are they powerful. The two addresses given by Rev. E. W. Moore, of Wimbledon, were masterpieces of this persuasive sweetness.

The testimony of a young fellow, a student from Oxford, was most interesting. After telling us of his spiritual history, and his desire for a higher, more victorious, and more equable inner life, he said: "I came here greatly prejudiced against 'holiness,' and resisted all I heard; but yesterday I was deeply impressed, and after the meeting sought my own room, to be alone with God. He lead me to the story of Zacchæus, and through that He spoke to me. I came here wanting to see Jesus, but I had mounted the tree of prejudice! The Lord, however, stopped in front of that tree, and bade me come down. I did so. Prejudice gone, I stood face to face with Him, and He revealed Himself to me as Jesus who had come to deliver his people from their sins. I then and there entered into an experience of full salvation, which no words of mine can express!"

The Convention was an unalloyed success. The spirit was beautiful, the speaking judicious, and the results most encouraging to those consecrated persons who called us together, to whom our gratitude is due for a real season of power and blessing. I hear people saying there are too many conventions now; there cannot be too many if they are like this one.

LEGAL DISABILITIES OF STUNDISTS.

A correspondent, writing from Moscow, sends a translation of an article in a Russian paper, laying bare the disabilities and hardships inflicted on Stundists and other dissenters, especially in regard to marriage.

The law appears to be that Protestant and Roman Catholic ministers, "if they perform a ceremony which by law is declared illegal, are condemned to the loss of their charge and to imprisonment"; and this has been interpreted by the Senate to mean that, notwithstanding the law granting religious liberty, those who fall away from orthodoxy, or leave the dominant Church, are to be regarded as in a criminal condition which can never be justified or condoned therefore the marriage of such cannot be legal and valid, unless performed by a priest of the orthodox Church. This, it will be seen, is a complete bar, inasmuch as such a priest will refuse to perform the ceremony of marriage between Stundists and other dissenters.

MR. STEPHEN BURROWES, of the Naples Sailors' Rest, recently visited Sicily. He writes:—"The population of this island is about 3½ millions. I was privileged to address many meetings at Catania and generous donations were given towards establishing a Sailors' Rest, which was opened at the beginning of the month. A caretaker has been appointed, and the Mission is placed under a local committee, with a Protestant pastor to superintend colportage work. There are eight thousand seamen (not including natives) coming to this port annually, and for seven long years no English service has been held here! Catania has one hundred and twenty thousand inhabitants, and no regular colporteur for the natives. The neighbouring port of Syracuse will have some plan of colportage for the seamen and natives. We have an addition to our working staff in Naples in an English colporteur."

REV. JOHN McNEILL IN SCOTLAND.

THE MISSION IN DUNDEE.

Throughout the past week Mr. McNeill has been drawing great crowds of Dundee business men at mid-day to hear his rousing, vivid presentations of Gospel truth in St. Andrew's Free Church, and immense congregations in the Steeple Church in the evenings. A correspondent of The Dundee Advertiser, in a graphic description of the meetings, says;—

Why do the people crowd to hear John McNeill? What is there about him which gives him his magnetic power to bring the merchant from the Exchange, the minister from his study, the student from his book, the smith from his anvil, the factory girl from her loom? This preacher has no special dower of external graces. He bears the stamp of being a plain working man. His frame shows it; his hands bear the sign-manual of the hammer. He is tall, but his limbs show the rigid and set form which hard work impresses on those who earn their bread in the sweat of their brow. His complexion is ruddy, and his face cannot be called handsome. In a crowd he would be mistaken for a stone-mason or a country blacksmith. He wears an easy-fitting jacket and a soft felt hat. Yet this is the man whom the throngs that surge in the crowded stairs and lobbies of the great Steeple Kirk have come to hear.

Crushing up the pulpit stairs John McNeill reaches the pulpit. Dundee is there; the great body of people are represented. It is an audience of the very kind to inspire a true orator—bright eyes, open, intelligent faces, a vast expectant throng. Amid the hush and silence after the singing of a sacred song the preacher begins by reading the narrative of Naaman. He tells this grand Old Testament Gospel story in his own inimitable way....This preacher's strength lies, first of all, in his manifest truthfulness. His voice is natural, earnest, passionate with conviction. The man believes what he is saying, and belief is catching. He speaks, too, with authority. Plain man as he is, he has a message from the King. He is an ambassador from the Court of Heaven, and he speaks with power, because he believes he is speaking the will and the message of God Himself. The man is utterly lost in his message. The preacher is as entirely forgotten as is the envelope which has enclosed an important dispatch from a King.

Again, the discourse has the prime essential quality of being interesting. There is a story in it—colour, action, life. It rivets the attention, and compels men of all conditions to hear it. The humour, too, which is the salt of a sermon, is irrepressible. Constantly it flashes and sparkles, and the preacher knows the power of a Scotch expression, and does not hesitate to use the arrow because it is winged with a common feather—if so be it will reach the farther and hit the mark.

Again, it is the Gospel he preaches. He does not conceal the desperate malady, but he comes with good news. There is true joy in his eyes. His whole form is filled with ecstasy when he tells the glad tidings of help, healing, deliverance. He seeks to draw men to him, not to repel them. There is sympathy, too, in his every tone of voice and gesture, and in his eager entreaty. He is a humane man, and he shows how humane, kind, sympathetic, and generous is his Master, the Great Physician.

He is, above all, impressed with the overwhelming importance of his message. He will hear of no delay, no difficulty, no to-morrow. To-day, now, immediately, the message must be told, and he holds the multitude with his longing, persuasive eye. Note well—he is not an actor, but he is an artist. He has studied, and by long practice mastered his own voice, and has chosen the phrase, the mode, the manner best suited to convey the truth he would send home to every heart.

Superficial hearers may imagine that he is deficient in culture and refinement. It is not so. Sacred things are not touched with a rude or too familiar hand. But he is too wise to sacrifice interest, power, and influence to a pretence of shallow culture. Whether he is a classical scholar or no others may judge; but he is an English scholar of no mean rank. He quotes Wordsworth and John Milton as if they were his constant companions. To the stately prose of John Milton he owes the sustained grandeur in which he displays his high commission to sinful men which he has received at the Throne of Grace. One can hear Shakespeare in every other sentence. Burns he quotes as he quotes the book of Proverbs; and the adroit manner in which he avoids entangling his argument in the toils of perplexity proves his manifest acquaintance with systematic theology. Above all, he has mastered the finest book in the English language—the English Bible.

MILDMAY MEDICAL MISSION.

Last year's operations in connection with the Mildmay Hospital and Medical Mission at Bethnal-green, E., have been recorded in a neat booklet that is well worthy of perusal. The hospital patients numbered 381, and the total number of new cases in the out-patient department 6181. The dispensary visits numbered several thousands, also the visits paid to the houses of the poor by the physician and deaconesses. The patients come chiefly from a limited district around the hospital, and are admitted free of charge.

Deaconesses and nurses are earnest Christian workers, who, while caring for the sick with loving sympathy and tenderness, strive to commend the Gospel to their acceptance. About nine-tenths of the patients have been entirely or partially restored to health, and a good many have given evidence that the Great Physician has dealt graciously with them, and brought them to a saving knowledge of Himself. Among the incidents given in the report are the following: "A young man, who remained in the ward about a month, was spoken to a few days after his admission. He acknowledged his lost condition spiritually, but did not feel that God could save him, as he was 'such a bad lot.' Luke xix. 10 was quoted: 'For the Son of Man is come to seek and to save that which was lost,' and in this, it was urged, there was hope for him, however far he had wandered. The thought of his past life as being too sinful for pardon kept him for a time from accepting the Saviour. One morning he repeated Job vi. 8, 'Oh, that I might have my request; and that God would grant me the thing that I long for!' A sister asked: 'What do you long for?' 'A pure heart.' 'God is waiting to give it to you; He longs to give it.' The following morning he quoted as his text, 'Blessed are the pure in heart,' and afterwards asked, 'Is it possible to have a pure heart and bad thoughts?' He said he had asked for a pure heart, and still the bad thoughts remained. He was gradually being led into the light, and one Sunday evening, after an earnest address in the ward on the words, 'Choose ye this day whom ye will serve,' he knelt in prayer with the sister, and apparently yielded himself up to the Saviour. One morning his text was, 'Preserve me, O God, for in Thee do I put my trust.' A great part of the day was spent over the Bible, and at night he said that God had answered his prayer. Since he left the hospital he has often come to the mission service, and his face speaks of joy and peace in believing.

"An elderly patient, after his return home, wrote: 'Our Lord and Saviour blessed the means for my restoration to health; I can sincerely say that it was a good thing for me that I was permitted to stay in the hospital for a season.'"

Young as well as old have benefited by the Mission. The new hospital in Austen-street, Bethnal-green, is now making good progress. About £2000 is needed to complete the building, besides the expense of furnishing. During the year there were no fewer than 650 admissions to the Barnet Convalescent Home. Among the adjuncts are institutes for men and lads, meetings for mothers and girls, and special work in various directions. The wants are many and continuous. Communications may be addressed to the treasurer, Colonel Morton, Conference Hall, Mildmay-park, N.

BORDESLEY MISSION, BIRMINGHAM.—This Mission in one of the darkest spots in the city is surrounded by a gambling, fighting, pigeon-flying, and heavily-drinking class, amongst whom it is carrying on most useful service. The "Slum Brigade" held its annual gathering and tea last week. One of the important operations is the work among the sick and suffering. Upwards of five hundred are annually assisted with medical aid, while two thousand or more have received temporal relief, and seventy extreme cases of sickness have been relieved. To maintain this good work, an increase of annual support is needed.—Communications should be addressed—J. Stead, Superintendent, 221, St. Andrews-road, Bordesley.

THE INSPECTION OF CONVENTS.

A WOMAN'S APPEAL TO MEN.

Accustomed for many years to residence in a Roman Catholic country, but detained in England for some months, I cannot but be struck by the inroads which Rome is continually making in our beloved country, and by the continuous increase of convents for the incarceration of women. During these months, however, I have again and again heard of the efforts being made by the Women's Protestant Union to prepare a petition with many signatures to present to Parliament to secure the inspection of convents. May God bless and prosper the noble efforts of these women of all classes, who, doubtless, are fully convinced of the terrible oppression of so many of their own sex by this conventual system—an oppression to which no men would submit.

But ought this question to be left wholly or even principally to women? We are the weaker sex, and wholly unrepresented in the government of our country. Those who oppose the inspection of convents are not women, but men, and men of influence and in power. How unequal then is the contest! Are there not English men—Protestants, Christians of all classes of society, including some of the representatives of the people in Parliament—who would head this army of women, and plead the cause of those who are wholly impotent even to speak a word for themselves?

We do well to sympathise with the persecuted Jew and Stundist; to use our influence in ameliorating, if possible, the terrible condition of the prisoner in countries under bad and tyrannical rule; not to grow weary in the battle against legalised vice; we do well also to expose the evils of the opium traffic, and seek its suppression: we should do better if the whole Church of God in these isles would join in this righteous cause. But do we well to give our Government any rest until there is a check put to the terrible slavery of body and soul (unprecedented in any other British institution) into which thousands of young women—fellow-subjects in England and her possessions—are drawn by deceiving misrepresentations, and without the shadow of hope of escape, redress, or protection from our Government, or even from their own relatives?

Little do some of our English gentlemen think as they pass, perhaps daily, one or other of these convents on their way from their country residences to the City, what iniquity, oppression, and suffering exist within the walls of most, if not all, those places of confinement. What would they think if one of their own daughters were among them? Inspection would not free the souls of the poor nuns from the spiritual bondage in which they are kept—which, in itself, is bad enough—but it would, doubtless, ameliorate their physical suffering, lessen the iniquity—which could not be perpetrated but in secret—and permit the escape (for the inspection must have that for one of its objects) from thraldom of any who, undeceived, have allowed their own conscience (supposed to be dead in the nun) to reassert its rule, or whose desperation would face even the threats of eternal damnation should they revoke their vows.

It is said that a high dignitary of the Church of Rome asserted that to insist on the inspection of convents was virtually to abolish them. If such be the case, could there be a stronger argument than that for the prompt, thorough, and frequent inspection of these prisons—in which all the inmates should be seen, and immediate liberty and protection given to any who desired it?

Once more, let me appeal to English men—fathers, brothers, Protestants, Christians—to unite in their untiring efforts to bring this about.

C. B. F.

PECKHAM, S.E.—The Mission in the Lower Park-road sends out a modest little annual statement of the work of the past year, showing blessing in the hall and in the open air. Letters are given from some who have received blessing. The secretary is Mr. W. Mills, 11, St. John's-road, Brixton.

EAST-END LODGING HOUSES.—The annual meeting of Lodging House workers connected with the London City Mission was held on Saturday week at the Hebrew Conference Hall, Old Montague-street, E., Mr. Noel Buxton presiding. Mr. Gilchrist, Jr. (sec.), read the report, stating that ten services were held every Sunday in Registered Lodging-houses, besides services for lodging-house children and adults at the hall. Free breakfasts were given every alternate Sunday. Eighty young women had been rescued. Several most interesting letters were read from those who had been blessed by this Mission. Col. Morton then addressed the meeting.

Among the Independents.

To go in and out among the Independents during last week was like going into two climates—one warm, sunny, stimulating; the other cold, stormy, depressing. However it has come to pass, there is no denying the existence among them of two very different classes of men, or of men under two very different phases of character and life.

To take the discouraging side of things first. The election of a secretary to the Congregational Union in place of the late Dr. Hannay has caused eighteen months of unrest—not to say struggle and sharp contention—owing, in part, to the influence of one or two brethren who claim to be leaders. No less than three ministers have declined the post, which, through the exceptional ability and influence of Dr. Hannay, has perhaps a fictitious value attached to it. A fourth has been found who has been willing to accept it, but his acceptance was, at the last moment, sought to be barred by a charge of plagiarism. The angry feeling of the Union on its first meeting was undoubtedly caused by the manner and time at which the charge was made, and the vote given was rather a resentment of the charge than an expression of opinion on the man who was elected by an almost unanimous vote. That Mr. Woods has the love and confidence of the brethren who know him best is undoubted, and that they will continue to believe in him until something of a graver nature can be brought against him is certain. One cannot but regret that, whatever may have been the cause of the charge of plagiarism being made in a daily secular paper, it should have been carried to such a court of appeal. Surely some other way might have been found of dealing with it—a meeting of the committee of the Union itself; a letter to each member of the committee; a reference to some men of wisdom and character—anything rather than go before this indiscriminating and ignorant court of appeal—the public. This much in the interests of that purity and sweetness of feeling which was so greatly disturbed. Jealousy for the common faith and honour of Christianity constrain one to say so much. Yet this unhappy incident apart, the Union had good work to do, and did it well. Its Chairman, Dr. Herber Evans, of Carnarvon, had stirring and helpful words to speak, and gave the meetings an upward lift. He was warmly supported when he said—

> We need to quicken, to intensify our faith in the supernatural. Every new earth in the past has come by the way of heaven, and the new earth we are working for, and longing for, must come by the same way. We are often told that churches are all failures, because more than half the people are outside of them. Must it always be so? Is there not a source of reserve power at our command, if we have the large faith-talent to draw from it? Does not this faith possess infinite possibilities of growth, and consequently incalculable increase of power? "Power belongeth to God," power sufficient for us to accomplish all He commands. Nothing but a vigorous spiritual life, coming from an ever-living Christ, will enable our churches to contend effectually with the errors of the day, and will enable us to carry on a successful aggression upon the kingdom of darkness around us. Unbelief, superstition, sacerdotalism, are full of a kind of life, and there must be a stronger life to contend with them. We must oppose the living falsehoods of the age with living truth, truth alive in us because we are alive to God.

Great attention is naturally given by the Independents to the condition of religion in the villages, because they have in times past been the stronghold of Nonconformist faith and life, and have given to the churches in the towns and to missions abroad some of the ablest and most devoted workers. The difficulties of Christian life in the villages, and how to meet them, formed the subject of several papers, but it may be doubted whether much fresh light was given.

The Colonies and Ireland also had their share of time and attention, as they always have. At present they are not very promising spheres of labour; yet the brethren who have laboured in Ireland could speak a word on the growth of High Churchism in England and its relation to Roman Catholicism which it would be well for English Protestants to hear. In the Colonies, too, although the progress is not commensurate with the need, good work has been done.

The great feature of the week were the meetings of the London Missionary Society. The prayer-meeting, with which they opened, was perhaps the least useful of them all, as for twenty minutes given to prayer forty were given to speaking. More prayer and less speaking ought rather to be the word of reform for most prayer-meetings. But the mission cause had the flame of holy fire in it. The meeting for women was crowded, and was full of enthusiasm; the annual sermon was listened to by the largest congregation we have seen for many years; the conversazione—a new feature—was packed; and the annual meeting was attended by a larger audience than any we remember to have seen. It was a meeting of thanksgiving, preceded by a real prayer-meeting.

The Society had a special meeting for young men, as had also the Congregational Union, and on Saturday afternoon Exeter Hall was crowded with children to hear addresses from missionaries only. The scene was one never to be forgotten: the interested children, the missionaries—men and women—many of them in native costume, the story of Christ's triumph in many lands, the sympathetic response of the young hearts, the singing in foreign languages of dear old tunes, the manifest delight of the missionaries in their work, the earnest tone of every short address, the sight of a Samoan Christian and the sound of his voice—all this, and more, combined to impress both the imagination and the heart. Something of the sweetness and uniting power of the love of God was certainly felt.

Perhaps next week we may be permitted to refer to two useful and suggestive papers on "Money and Amusement," which were read at one of the sessions of the Congregational Union. Everything seemed to show that the spiritual life of the Independent Churches is receiving a fresh baptism of life and power from on high.

DR. BARNARDO'S HOMES.

Our readers have become so accustomed to hearing that so many thousand children are in Dr. Barnardo's Homes, and require each day maintenance and support, that it is probably difficult for them to realise what the care of nearly 4500 children means. Yet this is the number at this moment dependent upon the Institutions. We regret to learn, therefore, that during the past week or two there has been an unaccountable—almost alarming—shrinkage in the funds. No doubt the fine weather has much to do with it, but little children must be fed in summer as well as winter, and the work must be evenly maintained throughout the four seasons of the year.

Dr. Barnardo has recently had an experience of great trial and anxiety, owing to this sudden diminution of receipts, and since he and his colleagues appear to have cast themselves very sincerely upon the Lord for deliverance and help, we should like to revive in our readers' minds some recollections of the needs of that good work, which was originally begun twenty-six years ago, through the insertion in The Revival of a short paper written by himself. We trust our readers will co-operate in a work which has for its object first and chiefly the bringing of the children to Christ, and then their education and training in useful and industrial ways, and will strengthen our friend's hands by liberal and loving gifts.

MR. SCROGGIE AT NEWCASTLE.

Mr. J. M. Scroggie has conducted a very acceptable unsectarian mission for ten days in the Central Hall, Newcastle-on-Tyne. The attendance and interest in the meetings steadily increased, and there was universal regret when the meetings were concluded. The sorrow at Mr. Scroggie's departure is somewhat mitigated by the prospect of a return visit in the autumn. Mr. Scroggie's sharp blows at hollowness in Christ's service, and his enthusiasm for his Lord and Master, made deep impressions on the audience. Night after night many remained to be spoken to personally.

The address on "Remember Lot's Wife" was thrilling. The withering blight of worldliness on that soul and family was used as a solemn warning against Christian people pitching their tent towards Sodom for the sake of society for their children.

TWENTY-SEVEN MISSIONARIES, in connection with the New York Training College and Missionary Alliance, under the care of Rev. A. B. Simpson, sailed from Liverpool for the Congo on May 11. During the preceding Lord's Day members of the party spoke in the various mission-halls in Liverpool, and on the day before leaving they attended farewell meetings at Shalom House, 134, Upper Parliament-street. As they told how they had been called and accepted of God, many hearts were stirred, and new volunteers promised to go forth as the Lord might need them.

BELGIAN MISSIONARY CHURCH.

We have most encouraging news to give of the work of evangelisation carried on by the Belgian Missionary Christian Church. For the last four years about five hundred members have been annually added to our churches. Ten years ago we had thirty chapels and halls, now we have forty-five; then thirty-four Sunday-schools, now fifty-eight. Our expenditure then amounted to one hundred and twenty-eight thousand francs, it has now risen to one hundred and fifty-one thousand francs. We then had fifteen pastors, and now our twenty-five pastors are insufficient for the work. If means allowed us to provide a larger number of pastors, several of the out-stations would become churches.

Fifty years ago, in the whole Charleroi district there were but two or three Protestants to be found, and these were only Christians in name. Now we have three churches, with numerous annexes, and a total of two thousand adherents. One of these, that of Jumet, has a chapel that is falling into ruins. The members of the church have subscribed eleven thousand francs, but to build a new chapel about thirty thousand francs more would be required. Courcelles is enlarging, at its own expense and with a few donations, its chapel, which has become far too small. The work has extended very considerably at Mons and in the neighbourhood, where we have been at work for only a few years. At Jemappes a public-house keeper, having been converted, has transformed his public-house into a place of worship.

In Brussels we have two churches—one French, the other Flemish. The work of evangelisation is increasing, and has made it necessary to hire two new halls. The evangelisation of Belgium is a duty which we more and more feel incumbent on us. The people are ignorant of the Word of God and the priest opposed to the Bible. But it is Roman Catholics who, by what they themselves say, impress upon us the obligation to preach the Gospel to them. Thus a man of mature age, recently converted, never tires of saying, "God will never forgive the Romish Church for having kept the Gospel from us." Notwithstanding the liberality of our churches, and of our friends abroad, we concluded last year with a deficit of twenty thousand francs, and we fear that this year's account (to close on June 30) will show a fresh deficit of a like amount.

REV. G. C. GRUBB IN NEW ZEALAND.

The Lord of the harvest has sent this faithful servant and his helpers into our corner of the vineyard. A six days' mission commencing on March 10 was held in the Garrison Hall. The morning prayer-meetings at 7.30 were well attended, and much enjoyed by those who gathered for the early half-hour with God. The mid-day meetings for business men were also well attended, many testifying to blessing received.

Mr. Grubb's afternoon Bible expositions were very largely attended by Christians of all denominations. There are hundreds who give thanks for help and increased light received.

Mr. Millard's meetings for children will not readily be forgotten. Old and young attended. The children were charmed with him, and many were led to give their hearts to Jesus.

Mr. Grubb's mission services in the evening were from the first largely attended, and as the mission went on the interest deepened.

The last three nights the attendance could not have been less than 3,000. The last of these was a thanksgiving service. A large number went the next morning to the train to wish God-speed to these servants of the Lord.

When the party left for Oamaru, one of their number was detained through illness. A brother remained behind to care for him. It was the Lord's way of gathering up the fragments. Many who had been made anxious during the mission went to him for help.

HEBREW CHRISTIAN WORK IN NEW YORK.—Sunday, April 10, was a high day at the Hebrew-Christian Church, 17, St. Mark's-place, New York. For the first time, in this the seventh year of assembling in this building, it was free from debt. The presence of the Rev. Mr. Gablien, a German minister, who will henceforth assist Rev. Jacob Freshman in this work, gave an additional interest to the meetings of thanksgiving.

The Opium Iniquity.

AN ADDRESS BY MR. T. A. DENNY.

The more I consider this question, the more indefensible the position of the Anglo-Indian Government seems to be; and yet, astonishing as it may appear in the face of the evidence, there are those who take the other side, and persuade themselves, and would persuade others, that opium in moderation (who can guarantee moderation?) is good, that at the worst it is no worse than alcohol, and that being a fiscal necessity they are content with things as they are.

The Government of India is a costly Government. The masses of the people are poor, and cannot bear heavier taxation. The Services—army and civil—are, perhaps, the best paid in the world. These are naturally against any diminution of revenue. The five millions from opium cannot be done without nor raised otherwise, say they. It is thus a money question. Money versus morals, righteousness, life. It seems possible to become reconciled to almost anything that men are used to, and have grown up under.

It is not long since life was of very little account in England; a man was hung for sheep-stealing or for forgery. Things are altered. We could not possibly begin nowadays to subsist as to our revenue upon a poisonous drug. What would be thought to-day of any Chancellor of the Exchequor who would propose to supplement his income by making the production of, say, arsenic or strychnine, a Government monopoly, and pushing the sale of them with all his might? How strange that such a fiscal device should ever have been originated! What a wonderful invention! Of course, if the Government were to begin de novo, it would be quite impossible to inaugurate such a system of finance in the fierce light of public opinion to-day.

We have drifted into this state of things. The men of to-day are not altogether to blame; no more than were the slaveholders of the Southern States; they found it so. But now that we of this generation, having our eyes opened, see what we are doing through our rulers, and feeling deeply our responsibility, from which we are burning to relieve ourselves, seeing that revenue from opium means ruin, degradation, even death, to millions of our fellow subjects, and the deterioration of mankind, determine to do what in us lies to disinvolve ourselves, and free our country from so heinous a crime.

Of course there would not be the shadow of a shade of reason in a Government being monopolists in the manufacture and sale of a poisonous drug, but for the profit of it. It is for the profit of it that immoral tradesmen adulterate beer, water their milk, and sand their sugar. It is for the profit of it that burglars break into houses, and thieves pick your pocket of your money or your watch. It is for the profit of it that the criminal classes in general are the enemies of law and order. The plea is that they cannot afford to be honest and to do that which is right. Now, the delinquencies of all these together are but as a feather-weight in comparison with the effect of the operations of a great power—the Anglo-Indian Government—in growing and manufacturing and pushing the sale of a deadly drug, for the purpose of profit, which is devitalising the people, causing physical and moral decrepitude and sapping the foundations of the Empire.

Perhaps the greatest wrong ever done to one nation by another was done by England to China when by two wars we forced opium upon the Chinese at the cannon's mouth. We, a highly civilised Christian people; they, we are pleased to call them, heathen Chinese. We have the best reason for believing that China would have saved her people from the deadly scourge of opium but for England, and now China will supply herself. India will in time lose the trade. England has lost her honour, and commerce between the countries has suffered. So that our policy has been a blunder, and, taking it upon the lowest lines, it does not pay!

China sent us tea, we sent her opium. Now, the shrinkage of trade in opium with China has to be compensated by forcing it in India. The wrong is twofold. We have sown the wind, we may expect to reap the whirlwind. India can't thrive and prosper by lowering the manhood of masses of her people. They are already so poor that multitudes barely subsist. Opium is dear; poor men can only use it at the cost of starvation of themselves and their families; and the habit once begun is fatal.

It is, perhaps, not for this meeting to propose a substitute or a remedy, though we believe the remedy is in India herself, whose revenues have grown from twenty-two million Rx.* in 1842 to eighty-one millions in 1888; in economy in Government, in substituting other products for the poppy, in stimulating industry, in greater sympathy with the people by the governing classes, in helping them to help themselves, and in setting them a higher moral example. While it is but a short-sighted and suicidal policy, apart from the wickedness of it, to continue to derive a revenue from the gradual but certain destruction of the manhood and life of the people.

It goes without saying that missionaries, to a man, are foes of opium, and that Christian effort on behalf of the natives is paralysed and becomes almost a farce by a people identified with a traffic which is a practical denial of the faith which they teach. Finally, the people of Great Britain hold the key of the position: their responsibility is great. They have the power; let them assert it. Let us free ourselves from complicity with this gigantic crime, and demand, with one voice, that, cost what it may, we will do the thing that is honest and right and good.

God reigns. He is supreme. He cannot be left out of the account. Upon his two all-comprehensive commandments hang all the Law and the Prophets. The opium trade violates both, and is condemned by every line of the teaching of Jesus Christ our Lord and Saviour.

HOME TEACHING FOR THE BLIND.

On Monday afternoon the annual meeting of this Society took place in Exeter (Lower) Hall, Viscount Midleton presiding. The report stated that the number of blind in and around London who had been visited during the year was 2346, and the number of readers in Moon's type, to whom books had been lent, was 1588. There had been 310 new cases taught in the year, 6772 books were in use, and 53432 visits were paid to the homes of the blind. The teachers were required to ascertain how many blind persons lived in their districts, and then, so far as was possible, to carry out the following instructions—(1) To visit the blind at their own homes and teach gratuitously all who are able and willing to learn to read in Moon's embossed type. (2) To act as colporteur, to lend and exchange the books of the Bible, and instruct the blind in its meaning, and also to lend other useful literary books in Moon's type. (3) To act as Scripture reader to those who, from advanced age or infirmity, are unable to learn to read by the touch of the fingers.

In his opening address the Chairman pointed out that the object of the Society was to help persons to help themselves. Addresses warmly supporting the claims of the Society were delivered by Rev. Albert Ormsby and Mr. R. C. Morgan.

Blind in Mentone.

Dear Sir,—A work has been begun at Mentone for teaching and evangelising the blind there and in the surrounding villages. A young Frenchman—himself blind—is acting as a home teacher, and has undertaken to visit each blind person twice a week and teach them to read in the Braille or Moon type, and the younger ones to write. Books and writing materials have to be provided, and a guide for Monsieur Simon, as well as his small monthly salary. I am anxious to get as many annual subscriptions as possible, so as to extend the work to other villages.

Monsieur Simon was educated at the Institution des Jeunes Aveugles in Paris, and, till within the last six years, was a Freethinker. After his conversion (through the instrumentality of the McAll Medical Mission) he gave up gaining his livelihood by playing the piano for balls, &c., and was consequently cast off altogether by his family. He has since been taken care of by a late worker in the Mission, and earns what he can by teaching music, &c. He has been accustomed to teaching the blind in Paris, and is very anxious to bring all he can to the knowledge of Christ.

The French pasteur at Mentone, Monsieur De la Pierre, has kindly undertaken to act as co-treasurer with me, and he or I will be very pleased to give any further information to those interested in the blind. I believe there are many who spend the winter in Mentone who would be glad to help in this effort.—Yours truly, (Miss) G. Beaven.

MR. EVANS HURNDALL'S WORK.

"Another Year," is the title of Rev. W. Evans Hurndall's latest record of work in East London. The pages tell of much poverty and distress relieved by funds supplied by the benevolent, and of Gospel work patiently carried on with fruition in the hearts and lives of the people. We read:—"I remember no year so full of ailment to those whom we incessantly visit. Our joy has been to send into these homes of suffering, sorrow, and penury, godly men and women, with the love of God and the love of man in their hearts, and with material comforts in their hands. We have had the pre-eminent gladness of much spiritual prosperity during the year. God's work in the hearts and lives of many has filled us with delight, and indeed with astonishment. Amongst others, we have seen horny-handed working-men give up drunkenness, blasphemy, and godlessness generally, become attendants at God's house, members of the Church of Christ, good husbands, kind fathers.

"More and more convinced are we that what is needed is for the people themselves to be changed. We offer no material inducement to any to make a religious profession, nor do we labour to aggrandise a sect or denomination. For temporary relief we admit only one claim, that of deserving poverty. We encourage people to go to either church, chapel, or mission-hall, just as they may feel led by God. But when the heart gets right with God what a difference it makes in the home! Put some people in a palace and they will turn it into a pigsty. Put some people in a pigsty and they will turn it into a palace. We intend in the future, God helping us, to lay ourselves out more than ever for the change in the people."

Speaking of his missionaries, Mr. Hurndall says: "These do the foundation work. They persistently visit from house to house, and when practicable from room to room, on their appointed districts. They get thoroughly to know the poor. The missionaries have splendid opportunities of giving good counsel, cheering the sick and the dying, and bringing the sunshine of true sympathy and love into dark homes. Their visits are, as a rule, much prized. Occasionally they have rebuffs. Sometimes rough treatment. But they hold on, though the stress of the work, as may be imagined, is often very severe. The sight of misery and suffering day by day is most trying; especially so when our finances do not admit of such full help as cases demand. The missionaries have paid 50,453 visits during the year; of these 22,745 were conversational visits of some length, the remainder being calls, when there might be opportunity only for a friendly word."

Besides the missionaries there are more than one hundred voluntary visitors, who give an hour or two each week to calling at the homes of the poor, circulating good literature, &c. The number of day attendances at the Crèche was seven thousand in the course of the year. The Connaught Kitchen, for the supply of cheap, wholesome food at very low rates, has paid its way and proved very useful. Men are engaged to take supplies round poor neighbourhoods. Emigration has been assisted, and the naked have been clad.

Account is given of various Gospel services, in which Mr. Hurndall has the assistance of many friends. In conclusion he writes: "We are seeking to benefit in body and soul the multitude around us. The work has great joys. It has also great anxieties and sorrows. The strain of it is severe, but we feel that it is the Lord's work, and so we go on." Mr. Hurndall's address is 16, Cottage-grove, Bow, E.

London Temperance Hospital.

The Duchess of Westminster formally opened on Wednesday last week the "Grosvenor" children's ward, which has just been added, at a cost of £1500, to the London Temperance Hospital, Hampstead-road, N.W. The Duke of Westminster, who supplemented the few graceful words spoken by her ladyship with a brief address, said he desired to congratulate those present on the progress of the country in temperance principles since they had met there some years ago. Although there had been no restrictive legislation, public opinion was in favour of diminishing the number of public-houses, and of shutting those places altogether on Sundays throughout the length and breadth of the land.

As soon as the debt contracted for the new ward is paid off, the board of management of this institution will take immediate steps for the erection of a temperance convalescent home—a greatly-needed boon

For the Young.

AMONG THE MONGOLS.

For the benefit and instruction of our young readers we again make a quotation from the Life of the late James Gilmour, missionary in Mongolia, published by the Religious Tract Society. In one of his letters he gives the following curious information as to the superstitious notions of the people:—

On one occasion I was living some weeks in a Mongol's tent. It was late in the year. Lights were put out soon after dark. The nights were long in reality, and, in such unsatisfactory surroundings as the discomforts of a poor tent and doubtful companions, the nights seemed longer than they were. At sunrise I was only too glad to escape from smoke and everything else to the retirement of the crest of a low ridge of hills near the tent. This—perhaps the most natural thing in the world for a foreigner—was utterly inexplicable to the Mongols. The idea that any man should get out of his bed at sunrise and climb a hill for nothing! He must be up to mischief. He must be secretly taking away the luck of the land! This went on for some time, the Mongols all alive with suspicion, and the unsuspecting foreigner retiring regularly morning after morning, till at length a drunken man blurted out the whole thing, and openly stated the conviction that the inhabitants had arrived at—namely, that this extraordinary morning walk of the foreigner on the hill-crest boded no good to the country. To remain among the people I had to give up my morning retirement.

The Mongols are very suspicious of seeing a foreigner writing. What can he be up to? they say among themselves. Is he taking notes of the capabilities of the country? Is he marking out a road map, so that he can return guiding an army? Is he, as a wizard, carrying off the good luck of the country in his note-book? These, and a great many others, are the questions that they ask among themselves and put to the foreigner when they see him writing; and if he desires to conciliate the good-will of the people, and to win their confidence, the missionary must abstain from walking and writing while he is among them.

On another point, too, a missionary must be careful. He must not go about shooting. Killing beasts or birds the Mongols regard as peculiarly sinful, and any one who wished to teach them religious truth would make the attempt under great disadvantages if he carried and used a gun. This, however, is a prejudice that it is not so difficult to refrain from offending....

The diseases presented for treatment are legion, but the most common cases are skin diseases and diseases of the eye and teeth. Perhaps rheumatism is the disease of Mongolia; but the manner of life and customs of the Mongols are such that it is useless to attempt to cure it. Cure it to-day, it is contracted again to-morrow. . . .

The question, "How did you get this disease?" often elicits some curiously superstitious replies. One man lays the blame on the stars and constellations. Another confesses that when he was a lad he was mischievous, and dug holes in the ground or cut shrubs on the hill; and it is not difficult to see how he regards disease as a punishment for digging, since by digging worms are killed; but what cutting wood on a hill can have to do with sin it is harder to see, except it be regarded as stealing the possessions of the spiritual lord of the locality. In consulting a doctor, too, a Mongol seems to lay a deal of stress on the belief that it is his fate to be cured by the medical man in question, and, if he finds relief, often says that his meeting this particular doctor and being cured is the result of prayer made at some previous time.

In Mongolia a foreigner is often asked to perform absurd, laughable, or impossible cures. One man wants to be made clever, another to be made fat; another to be cured of insanity, another of tobacco, another of whisky, another of hunger, another of tea; another wants to be made strong, so as to conquer in gymnastic exercises; most men want medicine to make their beards grow; while almost every man, woman, and child wants to have his or her skin made as white as that of the foreigner.

When a Mongol is convinced that his case is hopeless he takes it very calmly, and bows to his fate, whether it be death or chronic disease; and Mongol doctors, and Mongol patients too, after a succession of failures, regard the affliction as a thing fated, to be unable to overcome which implies no lack of medical ability on the doctor's part.

The Marylebone Medical Mission.

Dr. Chambers gives in his new report a sad account of the wretched poverty and misery prevailing in the homes of the poor among whom he and his helpers labour. Moreover, he adds:—"The standing problem is really their complete indifference to religion. They appear to have reached the conclusion that it does not concern them, that it is something for the comfortable and well-to-do, but not for the struggling poor. Not for them, according to their thinking, do the church bells ring and the church doors swing.

"We emphasize this point because it is just here that Medical Missions have proved their peculiar power among heathen and Mohammedans abroad, and among the heathen at home. Coming in the hour of sickness and sorrow the Medical Missionary finds an instant welcome, and where he comes he brings the Gospel Message with him, telling it out in plain terms as a message of mercy for them. Thus an entrance is gained for words of warning and entreaty, which otherwise, humanly speaking, must have failed to reach them. Moreover, the kindness shown in meeting their physical needs and treating their bodily ailments wins, not merely a hearing, but a respectful attentive hearing.

"Amongst such the Marylebone Medical Mission has laboured constantly during the past year. The number of patients has been larger than ever; indeed, the whole work has been growing and extending. The dispensary has been open to the sick poor three times a week, each Monday, Wednesday, and Friday; and none are refused who come in need of medical aid. The patients, men and women and children, come in in large numbers, and, ere the doctor sees them professionally, a brief, bright Gospel service is held, when the way of salvation is put before them as simply and clearly as possible. Besides those who come to the Mission Dispensary there are many too ill to come, and these are visited by the Medical Superintendent at their own homes. Long hours are thus spent, going from house to house and from room to room, amidst the most depressing scenes of poverty and neglect, for many of them are in a deplorably wretched condition."

From the many cases of interest we select one:—The doctor was called to a woman whom he found lying in a small back room, with no fire, very little covering on the bed, and no food in the house. She was very ill indeed, and lay gasping for breath. On examination, she was found to be suffering from bronchitis. Medicine was prescribed and supplied, but in such a case coal and nourishment were also given, while a deaconess nurse was sent round at once to apply poultices and lend a blanket to afford some warmth. By-and-by she recovered and returned to her work. Her gratitude for what was done to her was great, and she who had been, to use her own phrase, "a careless, godless, irreligious woman," began to attend the meetings, and has continued to do so regularly; while those who know her best testify to a great change in her manner of life.

The Sunday and week-day services have been largely attended, as also the Bible-class. The report pleads for help, not only for the Medical Mission work, but also for the Relief Fund, sorely needed by the poor in times of sickness and destitution. Communications should be made to Dr. Robert Chambers, 12, Bell-street, Lisson-grove, N.W.

THE PROPHETIC CONFERENCE, held annually at the Conference Hall, Clapham-road, S.W., is fixed for June 15-17. The subjects announced embrace "Some Signs of the Times," "Attacks on the Bible," "The Church's Duty to the Jew, the Moslem and the Heathen," &c. Among the expected speakers are Canon Fausset, Revs. J. G. Tanner, W. R. Mowll, C. H. Sturdy, G. Ensor, and H. G. Thwaites; Pastors W. Fuller Gooch, and G. D. Hooper, General Sir R. Phayre, Dr. R. Anderson and others.

A MISSIONARY BOAT IN PARIS.

The boat so much desired has begun its mission work. On March 6 it was alongside the Quai des Tuileries, Paris, and meetings were held daily on board while the fittings were being prepared, and all inside ready for the work. On April 30 she was towed up the stream to Charenton, and thence to the old town of Meaux on the Marne. Formerly one of the strongholds of Protestantism, Meaux is better known as the home of Bossuet, whose destructive power was so sorely felt by the churches of the Reform.

It was M. Réveillaud's suggestion that the campaign should commence in this centre. He accordingly joined the boat, which is in charge of Captain and Mrs. Pim, of Valence. On Wednesday, May 4, the work began, and most encouraging has been the commencement. On the first day the boat was besieged, and the difficulty was to prevent over-crowding. On Sunday week six meetings were held—four for adults, and two for children—and M. de Rougemont had a trip down to M. Réveillaud's help. The audiences are most attentive, and listen to the earnest words of their fellow countrymen with deep interest. The first evening, before M. Réveillaud had begun his subject, the head of the freethinking section of the town was present. He began to interrupt by remarking that all the speaker was saying was idle talk. He was politely asked to leave if he could not desist from interrupting. He exclaimed, "All this will not last any time." "But it will last!" cried out a hearty voice from the front. "If I leave, the whole audience will follow me," he said. However, he had to leave, and, much to his chagrin, walked out absolutely alone.

The vessel will visit all the accessible places on the Marne when she leaves Meaux. Will your readers pray much for this work and the workers that the seed sown may be abundantly blessed. The boat is paid for, but we need help for the working expenses, which are of necessity great.

CHRIST VICTOR.

Oh, Christ, He will be victor,
Be victor in the end,
Though Hell its might opposeth,
And Earth its arm doth lend;
Though good it groweth slowly,
And skies above us lower,
And oft the tide of battle
Sways backward for an hour.

With steadfast march advancing,
Each promise in the past
Hath reached its goal of triumph
In fittest time at last;
And homeward to fulfilment
Each promise now doth tend,
And Christ, He will be victor,
Be victor in the end.

The seed, in darkness hidden,
Beneath the ground takes root,
And up the green blade springeth,
And cometh fast the fruit.
He hides his pow'r in weakness,
As when He bore the cross,
And for his kingdom winneth
A gain by every loss.

What though, of his long patience,
The powers of ill have play?
Himself hath willed the trial;
He measures out the day.
At length each tongue shall own Him,
Each knee to Him shall bend;
And Christ, He will be victor,
Be victor in the end.

Lift up your heads with gladness,
Ye warriors of the Lord;
Though in the conflict weary,
Draw forth again the sword;
His fighting, wrestling servants
His arm will still sustain,
And at the close of battle
The field with them remain.

Yea, Death, that scowled upon us,
Our spoiler in the past,
That bowed us down in darkness,
Will be his spoil at last;
And we, in life and glory,
With Him shall homeward wend;
And Christ, He will be victor,
Be victor in the end.

Tidings from Central Africa.

The following letter from Central Africa, dated Luebo, Kassai River, February 14, has been sent to us by one of our correspondents. The friends of the late Dr. W. R. Summers will rejoice to learn that his field is again occupied by Gospel bearers. The writer is a missionary of the Presbyterian Church South, U.S.A. His colleague, Mr. Sheppard, is a coloured man of the same church:—

You will understand by my address above that our Master has guided us pretty straight to the fields you have wished to see occupied. We are at Luebo, the point of contact between the Upper Kassai region and civilisation, the only one, now that the Bangala and Ma-Ksoko have cut off the direct road to the coast, via Malange. Besides this, Luebo is a meeting point for the traders of several queer tribes with each other, and with the Portuguese, French, and Belgian traders. The tribes I refer to are the Baluba (including the Bena Lulua or Bashilange) and the Bakete and Bakuba. The two latter are highly intelligent, but greatly averse to adopting any innovations on their ancient usages, preferring our trade to our ways. The former, though mortal enemies, are alike in their appreciation of the superiority of white civilisation. In travelling among the Bashilange, I find that they have a certain gentillesse, combined with intelligent curiosity about the unseen world which makes them most interesting, in spite of the sad ravages which hemp-smoking has made on them.

A notable and distressing feature of the great trade movements in our region is the gigantic traffic in Baluba slaves. Great markets in the far South are supplied, probably by razzias on the villages of this gentle race. There, as natives tell me, the good and bad are tied indiscriminately in large gangs, from which the merchant selects the article he wants till he has made up his herd. With these he marches to his customers, generally hundreds of miles away. The Bakuba tell me that the cannibal Bosongo Mino, east of them, buy slaves to eat; certainly they buy great numbers who come to them by way of Luluaburg, Luebo, and the Bakuba country. The Makioko are who come into our neighbourhood. Their east and west trade roads intersect the Luebo-Luluaburg road every few hours. Slaves, powder, fine cloth, braids, guns, and cattle are their staples, with which they drain away Bashilange rubber and Bakuba ivory from the white traders, who cannot offer such a variety of stores.

The Angolans, who came in with Dr. Summers and Senhor Carvalho (now my nearest neighbour), say that they had to force their passage, and I believe that nobody has got through since. I understand that Senhor Saturnino Machado intends to repatriate such of the Angolans as wish to go with him, perhaps next year. I made a trip to Luluaburg and around the Mwanza-Ngoma, the furthest factory of the firm Machado Irmaos, where Mr. Saturnino lives. It will gratify you to hear that I found the memory of Dr. Summers fresh and fragrant even at a distance from the scene of his work. Indeed, I found it facilitated my success in making friends to say that I was one of the brothers of their old teacher and friend. The women especially remembered that he had been very pleasant and kind to them, 'with all purity'—a unique combination in their eyes. Mr. Swan, a member of the Arnot Mission in the Garenganze, visited Luluaburg last autumn, and, finding neglected, had it cleared of grass and nicely arranged; so I found it in December. He sleeps at the foot of a palm tree, near and in front of the site where his house once stood.

The station of Luluaburg and the surrounding country remind me more of civilisation than any I had seen in Africa. The immense plantations of Indian corn, pea-nuts, cassava, &c., one passes on the way, and the fine array of buildings crowning Luluaburg Hill, and comprising the station itself, combine to make this impression.

You will have learned the sad news of the war between the State and Kalamba. I walked over part of the waste of over-grown gardens, wrecked and burnt houses, which show where Kalamba's capital was; an immense plateau more than an hour across, which was covered, one year ago, with a mass of neat native houses. Dr. Summers' field is now in the possession of the Belgian Catholic Fathers, of whom the Superior has stationed himself at Luluaburg, and is rapidly getting hold of the nations who remain in reach. He had hopes of persuading Kalamba to return. Père Cambien is the supérieur, a shrewd and capable man, with abundant means to carry on his work, and one assistant at Luluaburg. Large numbers of the Angolans have settled beside him, which will greatly facilitate his station buildings.

I succeeded in getting several Angolans to return with me to Luebo—some twenty men and their families. They say they wish to settle there, and enjoy the protection of the Mission. The body of the people are slaves whom they bought and raised—a state of things very patriarchal, much like Abraham's household, which will be necessary in that wild country for some time to come. These domestic slaves are well treated, and are evidently glad to serve their masters, without whose protection they would fall into worse hands.

DIFFICULTIES OF LANGUAGE.

At Luebo I have Baluba (two villages) on one side, Zappo-Zappos on another, and Bakete behind, all close at hand. The Luba language, known everywhere, through Bashilange traders and Baluba slaves, is the ordinary medium of intercourse, as I discovered to my chagrin after working for some time, as I supposed, on the language of my Bakete. I am now glad, however, to have a working acquaintance with the Luba, which seems to be known everywhere to the south, east, and west of Luebo. Its affinities seem to be more toward the Umbundu than the Congo varieties of Bantu, and there are many points in common with the East African dialects, judging from meagre vocabularies of these which I have seen.

I suppose we shall have to extend along the line of the river. There are considerable populations on the Kassai banks and islands between Sankuru and Kwangu, and I am persuaded that there is much more inland. The Kassai is not a trade river like the Congo. I know that inland from the mouth of the Sankuru there are plenty of people, and that they are friendly, though said to be cannibals.

"COME OVER AND HELP US."

At the same time, the need for the opportunity for extension inland from Luebo is always on my mind. If other societies knew, and would but co-operate! A gentleman and his wife are already out to join us at Luebo, and I am told others are to follow presently. We use the trade steamers and those of the State for our transport—a system not relatively expensive, and reasonably regular. The new French station at Luebo, the three new posts of the 'Société Anonyme Belge pour le Commerce du Haut Congo,' at Luluamouth, Sankuru-mouth, and Lusambo respectively, together with the gigantic Katanga enterprise, are guarantee for plenty of steamers. We have an arrangement with the Congo Balolo Mission for transport around the Cataracts of the Congo.

I am glad to say that Mr. Sheppard, my colleague, is very well and working finely. He has an invaluable faculty for getting en rapport with the natives. He finds his skill in the water and in the chase stand him in good stead as well. It is remarked, however, that neither he nor the other coloured missionaries withstand the climate better than the whites. He has been very ill twice since we left for Luebo last March.

Can you put me on the track of Dr. Summers' work on the Bashilange language? I have heard that M. Braconnier, who was 'Commissaire du District du Kassai' at the time of the Doctor's death, took the vocabulary to Europe with him.* Mr. C. Swan has prepared a vocabulary and grammar of the language of the Bashilange by a simple process. He got Kashabala, the Angolan interpreter of the State station of Lusambo, to give the Bashilange equivalents of the Umbundu forms and words. I found the synopsis he gave me during a hasty call at Luebo on his way down very useful indeed. Sankuru-mouth or Loango-mouth, Kwango-mouth, and the neighbourhood of Mwanza-Ngoma, fifty miles east of Luluaburg, are points on the Kassai system which seem to be of strategic importance at this time. May our Captain speedily post his standard-bearers at all of them.—Yours fraternally,

S. N. Lapsley.

We have received the following intimation from the friend to whom the foregoing letter by Mr. Lapsley was addressed:—"Scarcely had I sent you the letter of Mr. Lapsley when I got the tidings of his death. He died of hæmaturic fever, at Tundsswa, on March 26. The fever ceased, under the pressure of drugs, in thirty-six hours, but during three or four succeeding days his temperature was never below 105 degrees. On Saturday, while unattended, he arose and washed, and immediately afterwards his temperature began to rise, until at noon delirium set in, and in two hours he died peacefully. He appeared to know he would never recover, as this was the fourth hæmaturic fever he had."

* After a long delay, the Congo States delivered the manuscripts of Dr. Summers, according to his express desire, to Mr. Heli Chatelain, who will publish them in due time.

Outgoing Missionaries.

The Committee of the Missionary Bureau are about to secure passages for the following missionaries: Mr. and Miss Hamilton, who are going out to Brazil; Mr. W. G. Anderson, Mr. W. Cannon, and Mr. H. R. Cox, who are leaving to join Mr. and Mrs. Osborne-Howe in their work in South Africa; Mr. Joseph Cooksey, who has been chosen to work in connection with Mr. Hermann G. Harris in the Central Soudan; Mr. W. G. Scott, who has been accepted for work in Bombay, under Mr. Wallace G. Gladwin; Mr. Richard Jones, who is offering to go out to take up the work left vacant by the death of Mr. Wesson, in Rio Janeiro.

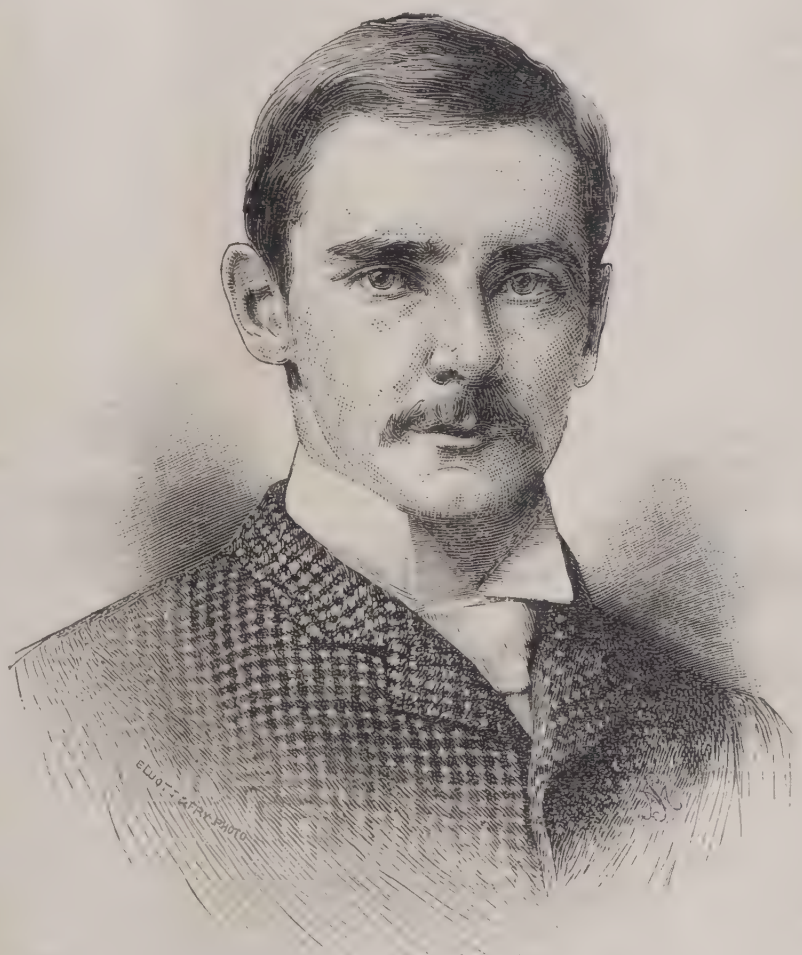
For nearly all of these workers passage and outfit money will be required. On an average fifty pounds for each worker is sufficient to meet all outgoing expenses. The Committee of the Missionary Bureau would be grateful if the Lord's stewards would kindly remember these needs. Communications should be sent to the Missionary Bureau, 1, Gresham-street, London, E.C.

BIBLE CARRIAGE FOR HUNGARY.—Our Bible carriage, which is being built in Northampton, is now nearly ready, and will soon, I trust, be on its beneficent way. Friends have sent me enough to meet the price of the carriage (£75) and the expense of transport from England to Hungary (about £11), but I still require money for the purchase of horse and harness. I make this known in the hope that some friend or friends may help me to set the carriage in motion. Andrew Moody.

SICILY.—The thirteenth annual report of the evangelistic work carried on by Signors Varnier and Senderi states that Canon Imbarrato, of the Cathedral Church of Nicosia, who left the Roman Catholic Church over a year ago, now witnesses courageously for Christ. He lately visited Messina for conference with Signor Varnier, in the hope of qualifying for mission work among his brethren in Nicosia. It was, however, found that by his great age he was unfitted for active work of this kind, although his sympathies are wholly on the side of evangelical truth. It appears that the Bishop of Nicosia has appealed to the clergy and laity to combat the introduction of Protestant heresy. Signor Varnier fears that the brethren there will have trouble and persecution. The hon. sec. of the Mission in England is Mr. Donald Matheson, 120, Queen's-gate, S.W.

THE LATE

MR. GRAHAM WILMOT BROOKE,



OF THE C.M.S. SOUDAN MISSION.

TO-DAY we give the portrait of a well-known and much-esteemed young worker, whose recent death added one more to the long muster-roll of African missionary martyrs. GRAHAM WILMOT BROOKE was born February 23, 1865, at Aldershot, where his father, Major Brooke, was then serving with his regiment, the 60th Rifles. He was brought up amidst the surroundings of a military life; for his mother was a soldier's daughter, and her father, General Sir Duncan Macgregor, lived with them. The child early became a special favourite of his grandfather, with whom he used to spend much of his time, and from whose lips he used eagerly to drink in stories of his adventures during the Continental War, and of life in the Highlands so far back as the last century, at the close of which he first received his commission. The Government of that day was much perplexed how to deal with the turbulence and inter-recine conflicts of the Highland clans, and at last hit upon the expedient of raising regiments for foreign service, each recruited wholly from one clan. As young Duncan Macgregor happened to be nearly related to the chieftain of the Clan Macgregor, he was given a commission—though only in his twelfth year—in the Clan-Alpine Fencibles, one of the new regiments thus raised.

As the boy listened to his grandfather's stories of his early life, his interest was excited in hearing of the feudal feeling that still lingered in those days amongst the Highland clans; and he often said afterwards that it gave him the power of understanding the very similar conditions of life that prevail among the African Mohammedan races, and of enabling him to grasp the difficult problems arising from their inter-tribal relations, and their curious feudal usages and customs.

A most important feature of his early training, and one that bore useful fruit afterwards in Africa, was the immense pains taken by his uncle, Mr. John Macgregor (known as "Rob Roy") to encourage him in outdoor sports, and especially in the care and management of boats. He was allowed, under his uncle's training, to manage a rowing boat by himself when he was but seven years old, and a sailing boat when he was nine. He thus learned to face danger, but, at the same time, never to be ashamed of taking the utmost precaution in doing a dangerous thing. In contrast, however, to this early development of his faculties of observation, he was only able to read when he was eight years old, his parents having kept him back from doing so before that age. He began the usual routine of a boy's education by entering Haileybury, January, 1879, when he was thirteen years of age, gaining the same year the Modern Side Scholarship. His school-life there was a happy one, but it was cut short by an accident he met with in jumping, which kept him on his back for two years. From this time his regular studies were pursued at home under tutors, and being cut off from out-door life, he devoted all his spare hours to reading any and every subject that might be useful in extending his knowledge, especially in a direction of which it is now time to speak.

When he was fourteen he read with intense interest a book which had a very formative influence upon his after life, "Colonel Gordon on Central Africa." This book led him eventually to devote his life to God's service on behalf of the people of the Dark Continent. His early thoughts, however, on the way in which this service should be rendered were not on the distinctively spiritual lines of his later days. From his earliest years the Army had been his chosen career, and he still thought that it would prove the best training-ground for his future work. But this was not God's will for him. To the surprise of his tutors, and his own surprise, he failed in the entrance examination for Woolwich in what was considered his strongest subject. He at once recognised God's hand in this; and though he consented to go in for the Sandhurst entrance examination, he had an inward conviction that he would fail in that also. He made it a matter of prayer that the failure—which he considered certain—might be in one of his strongest subjects, and not in the one or two about which he had some cause for anxiety. The sign sought was granted, and though his friends and tutors were disappointed, he was not. He saw that he was being led in another path, though he was not yet in the strong light which afterwards shone upon that path so brightly.

From an early age, but one that he never could exactly define, he had given evidence of being "led by the Spirit of God." Like many who have had the same advantages of Christian parents and Christian training from their earliest days, the change from darkness to light was gradual. His father had been accustomed to read the Bible daily with him, and thus he was early brought into contact with the Word of God, which Scripture asserts to be the instrumental cause of regeneration (1 Pet. i. 23). He had, moreover, in his home not only Christian teaching, but Christian influence and example; but these influences of themselves could effect little without the Holy Spirit's power to apply them; this, however, in due time gradually but surely manifested itself.

He had lost his mother in the year 1883, a loss which those only can understand who knew her, and saw the remarkable influence for good which she exercised over her two sons. Previous to her death he had fully revealed to her how he believed that the Lord was leading him, and received her hearty assent and blessing in reference to his future missionary career. In fulfilment of a promise made to her, he went through the medical course of St. Thomas's Hospital, and sought in other ways to qualify himself for the object to which he was now seeking to devote his life.

The latter part of the year 1886 was regarded by him as an era in his spiritual life. For some time previous he had been much drawn to the study of the prophetic part of Scripture, and this led him to discover the fallacy of the popular religious views as to the character of this dispensation. So far from its being the time of triumph of Christ's kingdom upon earth, he was led to see that it is the time of Satan's triumph in deceiving the nations (Rev. xx. 3), which deception lasts until the coming of Christ to bind Satan, and to take unto Himself his great power and reign. Till then Satan is "the prince of this world" (John xiv. 30), "the god of this age" (2 Cor. iv. 4). This discovery produced a most marked change in his conceptions of the spirit in which mission-work should be undertaken, and at the same time afforded him a stimulus for missionary zeal of no common kind. It was towards the end of this year (1886) that the definite acceptance of the practical side of this truth began to show itself in his walk and ways. The determination to know nothing but Jesus Christ and Him crucified, and to expect his personal coming to set things right, was associated with very definite spiritual blessing to himself, and from this time forth he began to see fruit in his work for Christ.

It is now time to speak of those flying trips to Africa, by which he sought to gain some practical knowledge, and that in Africa itself, of the best route for reaching the Soudan. His own words, written for a local Church paper—The Claughton Church Messenger—will best convey a notion of what he aimed at:—

"The writer had already undertaken two flying trips—one of a few days' journey into the Sahara through Algeria, the other for five hundred miles into the Western Soudan through Senegambia—with a view of becoming acquainted with the races that would have to be dealt with, when the fall of Kartoum made it necessary to reconsider the question of what would be the best route for an English mission to reach these countries. The Senegal was not available for opening an English mission, being in the hands of the French. The Niger, strongly occupied by the negro missionaries of the C.M.S., did not appear a desirable base for beginning work among the Muslims. The only remaining route was the Congo."

Thither, therefore he sailed in July, 1887. "The first intention was to go up the Congo to the settlements of the Arab traders about Stanley Falls. But on arriving at the Congo it was quite evident that the pillaging and the bloodshed that had marked the progress of the Stanley Expedition had made their route unsuitable for missionary enterprise for years to come, so the only alternative was to turn North, and try to get past the wild tribes of the Mobangi to the southern frontier of Baghirmi. After long delays and various exciting scenes, a point was reached two hundred miles up the Mobangi, but there the ferocious attitude of the cannibals made further peaceful progress impossible." The attempt, therefore, to reach the Soudan by the Congo failed.

The next effort was made by the Niger, and that was successful. A visit to the river with a young Cambridge friend, Mr. Ernest Shaw, ended in a warm friendship formed with the Rev. J. A. Robinson (the English Secretary of the C.M.S. Niger Mission), and the proposal was brought before the C.M.S., and by them warmly welcomed, of an extension of their mission on the Niger northwards, making Lokoja the base of a mission into the Soudan, with a view of preaching the Gospel in the hitherto unevangelised regions of that vast territory. Mr. Brooke thereupon joined the C.M.S. as an honorary lay missionary.

It is unnecessary to trace the history of this Mission further. It has been recorded in eighteen leaflets of "The Soudan Mission of the C.M.S.," which can be had at Salisbury-square, or obtained by writing to Mr. Leonard K. Shaw, Conference Hall, Strangeways, Manchester. These record both the early trials and the subsequent successes of the Mission, the later numbers being especially interesting in this respect. Here, in connection with the Rev. J. A. Robinson, the joint leader with him of the Mission, the Rev. Eric Lewis, Dr. Battersby, Mr. Callender, Mr. Roberts, Miss Lewis, Miss Clapton, Miss Griffin, and his wife (whom he married February, 1889), some real work for God was done, both in Lokoja and the surrounding district, which will bear fruit in eternity. His friend, Mr. Robinson, was called home in June, 1891, and Graham Brooke's mortal remains now rest beside his in the cemetery at Lokoja until the resurrection morning.

The details of his death were given in The Christian for May 6, and need not here be repeated. He has left behind him an example which may well stir up others to consecrate their lives to God's service in the mission-field. Some, perhaps, will say: "Why throw away valuable life in a climate so fatal to Europeans?" But Graham Brooke, in going out in 1890, spoke at the dismissal meeting at Salisbury-square some words on this point which may well close this brief notice of his life. After speaking of having had hæmaturic fever five times, and of but few having ever been known to recover seven times from this fever, he added: "Friends tell me what madness it is to run such risks. But when men were called to storm Delhi and Lucknow they cheerfully came forward, knowing that death was all but certain. The strongholds of heathenism and Mohammedanism can only be stormed by actions for God in the same spirit. My action is not the outcome of rashness on my part. I am going after the calmest and fullest deliberation."

It is but fair to state, for the sake of those who may desire to work on the Niger, that of the European workers who have taken part in the Lokoja Mission, Graham Brooke alone has died from the effects of the climate. Mr. Robinson died of meningitis brought on by overwork. The other eight, though all have suffered more or less from fever, and some have been disabled from continuing in that part of Africa, are still alive and well.

The climate, therefore, is not so deadly as is often supposed, nor will it be difficult, with due care and wise precaution, to maintain, as is so very desirable, European supervision of the native workers. The C.M.S. have lately appealed for men to come forward for this mission. May many be raised up to water and reap where Robinson and Brooke have ploughed and sown!

NEW ENGLISH CHAPEL AT HAVRE.

Dear Mr. Editor,—So many members of the different branches of the Christian Family have shown us sympathy while passing through Havre that I venture to believe the news I am about to give will rejoice the hearts of some of your readers.

I was called by God some eleven and a-half years ago to work for Him in this great cosmopolitan port. We had then a small Mission-room, opened a year before my arrival by Rev. Dr. Gibson, for French meetings. Soon after we rented a ball-room in one of the "Faubourgs." In this large room, which later on we bought, a most blessed work has been done, and but quite lately a most gracious revival has taken place, during which several received Christ. The Sunday and Thursday school in connection with this room has been especially blessed, but in the centre of the town we have been cribbed and confined, and have found that as in all large cities it has been very difficult to secure suitable permanent quarters.

For some two years we have been looking and waiting in prayer, longing to reach the thousands of all classes—sailors and travellers of all nationalities, soldiers, employés of the large shops—who daily crowd the great thoroughfare. We thank God that He has opened the way for us to purchase, in the very best possible position, a house, a part of which we can underlet for offices, retaining the ground and first-floors for a large hall and after-meeting rooms, together with a concierge's lodging, and also a Bible and tract depôt.

The rents received, added to the sum we have been paying for yearly hire of former mission-room, more than cover the interest on the purchase money, but the furnishing and the alterations, which are very considerable, will entail an expenditure of nearly £900. One half of this sum has been given or promised by friends on the spot or those who have visited Havre and seen the work. Many who have with us felt the untold need of this great centre would, we are sure, be pleased to help did they know of this providential opportunity; others interested in France may be able to come and cheer us this summer by their sympathy.

The mission-room in town is used for a small congregation gathered from English residents, and continuous blessing has been granted to this little flock, some members of which are devoted Christian workers. I cannot close this letter without referring to the noble work carried on by the Hon. Lady Beauchamp at the Sailors' Home and Temperance Bar, and thanking God for sending her to cheer the spirits of the labourers in this great city.—Yours in the Master's service,

George Whelpton
(Wesleyan Minister).

OXFORD NOTES.

The Principal of Wycliffe Hall (Rev. F. J. Chavasse) is preaching a course of sermons in St. Peter-le-Bailey Church this term to large congregations, on "The Walk to Emmaus."

Several meetings of interest have been lately held in connection with the Oxford branch of the British Women's Temperance Association, which is doing effective work in Oxford and the neighbourhood.

The Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Children is now doing splendid work in Oxford, by means of a vigilant inspector and a large and representative committee. Several cases of cruelty have already been exposed and summarily dealt with.

A most valuable, though necessarily unobtrusive, service is being rendered in Oxford at the Oxford Female Refuge, which is under the charge of two devoted Mildmay deaconesses. The report for last year tells of much blessing, to which those who know the home can thoroughly testify.

Oxford was recently favoured with a visit from Mr. Cheok Hong Cheong, the valued worker among his Chinese fellow-countrymen in Melbourne. His lecture on the opium traffic was one of profound interest, to a meeting which almost filled the Town Hall, and most hearty and united was the reception given to the speaker.

CAMBRIDGE NOTES.

On Friday evening, May 13, Rev. A. J. Harrison delivered a lecture on "Some Present-day Problems in Religion," on behalf of the Religious Discussion Society. There was a very large audience. The subject was treated with great depth of thought and reasoning.

Sermons were recently preached on behalf of the Baptist Missionary Society in St. Andrew's-street Chapel. The morning sermon was preached by Rev. A. Sowerby, of China, and in the evening the sermon was by Rev. W. J. Price, of India. On Monday evening a public meeting was held in aid of the Society.

On Monday week a juvenile meeting in connection with the C.M.S. was held in St. Paul's School. In the evening a meeting of the University C. M. Union members was held at Ridley Hall, when Rev. Jani Alli and Rev. A. G. Pargitter, late Principal of Agra College, gave excellent addresses. Mr. Alli described himself as a graduate of Cambridge, having taken his degree from Corpus Christi College. He was the first convert of the Noble High School, Masulipatam.

The C.M.S annual meeting was held in the Guildhall on Tuesday afternoon. The Master of Trinity presided. Mr. Barton read the report, and stated that the increase of missionary interest had been great during the past year. Mr. Hough, the treasurer, gave his financial statement, and mentioned that from the University £268 had been collected, an increase of £20 on last year. As regards the town, there had been a great falling off compared with last year's receipts, the total being £618 odd. Rev. Jani Alli and Major-General Brownlow gave addresses.

CAMBRIDGE INSTITUTE.—This branch of the Y.W.C.A. in Upper Holloway shows for the past year a record of useful work amongst the girls employed in houses of business, Board School teachers, Post Office clerks. Miss Freeman, hon. sec., 70, Carleton-road, N., states there is need for funds and fresh helpers.

REV. J. D. KILBURN, pastor of the English Reformed Church in Hamburg, will preach on Sunday next in Whitefield's Tabernacle, Tottenham-court-road. He is widely known for his evangelistic work on the Continent, having twice travelled through Norway and Sweden, visited Finland nine times, and laboured in the Baltic provinces for the Evangelical Alliance, whose Conference at Florence last year he attended as a delegate. Whilst pastor of the British and American Church in St. Petersburg, for a period of nine years, he circulated as many as twenty thousand Gospels per annum. His little books and leaflets have been distributed broadcast in six European languages. On Monday next Mr. Kilburn leaves England for his work at Hamburg.

THE MAY MEETINGS.

LONDON MISSIONARY SOCIETY.

The annual meeting of the London Missionary Society, on Thursday last, was attended more largely than any in recent years. Rev. R. Wardlaw Thompson, in a statement of the Society's work during the year, said:—

God has blessed us in every department. There have been dark clouds in China and Mongolia, but they have passed away. In India the northern stations are still waiting for the rain from Heaven; but in South India there are evidences of the power of the Gospel, not only in the great Telegu Mission, but even among the Tamil people. A great spiritual movement has also begun in Madagascar.

The Society has now twenty more missionaries in the field than it had twelve months ago. An exceptional number of well-qualified women have offered their services to the cause. There was also an increasing interest in missionary work among the men. Amongst them two names should be specially mentioned—Dr. Hart, of Cambridge, and Rev. R. J. Ward, of St. Helen's, the former giving up a distinguished position in the University, and the latter the pastorship of a large and prosperous church.

There had, further, been a great increase in the Society's funds. The resolution which commenced the Forward Movement involved the Society in heavy responsibility—not less than additional expenditure of £25,000. The new workers were required, not for any schemes of advance, but for old fields of labour. No sooner had the decision of the directors gone forth than it became apparent that God had been preparing the hearts of the people. Including additional receipts from legacies, the total increase in the funds for the year had been no less than £35,000. After that, what could they do but humble themselves in shame that they had ever entertained a doubt about the Master's faithfulness to his promise?

Mr. F. Howard, who occupied the chair, spoke a few earnest words, being followed by Rev. S. Mateer, missionary from Travancore, who maintained that the more successful mission work is, and the more it grows, the more it needs in men and means and united effort. More native teachers are required for the work, and more church accommodation. In the Telegu country the missionaries are actually writing home to say that they are compelled to prevent the work from extending. At least four more missionaries are wanted to meet present demands in Travancore. There are great opportunities of usefulness and soul-saving work among the thousands of nominal Christians.

Rev. R. J. Ward, of St. Helen's, who is relinquishing home work to go to India, delivered a telling address. He rejoiced to think of the large and increasing number of missionary churches in this country, and of the increasing number of missionaries, who were as much missionary in heart as by special designation. He believed that as the work progressed it would be more easy and less remarkable for men to give up work at home for work abroad. This forward movement was not man's movement, but God's. It was He who wanted the work done, and He had said that He required our help. Since they met in that hall last May, no less than thirty millions of heathens had died. They would, no doubt, say that God would deal with these heathen according to their opportunities of hearing the Gospel. That was true; but God would also deal with Christian people according to their opportunity of telling. Unless God blocked the way it was every one's duty to go out and take his share in the conversion of the heathen, and it was the duty of those that remained to support them by gifts and prayer. They were all responsible for the evangelisation of the world.

Rev. James Sibree, of Madagascar, dwelt upon what is done to develop self-help in the churches of the islands. When he first went to Madagascar, twenty-nine years ago, a hea hen queen was on the throne; but for the past twenty-three years there had been Christian queens, whose influence had been most beneficent. From the summit of Antananarivo 120 or 130 towns and villages could be counted, and substantial churches might be seen, built in memory of those who in a past generation had died for Christ. Formerly cruel laws and punishments were in force, but now there was an enlightened and merciful code. Twenty-nine years ago the literature of the country consisted of the Bible, "Pilgrim's Progress," a few sermons, tracts, and elementary school books. Now it comprised five hundred books of one hundred pages each, with a yearly circulation of 200,000 copies from the various presses. Instead of a little handful of churches, a dozen in number, with schools containing 360 children, there were now over ninety thousand children under instruction. And instead of twenty congregations, including five thousand people, there were between thirteen hundred and fourteen hundred congregations, including 210,000 people. In view of the great claims and of the vast numbers of people ready and waiting for the Gospel, and asking for more help; in view of the four millions who had not yet heard the Gospel in the districts beyond; he thought at least twenty of the hundred new missionaries should be allotted to Madagascar.

Rev. W. Spensley, of Sunderland, also addressed the meeting.

PRESBYTERIAN MISSIONS.

While the Presbyterians are by no means one of the most numerous of the churches in England, their interest in missions is remarkably keen and vigorous, as was well indicated by the large and enthusiastic audience which crowded Exeter Hall on Friday evening on the occasion of the annual missionary meeting of the united presbyteries of London. Certainly the platform was exceptionally strong, including as it did such speakers as Revs. Drs. Pierson and Pentecost and Rev. John Smith; while the fine singing of selections from "The Creation" by the South London Choirs Association proved most attractive; but beyond all this there is clearly a strong, deep interest amongst Presbyterians in the work of foreign missions.

Lord Kinnaird, who presided, felt that the sight of this great gathering must cheer the foreign missionaries and the Mission Committee. There had been serious losses in the mission field, but surely these would be fresh calls to new and vigorous volunteers. The Missionary Association had, as regards funds, taken a great step forward, the income for the past year having reached £25,000. He did not believe that this liberality was at the cost of any Home Mission, for the more people were stirred with regard to Foreign Missions the more they were likely to be interested practically in God's work at home. He rejoiced in the visit of Dr. Pentecost to India, and trusted that the result would be that many of our best and strongest men would feel impelled to arise and go to the help of the Lord in the great work among the heathen.

Rev. T. Barclay, M.A., of Formosa, was thankful to find, on coming home, that Foreign Missions are not now regarded as a mere appendix, as it were, but as vitally and intimately part of the Church's work. Now, at this time, China is awake and open to the Gospel. Christian teachers are recognised, permitted and protected by the law of China. Therefore, although there is persecution, it is illegal and contrary to law. The question is not now, can we enter? but, rather, have we a message worth carrying to these people? After recalling Dr. Morrison's experiences, the speaker went on to tell of certain results which are now accomplished facts. For example, there are in China about forty thousand communicants, representing about one hundred thousand natives, connected with the Christian Church. As to the quality of these Christians, there are a few "rice Christians," who come for what they can get; but the vast majority have given up everything for the Gospel, have suffered sorely, have been tried in every way, and have proved themselves devout and true followers of Jesus, living consistent and godly lives. He rejoiced to say that for seven years he himself had been connected with an institution for the training of native agents, a feature which must be regarded as one of the most hopeful symptoms of the present times in China. These natives can do what no European missionary can ever do. In China there is a field of unlimited extent, it is perfectly open, and the question is, What is the Church going to make of it? Who can say what may be in the future for the Church that dares to be faithful to her Lord's last command?

Rev. John Smith, M.A., believed that the missionary cause is on a rising wave at this moment, in evidence of which statement he cited the students' missionary movement and other matters. He held that for every church and individual there is a special test by which God proves what is in them, and the test of the present age is that great missionary opportunity now open before the Church. We are in a great crisis of opportunity and of responsibility. This has been a century of beginnings, and now Christianity seems on a new vantage ground in every corner of the globe. It has gained converts from every false system, has proved the universality of the religion of Jesus Christ, that it is a Gospel for mankind, adapted to be the light of life for all races, tribes, and peoples. This has been proved before our eyes, and if we are only willing to lay our powers, our means, our selves at God's feet there is a golden future before the Church of God. Then, too, the argument of design may be applied to this subject, and does it not seem that in the whole history of the British race there is a predestination to the great work of evangelising the world? He believed God is calling us in this great day of opportunity to the mighty task of conquering the world for Him. Were this matter taken hold of, if fathers gave their sons and mothers their daughters, there would be a wave of spiritual power and life aroused that would kill the unbelief and rationalism of the present day.

Rev. A. T. Pierson, D.D., said that this was not the celebration of a victory, but a council of war. In this, the closing decade of the nineteenth century, there are a thousand millions who have never heard the Gospel of Christ. If we believed the supreme business of the Church of God is to carry the Gospel to every creature in all the world, where is the spirit of absolute obedience to the Lord's command? Where is the enterprise of the Christian Church? While men penetrate into the remotest corners of the globe for the sake of gain, why are the servants of Christ so slow to bear his tidings of grace to the ends of the earth? Where is the heroism of the day in the cause of missions? When we recall the heroism of the world in its own way, we marvel how little the Church is prepared to do and suffer for its Master's sake. After all, the matter must be threshed out in the silence and solitude of the secret place with God, where each one must discover what he or she is willing to surrender for his Saviour. But, alas! the great mass of professing Christians are doing nothing and giving nothing to evangelise the world; and the vast majority of the human race are hurrying down to their graves without the faintest knowledge that there is such a thing as salvation through Jesus Christ. If Christians were only roused fairly, before twenty-five years have passed every human being would have heard the Gospel. He trusted every one would go home to ask what they could do in person or purse to obey the will of the Master in making known his Gospel.

Rev. G. F. Pentecost, D.D., approached the whole matter from the opposite point of view; believing that, while it was true that millions are doing nothing, it is also true that thousands are doing something and yielding glad obedience; and for the encouragement of such he would say that all he had seen in India had filled him with hopeful thankfulness. What is wanted is information as to what God is actually doing by means of missions. When missionary facts are brought before an audience, and the power of the Holy Ghost sets these facts on fire, then will come enthusiasm, inspiring men to mighty deeds. He believed that God's purpose, God's power, and God's promise are behind us in this matter, and what more can we possibly want? The power that made the world, the power that raised Christ Jesus from the dead, is behind every man and woman who goes forth to preach the Gospel; and how can any one fail with such a power behind him? As to India, he believed it is the key to the missionary problem of the world; and God has put the evangelisation of that vast empire in the hands of the Anglo-Saxon race. One of the most urgent needs at this moment is to send out godly, gifted, Spirit-baptized men to preach the Gospel to the educated natives who are willing to hear it, and want to hear it in the English tongue. At this moment the thin end of the wedge is being driven in which is splitting Hinduism in two. The work has been largely, perhaps, amongst low-caste men, but God is also converting high caste. There are few towns in which there is not some Brahmin to be found witnessing for Christ; and besides there are thousands who have not been baptized who are yet reading the New Testament to their countrymen and preaching Jesus Christ as the sacrifice of God for sin. Further, there are tens of thousands of secret believers waiting for some favourable time to confess Christ. India, to-day, barren and dry with the long rainless season, is waiting for the showers of the Holy Spirit to burst into brightness and beauty to the glory of God. The fact is, Hinduism is in despair before the incoming of the Gospel of Christ. Therefore he (Dr. Pentecost) would have friends of missions "be of good cheer." The walls are being breached, the enemy is wavering—now is the time to pour in fresh recruits and fresh supplies, and the battle will be won within the century.

IRISH CHURCH MISSIONS.

The Bishop of Exeter presided over the forty-third annual meeting of the Irish Church Missions to Roman Catholics, which was held at Exeter Hall on Tuesday, May 10.

An abstract of the report was read by Rev. Dr. Shields, clerical secretary. It stated: 1450 years ago Ireland rejoiced in the liberty of the pure Gospel of Jesus Christ. St. Patrick and his successors planted and maintained there a pure and Scriptural branch of the Church of Christ. For seven hundred years the Church of Ireland struggled to maintain its independence of the Church of Rome, but then came the fatal day of English and Papal conquest, when Henry II. conquered and laid Ireland prostrate at the feet of Rome. The Reformation freed England but not Ireland, which has been so long corrupted and oppressed by the false system of the Romish religion.

The Society's agents include twenty-two clergymen of the Church of Ireland, of whom six give their services, superintending the work in mission districts in town and country parishes, &c. Under them are seventy-two specially-trained Scripture readers, many of them converts from Romanism. About half of these visit daily the streets and alleys of Dublin. Between eighty and ninety school teachers instruct the attendants at fifty-six day schools, with 2208 scholars, and thirty-one Sunday-schools, with an attendance of 1565. About four thousand scholars are to be found in these schools, and in the homes and orphanages of the Society. Two-thirds of these children are of Roman Catholic parentage. Sunday and week-day services, night schools and ragged schools form important branches of the work. A band of forty-five text-teachers persuade the Irish-speaking people in the country districts to commit to memory verses of Scripture in the Irish tongue.

The Chairman, in the course of a hearty address, urged the claims of the Society on the ground that it is out and out Protestant and thoroughly evangelical. He said: Romanism is unchanged; it is still the subtlest form of anti-Christ, and I believe that the word of prophecy, which shines as in a dark place, is the truest safeguard for the Church of Christ against the evils of Romanism. I am quite sure that God Himself, who saw all the future struggles of the Church, gave us the Book of Revelation to unveil the masked horrors of Popery. We are not to think that Popery is no longer a real foe. God does not generally, I think, overcome his enemies in their weakness, but in their strength; and it seems to me that it is something like Jezebel of old. It was not that she had not her attractions even to the end! she painted her face and tired her head, and looked out at a window just before her overthrow. And I believe it is so with Romanism in the present day, with all the blandishments of that false face with which she would try to entice the servants of God from their simplicity of their trust in Him. But strong is the Lord God who judged her, and we stand forth as Protestants. It is no bare negation. We protest for the truth and against a lie. It is simply this—we stand upholding the truth of God, because we know it exposes the falsehoods of the devil.

Rev. S. A. Selwyn enlarged upon the responsibility which the present opportunity imposes. Itinerant missionaries should be sent into all parts of Ireland. Rev. H. Fishe, superintendent of the Dublin Mission, described the work of the itinerants. It includes attendance at markets and fairs with folding tables, on which they display gospels and religious books. One pair of these men travelled from February 22 to April 22 no less than 2128 miles. It is no easy work to stand up before a congregation of 1500 or 2000 people, for the most part Romanists. Last April two of them went on a journey through the Midlands, and visited places where there was not a single Protestant. At one fair the priest tried to stop them and sent for the police, but the police said, "No, they are carrying on their business." The result was they sold about seventy copies there, in spite of the priests.

Rev. B. De Wolf, of Sheffield, having spoken, an address was delivered by Rev. J. McCormick, D.D. While in Ireland recently he sat beside a priest in a third-class railway carriage. After some conversation the priest asked him to preach to the other people who were in the carriage, and he did so, taking as his text John iii. 16. When the train stopped at the next station the priest shook his hand and said, "May God bless you." There is a grand opening in Ireland at the present time everywhere.

CHURCH OF ENGLAND ZENANA MISSIONARY SOCIETY.

There was an encouraging attendance at Princes Hall, Piccadilly, on the occasion of the annual meeting, a few days ago, of the Church of England Zenana Missionary Society. A short report, read by the secretary, Rev. G. Tonge, stated that the year's income amounted to £35,928, or £6180 in excess of that of the previous year; the expenditure amounted to £32,352.

Sir Charles Aitchison, who presided, delivered an address of warm sympathy. The mission stations, scattered at considerable intervals over the face of India, are but small rushlights. The dawn is scarcely come even yet. The addition of nearly thirty millions in ten years to the population of India is a stupendous fact for the Christian as well as the statesman. Within the memory of man heathenism has nearly doubled its numbers. Nothing less than regiments of missionaries will be any use in the face of these hordes; nothing less than heroism in each soldier will keep the regiments as close in array as the soldiers of Christ should always be.

Rev. George Everard, who recently made a tour in India, pointed his women auditors to the 139 millions of their sisters in India, to the woful superstition in which they lay, walking many times round the altars, or placing the names of their gods within hundreds of meal-balls, which they throw into the Ganges. The rope with which we are trying to draw them to Christ has three strands—education, medical aid, Zenana visitation. The schools especially had enchanted him—the Sarah Tucker Institute at Palamcotta, with its 240 girls responsive to every word he was allowed to say to them, and with fifty villages under the same supervision; the little school in Candy, with fifteen daughters of the Rajahs; the Alexandra School in Amritsar, training sixty to eighty girls to assist catechists, one of whose pupils has become Inspector of all the Government girls' schools in Lahore. The village Missions in the Punjab are also most encouraging.

Mrs. Bishop spoke as a traveller who has visited Central Asia, Kashmir, Asiatic Turkey, Arabia, Eastern Asia Minor. The countries she had seen were those whose forms of belief give the most difficulty to Christian teachers. She also had been impressed with the cheerfulness of the Zenana missionaries, and all the more because she was able to measure the monotony of their work, and to contrast their patience with the perennial grumblings of the English abroad. Mrs. Bishop closed with an appeal for Persia and Arabia, a pathetic reference to Miss Tucker, and some very practical suggestions.

Rev. Jani Alli described women's work among the Mohammedans in Calcutta. For eight years the Society's missionaries and he had worked, prayed, rejoiced together, indeed, they had been the first in the field, and more of them were seriously needed.

ANTI-SUNDAY TRAVELLING UNION.

The labours of this Society are much needed. Fully 420,000 railway, tram, omnibus, cab, and steamboat men are at work, more or less unnecessarily, in this country on the Sabbath. The membership of the Union is now more than 13,000, and is steadily increasing. As was remarked by Mr. Gainsford Bruce, the president, at the annual meeting, held in Exeter Hall last Thursday evening, it is no part of the methods of the Union to promote compulsory enactments, but rather to look for success in appealing to the intellect and spiritual sense of a free people. To working-men the Sabbath is of incalculable benefit, and they should see to it that by their Sunday demonstrations, which changes a day of repose into one of turmoil, they are not breaking down the defences of a priceless privilege.

Rev. W. R. Mowll said that if Christian parents rightly instructed their children as to the true nature of the Lord's Day, it would not be desecrated as it is. The institution of a day of rest is a distinct outcome of God's love. Those who induce others through selfishness to work for them on that day violate the command, "Thou shalt love thy neighbour as thyself." Christian liberty is too frequently another name for selfish licence.

That evangelical work does not require Sunday travelling Mr. Frank Cockrem demonstrated from the career of the late Mr. Kirkham, and the history of the Open-Air Mission. Rev. H. E. Heinskey gave an elaborate exposition of the meaning of the often-perverted words, "The Sabbath was made for man." Rev. Dr. J. Gritton said he had lived for twenty-five years among those who laboured for Sunday travellers. He had often heard, with humiliation, their denunciations of the church-goers who use conveyances on Sundays.

LONDON JEWS' SOCIETY.

The eighty-fourth annual meeting of the London Society for Promoting Christianity among the Jews was held on Friday, May 6, in Exeter Hall. Rev. W. Fleming read an abstract of the report, from which it appeared that the aggregate income for the year was £35,368, the expenditure being £39,725. The adverse balance on March 31 was £8190. The Society commenced the year with 130 agents, over half the number being Christian Israelites. There are thirty-seven stations—seven in England, sixteen upon the Continent of Europe, six in Asia (of which three are in the Holy Land) and eight in Africa.

Sir John Kennaway, M.P., who presided, urged the peculiar importance of evangelising Israel. The great movement of the Jews all over the world, more especially owing to the Russian persecution, must have important results. There are now in Palestine between seventy thousand and one hundred thousand Jews; and Jerusalem is a Jewish city, if named after the majority of its inhabitants, for its population of fifty thousand includes thirty thousand Jews.

Archdeacon Hughes-Games, in a vigorous address, said: If missionary enterprise has not succeeded in the world as we could wish, may it not be because the Church of Christ, as a whole has not recognised as a leading feature of the enterprise the priority of the Jews? Did not the great Apostle himself, whose special mission was to the Gentiles, always carry the message to the Jews first, and when they rejected it, then, and not till then, did he turn to the Gentiles? The Jews, too, have a claim upon us on the score of justice. Christendom has, through centuries, persecuted them, and even to-day in Russia they are oppressed, maltreated, outraged. Is it any wonder that the great empire of Russia has been visited with a terrible famine? "Shall I not visit for these things, and shall not my soul be avenged on such a nation?" Frederick the Great said that no nation had ever oppressed the Jew without smarting for it. There is a strange connection between the evangelisation of the world and the conversion of the Jew. See how the prophet puts it: "Arise, shine, for thy light is come." And then what follows? "The Gentiles shall come to thy light, and kings to the brightness of thy rising." It is not until God's light has dawned upon his ancient people that we can expect anything like adequate success in the evangelisation of the world. The return of the Jews to Palestine is obviously very near, and with that return comes the great ingathering of the nations to Christ. Thank God for indications of coming glory.

Mr. Mark Stewart, M.P., pointed out that 1892 years passed from the time of Abraham to the birth of our Lord, and 1892 years have also passed since. He came down upon earth in the nature of sinful man, and during all subsequent time God's ancient people have been battling, struggling, and fighting, punished for their many sins and disobedience. It is supposed that there are between seven and eight millions of Jews in the world, scattered among all nations. It is a miracle that they still survive. After all the persecutions to which they have been subjected is it any wonder that they do not believe in the word "Christian"?

Canon Tristram asked: Why is it that in the countries in which the Jew has been treated the worst he has actually shown the least disposition to amalgamate with or in any way to be assimilated to those who would do anything to assimilate him? Replying to the question, he said he had travelled in the Jewish parts of Russia, and where in the whole of that great empire can any agriculture be found equal to that of the Jews? That is one reason why they were so hated by the powers-that-be in Russia. There is no greater obstacle to the work of the Society in Palestine and other parts of the East than the example of the corrupt Churches of the East. The Yemen Jews in Arabia are the descendants of those isolated before the captivity, and they were willing to listen to the agents of the Society, saying—"We have not rejected the Messiah, and if your Messiah is the true one, at least we are not guilty of his blood, for we were separate from the Jews of Palestine centuries before." Seven hundred miles from Algeria, in Northern Central Africa, there are numbers of what are called Black Jews who use the same argument. Seeds have been dropped here and there, and the result is not ours, but God's.

Addresses were also delivered by Dr. DALMAN, of Leipzig, and Rev. J. MUEHLENBRUCH, of Bucharest.

BRITISH JEWS' SOCIETY.

Mr. GEORGE WILLIAMS presided over a meeting of friends of the British Society for the Propagation of the Gospel among the Jews, on Tuesday last week, in Exeter Hall.

Mr. DUNLOP, the secretary, reported that the Society had twenty-four missionaries and many voluntary assistants at work in connection with seven home and nine foreign stations. There were also four medical missions doing efficient service. The work in East London was hampered by inadequate and badly-ventilated mission-halls.

A peculiar interest attached to the meeting, inasmuch as it was one of a series in celebration of the jubilee of the Society. A jubilee scheme has been drawn up to provide a medical mission at least at each station. Through such agencies the Society is brought more easily into touch with the Jews than is possible in any other way. Two other jubilee proposals are the establishment of a new mission-house in the East-end (where the workers are sadly in want of suitable accommodation), and of homes for inquirers and converts. The Home for Aged Christian Israelites keeps full, but it provides for only seven inmates, and much requires enlargement. The income of the Society last year was £6,160, there being a deficit of £334.

Dr. SINCLAIR, Archdeacon of London, pleaded that the Jews should be won by love and by the fruit of a truly Christian life. The testimony concerning Christianity would be greatly helped by our being more united among ourselves. Rev. R. DAWSON, of the London City Mission, having spoken, a RUSSIAN JEWESS thanked the audience for the kindness shown by English Christians to the poor of her nation.

Revs. MARCUS RAINSFORD, J. B. BARRACLOUGH, F. W. BROWN, and M. NACHIM also addressed the meeting. An appeal, made on behalf of the debt, realised £164, apart from the collection; and efforts are on foot to raise a jubilee fund of £5000.

BARBICAN MISSION TO THE JEWS.

The Archdeacon of LONDON presided over the annual meeting of the Barbican Mission to the Jews, which was held on Friday evening last, in the Council Chamber at Exeter Hall. The superintendent of the work, Mr. C. T. Lipshytz reported that the various agencies are in vigorous operation at the new Mission House, 33, Finsbury-square, E.C. The meetings, Bible-classes, &c., have been attended by 14,221 Jews and Jewesses, to whom the Gospel has been faithfully preached.

One of the incidents reported by Mr. Dornbusch, an assistant in the work, is thus summarised:—"Visiting among Jewish families, I called many times upon Mr. A, an aged man, but every time the door was shut in my face. At last I found an opportunity to speak to him outside his house, and received an invitation to come on a Sabbath evening. One Friday evening I called, when they were singing one of their beautiful hymns. The following is a translation from the Hebrew:—'The Rock of our Salvation, of which we have eaten, Bless, O Believer! We have been satisfied and had abundance, According to the promise of the Lord.' Then the tune changed, and in a soft and mournful voice they chanted: 'In thy mercy have compassion upon thy people, O our Rock, and upon Zion, the habitation of thy glory, and upon the dwelling of the house of our Excellency; the Son of David shall redeem us, the breath of our nostrils is the Lord's Messiah.' The old man said: 'Do you not feel after singing these words that you would like to be one with us again?' 'No,' I answered. 'But you were moved by the words we were singing?' 'Quite so. I am thinking how happy I should be to sit down and sing these words with my own unbelieving brethren and sisters, how I would explain to them who is that 'Rock' of which they sing, and how I found Jesus of Nazareth, the Messiah of whom Moses and the prophets spoke, but whom our fathers rejected.' Then I continued to show unto them that Jesus is the only way, the truth, and the life. I have continued my visits, and been introduced to some of their wealthy relations."

In the course of a brief address the CHAIRMAN referred to the importance of the work. To a very large extent Jews have had Christianity placed before them only in a corrupt form—including, on the one hand, picture-worship, and on the other, the adoration of the Virgin. He thought the foundations of a great work among the Jews of London were being laid in the Barbican Mission, and held that the fact that only £143 was distributed in the form of relief was an answer to the criticism of those who talked of the excessive cost of work among the Jews.

Rev. F. A. C. LILLINGSTON recognised the heroic spirit in which Mr. Lipshytz has gone about his work. The duty of the Church in regard to the evangelisation of Israel was urged, and the blessing which will accrue to the world when the Jews shall receive Christ and become his witnesses to the ends of the earth was the subject of Scripture reference and spiritual contemplation. Having gone through the fire of persecution, and endured privations on account of the Gospel, Mr. Lipshytz can sympathise with those among whom he labours, and God has blessed his exertions to many sorrowing souls of the seed of Abraham.

Mr. T. B. MILLER drew attention to the sure word of prophecy in regard to the Jewish people. Looking at present events as they shape towards the end predicted, he saw much to cheer in the patient waiting for Christ. Revs. J. B. BARRACLOUGH and M. NACHIM also spoke.

THE SPEZIA MISSION.

A meeting in support of this Mission was held in the Council Room, Exeter Hall, on Thursday evening. Rev. E. CLARKE, the founder, made a brief statement, recalling the origin of the Mission, twenty-five years ago, the early difficulties and dangers through the determined opposition of Rome, and tracing the goodness of God as shown in the history of the work. The Bible Schools, which Pope Pius IX. said "gave him more trouble than all other Protestant works in Italy," began with one child, and now there are over five hundred pupils. More than twenty stations have been opened, with forty weekly services and about 3200 in monthly attendance. Besides there is the Victoria Adelaide Orphanage, with twenty-one girl inmates. After touching on the results, the hearing gained, and the souls saved, Mr. Clarke dwelt on the need for help; first, to clear off the debt of £700, and next, to extend the orphanage work and school work, and assure a sufficiency of funds to carry on the mission with efficiency.

Mr. F. A. BEVAN, who presided, emphasized the great value of the Spezia Mission, and pointed out how detrimental to the whole work it is that Mr. Clarke should be compelled to leave the Mission and come home in order to plead for funds. Sufficient ought to be secured by regular subscriptions to permit of this devoted labourer giving himself wholly to the actual work. Having visited the Mission, the Chairman was able to give an encouraging account of its operations. In closing Mr. Bevan stated that Mr. John Cory and himself had agreed to give £100 each, provided the balance of the debt was raised.

Rev. JAMES CULROSS, D.D., recalled how but lately Italy was closed by the dominant power of Rome, and how now the door is wide open for the Gospel. As to Mr. Clarke's work, he had known it from the beginning, and he rejoiced that it was peculiarly the work of a gospeller; and while a work of faith, love, and patience, there has been no boastfulness about it. He trusted God would abundantly prosper his work, and stir his people to support it.

Lieut-Gen. Sir H. M. HAVELOCK-ALLAN, Bart., M.P., said that his dear mother (née Miss Marshman) had frequently visited the work in Spezia, coming back cheered and delighted by what she saw there; hence his own warm interest in this Mission, which he felt ought to be liberally supported.

Rev. JOSEPH ANGUS, D.D., as one who had been present at the birth of the Mission, rejoiced exceedingly in the blessing God has granted thereupon. Long as he had been connected personally with a great missionary society, he was thankful for individual workers—men on whose heart God had laid some special work. He believed Mr. Clarke was peculiarly called of God to the work at Spezia.

Mr. ELIOT HOWARD entirely endorsed all that had been said as to the importance and necessity for this mission work.

Rev. H. H. PULLEN, who has undertaken the duties of a Deputation Secretary, without giving up his own church work, gave some particulars of a plan of collecting a thousand pence, by a thousand people, which he would be glad to see adopted. Mr. Pullen's address is Iona, Ferme Park, Hornsey, London.

PROTESTANT REFORMATION SOCIETY.

Mr. W. J. FRASER presided over the sixty-fifth annual meeting of the Protestant Reformation Society, which was held in the Lower Room of Exeter Hall on Monday last week. The objects of the Society are twofold—viz.: (1) the salvation of Roman Catholics by showing the unscriptural nature of much of their teaching, and presenting the truth in love through the one only Mediator, Jesus Christ; and (2) the preservation of Protestants who were assailed by plausible pretensions or in danger of being perverted by Romish agency.

Rev. G. CLEMENTS presented an abstract of the report, which stated that during last year many thousands of Roman Catholics were visited in their homes by the missionaries, who read and expound the Scriptures to them, and point out in a kindly Christian spirit the unscriptural character of their creed; and some of them had been led to embrace the "truth as it is in Jesus." Three hundred and sixty Protestant educational and Bible classes had been held, attended by about thirteen thousand persons of both sexes. Six hundred lectures had been given, and sermons had been preached in many parts of the country. The publications of the Society during the past year had had a large circulation.

Canon CHRISTOPHER, in a vigorous address, said there are many good Protestants and good Christians who do nothing to win Roman Catholics to Christ. He believed it was due to a want of faith to believe that God would bless the efforts made to bring them to Jesus. But why should they despair? Some of the best Protestants that had ever lived had been not merely Roman Catholics, but Roman Catholic priests, and they were the hardest of all to convert. Remember the case of Luther and the other reformers. The Word of God has not lost its power. He was glad to know that much was being done to prevent Protestants from being perverted to Rome. If the agents of this Society and others would show to the people how impossible it was for Romanism or Ritualism to be true, because the Holy Ghost had never allowed in the Scriptures a minister of the Gospel to be called a sacrificing priest, a great work would be done in fortifying Protestants against the errors of Rome.

Rev. W. R. MOWLL pointed out that wherever Rome goes she hides the Word of God. Rev. F. A. C. LILLINGSTON remarked that on reading the account of the enthronisation of Dr. Vaughan, Roman Catholic Archbishop of Westminster, his spirit burned within him that any one had the audacity to ask them to place their souls under any petticoated trumpery priest who called himself "the Church." Why are the doctrines of Rome so seductive? Because they are the doctrines of men. He openly acknowledged that if he were not a Christian he would be a Roman Catholic; the religion taught by Rome is so clever, so logical, and so attractive to the carnal mind. He thought that to counteract this they ought to teach their young people to know their Bibles.

BAND OF HOPE UNION.

At a meeting in connection with the United Kingdom Band of Hope Union, on Tuesday evening last week, presided over by Mr. SHIRLEY, an encouraging report was presented. The "Million More" scheme has resulted in adding over 500,000 members to the Union; and according to the most recent returns there are in the United Kingdom no fewer than 18,441 Bands of Hope and other juvenile temperance societies, with a membership of 2,613,000 young people, who receive instruction calculated to make them useful men and women.

Large and important meetings were last year held in Scotland, Wales, and Ireland. In London 1723 meetings took place, and a large number of special meetings were addressed by the evening agents of the Union. The school scheme had been well maintained. Special lecturers had visited 2840 schools, and addressed 283,297 children—109,831 of whom reproduced the lessons in the form of essays. 1,243,100 copies of the society's publications had been sold.

The report was unanimously passed, and Mr.

George Williams was re-elected president of the Union. Dublin was chosen for the autumnal meeting of the Union, which will be held in the first week of October.

WOMEN'S TEMPERANCE UNION.

The tenth annual meeting of the East London Women's Christian Temperance Union was held on Monday last week at the Bow and Bromley Institute, which was crowded.

Lady ELIZABETH BIDDULPH presided, and said that all reforms which had been carried out had been more or less slow. She had been much struck by the unanimity with which the Church of England Temperance Society and the British Women's Temperance Association, at their annual meetings, had declared in favour of the abolition of grocers' licences and the prohibition of the sale of intoxicants to children; and she had written to Sir Wilfrid Lawson asking whether it was not possible for something to be done in this direction during the present session. Sir Wilfrid had replied that nothing could be hoped from the present Parliament, and that they must look forward to the next being a good temperance one.

Mrs. PADDON read an abstract from the annual report of the Union. During the year eighty-eight public and other meetings had been held, and there were at the present time 939 members of the Union.

Lady HENRY SOMERSET, who met with a very enthusiastic reception, referred to the proud moment which was hers when she presented the 250,000 English names attached to the world's petition, and said it was almost inconceivable that with the dawn of a brighter day before them they should have to beg men and women to become total abstainers. Such a necessity spoke of the failure of Christianity, and it seemed to her that the pledge should be a matter of course for all who named the name of Christ. Recently she had returned from a country where a broader view was taken of this question. In that land of larger hope there was not a man who dared stand up and defend the drink traffic, and no woman who respected herself ever entered a saloon. What a grand thing it would be if they could say the same of English women. In conclusion, Lady Henry made an eloquent appeal for increased energy in temperance work.

SUNDAY-SCHOOL UNION.

Mr. GEORGE WILLIAMS presided over the annual meeting of the Sunday-School Union, which was held in Exeter Hall a few days ago. The attendance was large, and the proceedings very enthusiastic.

A few figures will show the growth of the Union. In 1882 there were 4868 schools connected with the Union, which in 1892 had grown to 6661; in 1882 the number of teachers was 118,450, in 1892, 156,977; in 1882 the number of scholars was 1,114,343, in 1892 the number reached 1,531,432. The International Bible Reading Association from 11,000 members in 1882, in 1892 had grown to 390,000.

Canon WILBERFORCE, in an address characterised by much ardour, maintained that any man and woman whose life is consecrated to the care and love of children is carrying to their fellow men a proof of their love of Jesus Christ. If he were asked for a definition of education, he would say, "Education is formation of character, and character cannot be formed except by moral decisions made every day; and moral decisions are made by the will, and the will is executive of the conscience, and that is God within your soul, and that has to be open to the love of the Lord, and the channels of the Holy Spirit made clear for it." That was the right work of education. The work of the Sunday-school was supplementing State education, and he thanked God it was being done magnificently by men and women, who, after a hard week's work, and when they might fairly be supposed to take a rest, were labouring with great devotion in Sunday-schools. He would impress upon teachers the importance of realising the dignity of their office; he would ask them to believe in their "apostolic succession," not conferred by the "laying on of hands," but after the order of Melchizedek, by the secret, invisible consecration of the Holy Ghost, for if there was one calling in this world that would not bear poor, flippant, frivolous, careless work it was that of the Sunday-school teacher. The Canon also urged the importance of temperance principles being inculcated into the minds of the young.

Rev. Dr. STEPHENSON, President of the Wesleyan Conference, asked: Is the Church of God doing its best for the children? It is doing much, but he favoured an endeavour to raise the entire Sunday-school movement to a higher level. Sunday-school teaching was loving work, and often skilful work, but the most experienced would admit that, taking the work throughout its whole compass, there was plenty of room for improvement as to the skill and efficiency of the teaching. The speaker maintained that the minister should be the link connecting the Sunday-school with the Church. He called upon teachers to ally themselves with the eternal powers, for words spoken by a man full of the Holy Ghost are different and more effective than utterances without that aid.

Rev. W. J. MILLS, of Walworth-road Baptist Chapel, pointed out that within the next few years hundreds of missionaries would be required. He urged the teachers to consecrate themselves to the Lord, so as to be instrumental in thrusting into the heathen world to usher in the golden age.

CRUELTY TO CHILDREN.

One of the most enthusiastic and impressive meetings of the season was that held in the Mansion House last week on behalf of the National Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Children. The sorrows and wrongs of innocent, helpless children constitute a subject that appeals to the universal instinct of all whose natural affection has not been drowned in drink or turned to gall by some form of sinful self-indulgence. Mr. Benjamin Waugh's platform on these occasions is always a very mixed one, and so it was last week. Distinctions of class and creed in politics and religion were swallowed up in the one desire to plead the cause of the suffering babes.

The LORD MAYOR, who presided for a time, could scarcely find language adequate to express the horror he felt at the state of things revealed in the report. It may be well to reproduce for the enlightenment of our readers a paragraph from the report, in which some of the forms of cruelty discovered by the Society are detailed; it is a horrible catalogue:—

Punishing a child by putting pins into its nostrils putting lighted matches up them; biting a child's wrist till a wound was made, and then burning the wound with lighted matches; burning the hands of a boy of six with matches; biting till they bled the limbs of a seven-months' old baby; forcing bone ring of feeding-bottle up and down the throat of a three-months' old baby till it bled; throwing a little girl of two years, ill of bronchitis, out of its bedroom window, breaking its bones, and ending its life; breaking a two-year old baby's limbs in three places, both arms and a thigh, leaving them untended, when it moaned in its pain, irritably taking it up from its cradle by the broken arms, shaking it by them, and throwing it down again; leaving a baby unlifted out of its cradle for weeks, till toadstools grew around the child out of the rottenness; leaving another to lie for days and nights on mattress alive with maggots; keeping the stumps of little amputated legs sore, to have the child with its little face puckered up in pain, to excite pity; tying a rope round a boy of six, dipping him into canal, leaving him immersed till exhausted, bringing him up, recovering him, and putting him in again, repeating the misery time after time; shutting up for hours in dark closet a two-year-old child; tightly binding the arms together of a three-year-old child, and doing the same and ending its life; keeping a child always in cool cellars till its flesh became green; knocking down with the fist a dying boy; driving out the first teeth of a baby with the fist; cooping up a child for months in room without conveniences, punishing it for "filthing the floor," for food throwing "leavings of plates" on to it, "as you would throw them to fowls"; scourging a child till it is a mass of bruises, then breaking its little jaw in two; tying cords tightly round little thumbs, then tying them, with extended arms, to the foot of a bedstead, then beating it with a thorn-bush.

It is stated in the report that during the year over 8300 cases were dealt with, involving the suffering of nearly twenty thousand children, and of these a very large proportion were found to be serious cases. The claims of the Society appear to be getting recognised by the community at large, for it had an income last year of £27,000. As it was remarked by Mr. COTTON (City Chamberlain), this shows a truly remarkable advance in public favour since the organisation was started, some eight years ago, when the interest shown in the subject was very small.

Among those who spoke warmly on behalf of the Society's operations were the Duke of FIFE, Mr. H. FOWLER, M.P., the Bishop of ROCHESTER, Lord HUGH CECIL, Lady O'HAGAN, Mr. BEN TILLETT, and the Roman Catholic Bishop of PORTSMOUTH. Mr. Fowler waxed really eloquent as he dilated on the iniquities of inflicting cruelty on children, making special mention of the pain that must be undergone by young people in being trained as circus performers. He also called strongly for more stringent preventive legislation in connection with the insurance of very young children, many of whom, it is to be feared, are slowly murdered for the sake of the small amount of insurance money. In his speech Mr. Ben Tillett hinted at the possibility of some of the poorer mothers neglecting their offspring because of their poverty; but this statement was flatly traversed by the Bishop of Portsmouth.

CHRISTIAN COLPORTAGE ASSOCIATION.

A testimony meeting, when many of the colporteurs gave stories of blessing in their districts, preceded the annual meeting held in Exeter Hall (lower) last Friday afternoon, when Lord KINNAIRD presided.

The report presented by Mr. H. D. BROWN, gave many incidents from the journals of the men employed, and stated that 128 colporteurs are now at work who have sold during the past year considerably over a million Bibles, books, periodicals, and Scripture cards, besides distributing six hundred thousand tracts. God has been pleased to bless this work remarkably amongst all classes, and it is noted that infidels, gamblers, spiritualists, and drunkards have been amongst those laid hold of by its means. The balance sheet had originally threatened a serious deficit, but earnest prayer had been made, and God touched the heart of a lady to send £300 for the purpose of clearing off this debt.

Lord KINNAIRD maintained that the Colportage Association is in the highest sense an Evangelistic Society, and is doing very real evangelistic work in town and village. There are many homes which no minister or missionary can enter, but the man with the books finds an open door, and the opportunity of a few faithful words. After a few sympathetic sentences from Mr. T. A. DENNY,

Rev JOHN SMITH, in an eloquent address, rejoiced specially in the fact that the Association keeps close to the Gospel. As a minister of Jesus Christ, he knew there was very great room for colportage work. Some fancy that free libraries and these kind of things have done away with the need for colporteurs, but this is a grave mistake, for the books the people are reading do not bring them nearer God. He knew a good deal of the peasantry and fishermen of Scotland, and was sorry to say that indifferentism was fast spreading, and no more effective means of reaching them existed than that of colportage. Addressing the colporteurs, Mr. Smith proceeded to exhort them to concentration, consecration, and faith in the promise and power of God to bless his own Word.

Mr. H. W. MAYNARD reminded the colporteurs that such work could only be done in the power of the living God. In his mighty strength the weakest can do great things, and even the humble worker going with his pack from door to door may be used to the awakening of the cold and sceptical to a sense of their eternal interests.

Mr. ROBERT PATON asked all present to consider, What are we going to do? Here is one of the best agencies for reaching the indifferent and godless, but can it not be extended very considerably? This work reaches Belgravia as well as Bethnal-green, touches the pampered flunkey as well as the humble villager. This work wins men to God, and nothing could do that but the power of God and the old Gospel which comes from the Cross of Christ. He implored the colporteurs to stand fast and firm on the Word of God as the one foundation of faith.

ROYAL NAVAL SCRIPTURE READERS' SOCIETY.

The Bishop of MARLBOROUGH presided over the thirty-second annual meeting of the Royal Naval Scripture Readers' Society. The report stated that the past year had been one of steady progress, and unusually free from those serious accidents to which the Navy is exposed. The crews number in the aggregate fifty thousand, in 270 vessels, only seventy of these carrying chaplains. There were also nearly twenty thousand others in Marine barracks. The income was barely sufficient to maintain the small number of fifteen readers.

The CHAIRMAN said he had seen much of the results of the Society's work on the South Devon coast and other places. Sailors were, as a rule, very much open to religious impression. He was glad that the Society were attending to the culture of their agents by a system of training so as to raise the standard of their readers. He felt deeply the necessity of habitual reading of the Word of God, and if he knew that all his people were habitual students of the Bible he would not trouble about giving them advice, for nothing in a man's life should take the place of a steady reading of God's Word. The opinion that a religious man was not fit to be a sailor was no longer held, but it was now acknowledged that the better the man the better the sailor.

Admiral GRANT moved the adoption of the report. He referred to the number of sailors who visited in procession the Royal Naval Exhibition, and not one misbehaved himself, and he attributed this to the influence, to a large extent, of the Society's work.

SOUTH AMERICAN MISSIONARY SOCIETY.

The annual meeting of the South American Missionary Society was held in Sion College Hall. Bishop MITCHINSON, who presided, expressed surprise at the small knowledge of the great work done by the Society. Short as had been its history, the Society's work had been of a very glorious character, and had been consecrated again and again by martyrdom. They had been blessed with singular success, and they had been permitted to civilise and Christianise races which had been looked upon as being beyond all such agencies.

Rev. ROBERT J. SIMPSON read the report, which stated that the deficit, amounting to £1050, announced in last year's report, had been made good, and a substantial addition carried to the lately diminished reserve fund. The receipts during the past year had been £11,279.

AGED PILGRIMS' FRIEND SOCIETY.

This Society ministers to the wants of the aged and indigent of the Household of Faith. Last year £7690 were distributed as pensions. The Camberwell Asylum, the Hornsey-rise Asylum, the Brighton Home, and the Stamford-hill Home were duly maintained. The year closed with 1208 beneficiaries on the books. An annual income of £10,500 is required to make the work efficient in all its branches.

Sir ROBERT BIDDULPH, who presided at the annual meeting in Exeter Hall on Monday evening, said the Society ought to receive adequate support and sympathy. Mr. F. A. BEVAN, in a bright, practical speech, showed how affectionate solicitude and tender care were but just claims of the aged and infirm members of the body of Christ. Among the other speakers were Rev. T. Bradbury, Dr. H. Sinclair Paterson, Rev. C. Hemington, Mr. J. Inskip, and Rev. J. C. Martin. The attendance was very large.

MISSION TO DEEP-SEA FISHERMEN.

The friends of the fishermen mustered well on Monday evening, crowding Exeter Hall to the doors, many being, indeed, unable to gain entrance. Undoubtedly the announcement that H.R.H. Princess Louise had consented to be present helped in creating special interest, but, apart from this, the work of the Mission has certainly taken a firm hold on the affections of many.

No formal report was read, but from a statement printed and circulated, it appeared that the work done during the past year by the ten mission-ships was not only extensive but remarkably encouraging in issue. The income, though large, has not fully covered the expenditure.

Ven. Archdeacon SINCLAIR, D.D., moved a resolution acknowledging the splendid results of the Mission's work, and pledging the meeting to increased support. After eloquently dwelling on the dangers and hardships encountered by the men who work the trawling fleets in the great North Sea, the speaker went on to trace something of what the Mission to Deep Sea Fishermen is doing, not merely to heal the sick, cheer the downcast, reform the drunken, but, beside all these, to set before the men, who have so few religious opportunities, the Gospel of salvation. While sincerely loyal to his own Church, he thanked God that this deep-sea work is carried on in a spirit of Christian unity and love, independent of merely denominational associations.

Dr. H. SINCLAIR PATERSON rejoiced chiefly in the medical aspect of the mission work. This form of Christian effort had lain in abeyance, or had been forgotten, for centuries; yet, just as wax which has grown hard may be softened by genial heat to receive an impression, so hearts hardened by sin and folly, by prejudice and ignorance, may be softened by Christian kindness to receive the Gospel message. Medical missions were, he believed, the mission of the future; and one could not but heartily thank God that this Mission had seen its way to carry on so extensively medical mission work in the North Sea.

Sir GEORGE BADEN-POWELL, K.C.M.G., F.R.S., spoke of his deep interest in fishermen and of his hearty interest in all that makes for their well-being.

The Rt. Hon. Lord GEORGE HAMILTON, M.P. (First Lord of the Admiralty), very warmly supported the claims of the Mission to Deep-Sea Fishermen, and in a well weighed address called special attention to the condition of the Newfoundland fishermen, who sorely needed the help of the Mission. He was thankful to learn that it was in contemplation to extend the work to those fog-bound shores, which, indeed, he understood one of the Mission ships had already visited. The fishermen on the west coast of Ireland had also received attention, and for this he was thankful, as their need was great. He trusted the result of this great gathering, and the presence of H.R.H. the Princess Louise, would result in greatly increased support and sympathy.

H.R.H. the Princess LOUISE, accompanied by the Marquis of Lorne, now distributed, amid great applause, certificates of ambulance efficiency to skippers and men of the Mission vessels, speaking to those introduced as having saved lives a few warm, kindly words.

Addresses followed by Mr. F. J. S. Hopwood, of the Board of Trade, the Marquis of Lorne, Messrs. T. B. Miller, W. F. A. Archibald, Dr. Gilbart-Smith, and a number of skippers, who bore testimony to the value of the mission work in the North Sea.

The evening's proceedings were greatly enlivened by the hearty singing of a large number of smacksmen and their wives, who were present on the platform.

MR. G. KIRKHAM'S FUNERAL.

THERE was a large concourse of sorrowing friends at the funeral last Thursday of this well-known and highly-esteemed brother. Many open-air preachers were present to show their sense of the deep loss sustained by the Open-Air Mission through the decease of its secretary. The funeral service at Tollington-park Congregational Church (of which Mr. and Mrs. Kirkham were members) was conducted by the brother-in-law of Mr. Kirkham, Rev. Eben Evans, of Great Yarmouth, and Rev. Wm. Pierce, pastor of the church, the latter giving the address. At the grave in the New Southgate Cemetery there were brief and sympathetic utterances from Mr. R. C. Morgan, as representing Mr. Kirkham's many personal friends; Mr. Turner, on behalf of the Council of the Pure Literature Society; and Mr. Young, a member of the Committee of the Open-Air Mission. The geniality of disposition, kindness to the poor, general consistency of life, and indefatigable zeal in connection with open-air work shown by our departed friend were dwelt upon.

A MESSAGE.

C. H. S.

WEEP not o'er me, but, o'er yourselves, go, weep
With plenteous cause for sorrow; go, and pray,
In that ye grieved me with affliction deep
When from your steadfastness ye fell away.

Weep not for me, but for your children weep,
Groaning with anguish when it shall be said,
The day is here, the whirlwind wild to reap,
And not a crumb remains of living bread:

When all shall mourn, and consolation fail them,
To every violence of wrath exposed; [them,
When they shall long for death, nor death shall hail
Because to deadly heresy espoused.

I was no sentimentalist, ye know—
Ye may the good old Puritans admire,
Yet grip no word of theirs that does not glow
With solar heat of God's baptizing fire.

I, as but one plain warrior in the strife,
Proclaim'd my Lord, disclaim'd corrupting teachers,
My soul surrendered to the Word of life,
Nor put my trust in princes nor in preachers.

The gold I found in God's own Treasury,
That gave I you, at his command who rules,
From all the dross of human frailty free,
Take it, and shun the wisdom of your schools.

Speak not of broken hearts for one like ye,
Raised of God's infinite love from grace to glory—
All is of Him—He gave his Son for me,
And forty years to preach Christ's thrilling story.

Wash'd in the fountain of his blood, from sin,
Clothed in his wedding-robe of glist'ring whiteness,
Rejoice for me so lately entered in
To sing His praise with ever-hallow'd brightness.

THE NEEDS OF SOUTH AMERICA.

THE Evangelisation Society for South America, in an appeal just issued, says: "South America, with its more or less twenty-three millions of Spanish and Portuguese descendants, its three millions of emancipated blacks, and its four millions of scattered Indians—almost wholly unevangelised—may well be called 'The Neglected Continent,' at least, so far as England is concerned. The American Churches have sent a fair number of men to Brazil and the Argentine Republic, and they are doing a noble work. But what are the British Churches doing? The Church of England is represented by the 'South American Missionary Society'; the Bible and Tract Societies have also been at work for years, and scattered large numbers of Scriptures. But beyond this the work has been left to individual effort.

"British Churches have not moved for Brazil, and at the present time (excluding the Guianas), about a dozen men and women—most of whom have gone out from Dr. Grattan Guinness' Training Institute, and a few members of the Salvation Army—represent the total force of British Christian workers in that vast field. And of this little band, while some have received help from a few friends at home, the greater part support themselves by teaching, &c., leaving them but little or no time for itinerant work.

"Almost the whole of the Continent is open to the Gospel, and those who are labouring there are crying for reinforcements. In Brazil religious liberty has been proclaimed, and Mr. H. Maxwell Wright, during twelve months' evangelisation, found open doors everywhere—from Manaos, on the Amazon, in the North, to Curityba, the capital of Paraná, in the South. The Evangelisation Society for South America has been formed to try, with God's blessing, in some little way to help on the preaching of the Gospel to these neglected peoples, and will concentrate its efforts, to begin with, on Brazil, which, at the present time, owing to a variety of circumstances, offers peculiar facilities for evangelisation. The Society will seek to work much on the lines of the China Inland and kindred Missions. Where are the soldiers ready to follow the Captain of our Salvation to this Continent?"

Further information may be obtained from Mr. George Maynard, Honorary Secretary, 34, Gracechurch-street, London.

Mr. Maxwell Wright purposes to start this month for Brazil, to commence work in and around Pernambuco. He hopes to secure the services of some native evangelists, and will be glad to have an interest in the prayers of Christians, that the power of God may be manifested in the direct salvation of sinners.

AMERICAN STUDENTS & GOSPEL WORK

FOR several years past there has been a movement among American divinity students for spending the summer vacation in evangelistic work, so as to fit them better for the practical duties of the pastorate on which they hope to enter. During the past two seasons a little band of these young men, under the leadership of Mr. F. T. Pierson and Mr. R. S. Goldsbury, graduates of Princeton College, have engaged in this work in different parts of the States with much acceptance. Reports from the other side say that their endeavours have been successful in attracting the people, and have been crowned with blessing in many genuine decisions for Christ.

This band of consecrated students propose making an evangelistic tour in Great Britain this summer, as the way may open up. Messrs. Pierson and Goldsbury are already in this country, and three other friends expect to join them by the end of May. Mr. Pierson preaches, and his four companions form a Gospel quartette. In their past efforts in this direction they have gained the esteem and approval of Christian friends where they have worked, and they come among us very highly recommended. At the Aldersgate-street noon prayer-meeting on Monday last, Mr. Pierson and Mr. Goldsbury both briefly addressed the meeting, and gave interesting details of the work in which they have been engaged. Any communications from friends desiring the services of these young brethren can be sent to our care.

NOTES ON DAILY READINGS.

SUNDAY, MAY 22.—GENESIS XXXIII.

THERE are many things in life worse in the anticipation than in the reality. This meeting with Esau which Jacob had so much feared turned out to be harmless and even affectionate. We cannot expect such deliverances to happen unless we are right with God. There must have been the meeting with God by the Jabbok ford in the evening if there shall be the affectionate embrace between the brothers on the coming day. Our ways must please the Lord before we can expect Him to make even our enemies to be at peace with us. We must have power with God before we can have power with man and prevail. Too often we allow our peace to be broken by taking up weapons in our own defence. We run hither and thither in agitation and alarm. But there is a more excellent way—that of leaving the entire burden of dealing with our assailants in the hands of God. He is best able to vindicate us. Commit yourselves to Him that judgeth righteously. Fret not to do evil; and you will find that He who guides the course of streams and rivers can so affect the thought and heart that He will make Esau whom you dread one who will be willing to defend and succour you. God covers the head of his people in the day of battle. When the enemy shall come in like a flood then the Lord will lift up a standard against him. So will you come in peace to your destined place.

MONDAY, MAY 23.—GENESIS XXXIV.

Poor Dinah! She was the only daughter, and perhaps longed for other society than she could find in the tents of her people. She went out to see the daughters of the land, to show her jewels and dress, and to study theirs. Ah! how little she guessed what would be the result of her visit, in her own ruin, the death of her lover, and the destruction of the little city where she had been welcomed. How heavily do our slightest approaches to the world avenge themselves on us, and even our children may entangle us by their desire to see a little more of the world. It is not easy to steer the family life amid the rocks and quicksands of the present day worldliness. Surely the true secret is to make the home so attractive that our daughters shall not be tempted to go out to see the daughters of the land. Our Ruths would not leave our fields if we dropped more handfuls on purpose for them! But as to the treachery of these two brethren, it was atrocious and utterly inexcusable. Their sin was mentioned by Jacob's dying lips, and their whole future history was affected by their act; so there is a time of retribution for crimes like theirs at the judgment-seat and in eternity. How sad when the actions of the professed followers of God make their names to stink.

TUESDAY, MAY 24.—GENESIS XXXV.

How often we hear that summons ringing through our hearts: Arise, go up to Bethel and dwell there—especially after some terrible outbreak of sin, or some marvellous deliverance. Get back to where you used to stand, do as you used to do, love with the old true and tender love. And at such times we put away the evil things that had accumulated between ourselves and God, encumbering the hidden chambers of our hearts, and rendering fellowship impossible. Are we quite free of strange gods? It is a noble thing when a man not only buries his own idols, but induces a whole camp to do the same. And note, that though we have forfeited all claim on God by our sin, and have deserved the hatred and vengeance of our fellows, yet if we get sincerely back to God He will become our rear-guard, preventing the pursuit of past errors and sins. Our progress through life, like Jacob's, may be marked by the graves of our dear ones. The old and faithful nurse, the beloved wife, the aged father—one after another pass away. But if God appears, if on our putting away known sin we pass again into the radiance of his manifested grace and favour; if El-Shaddai commands us to be fruitful and multiply, so that we become the parents of a spiritual seed—amid all our tears and sorrows there is comfort and peace and the beginning of the everlasting joy.

WEDNESDAY, MAY 25.—GENESIS XXXVI.

This chapter is all that is devoted to Esau's greatness, though it must have bulked out pretty considerably before the eyes of contemporaries. This list of dukes, these rich possessions, this long line of descendants, this great kingdom which he founded, all evidence the success and wealth of his life. How great the contrast between him and his brother Jacob, the pilgrim, cursed in his children, and destined to die as an exile in Egypt. And is not this a specimen case of myriads more? The men of this world, whose eyes stand out with fatness, and have more than heart could wish, seem to have a richer, happier lot than the children of the kingdom. But it is only when we judge according to appearances that we think or say so. There is no real satisfaction outside God. Sad and gnawing thoughts are only kept at bay by the eager pursuits of business or pleasure. Out of the very abundance of their lives their greatest sorrows and anxieties are apt to spring. At last death comes and strips away all, and lands their votaries naked on the shores of eternity. Oh, it is better far to be numbered amid the pilgrim host, to suffer in the tents of Jacob, and to wait for God to give the land according to his purpose and plan.

THURSDAY, MAY 26.—GENESIS XXXVII.

The story of Joseph is that of Christ in miniature. Let us look into the mirror for traits of his beauty and glory, which would dazzle us if we tried to behold them on his face. How early in life we begin to suffer from the malevolence of others. But in most lives there is a doting love which helps to alleviate the anguish. Dreams of empire pass before many young hearts, but we must be tested first. The embassy on which Jacob sent his beloved son is strangely analogous to the mission of the Son by the Father that He should be the Saviour of the world. And in the swift obedience that answered, "Here am I," and that started forthwith from Hebron, the city of fellowship, to Shechem, identified with former atrocities, we have a touching, lovely emblem of that glad alacrity with which our Lord undertook our redemption. Oh, blessed Jesus, we adore Thee that no thought of what men would do to Thee, deterred Thee from the work to which Thou didst set thine hand. But that reception, that pit, that sale, that sending away into captivity, that getting rid of the faithful and true witness, that vesture dipped in blood, that agony of the old father—how eloquently these speak of scenes that cluster around Gethsemane and Calvary, and in which our sins had a part. It seems as if we behold as in a mirror the betrayal, crucifixion, blood-shedding, and resurrection of our Lord.

FRIDAY, MAY 27.—GENESIS XXXVIII.

This glimpse into the manners of the time is sad enough, and especially because we learn how far the corruption of the people had infected the chosen family. There were some good things in Judah, for it was he that pleaded so earnestly that they should rather sell Joseph than murder him; and in his intercession for Benjamin there are many traces of a tender, generous nature. But he was the creature of passion, and yielded to shameful sin. How much had to be done to this people before it could become the leading factor in the purification and salvation of the world. But nothing is impossible with God. And it seems as if his divine hand here draws aside the veil, to show us how desperately corrupt the material was out of which he wrought so fair a fabric as a John, a Mary of Nazareth, or a Paul.

SATURDAY, MAY 28.—GENESIS XXXIX.

Ungodly families and employers probably owe more than they realise to the presence in their midst of those who love God. The days of outward prosperity are even more full of temptation than those of adversity. It is in the tropical forest that the venomous serpents lie hid. When temptation and opportunity meet our case is hard indeed. At such times nothing but the grace of God can hold us back. And it was not as though the temptation presented itself only once. It presented itself again and again, so that the young heart was able to consider it in all its insinuating attractions. But the battle had already been fought out. The royal answer had probably been laid up in the heart long before, forged perhaps in the conflict of lonely hours. But whether then or at the supreme hour there was no flinching. The thought of God and what He willed was the final answer. How great a contrast between this sweet youth and Judah in the previous chapter. But what a reward, to be suspected, thrown into the filthy hole of the prison, compelled to associate with the vilest. Is that all? Will God not vindicate? Shall he not emerge again into the light of sun? Yes, but not yet; he must be perfected by the things that he suffers, that he may become governor over Egypt and saviour of his father's house.

NEBUCHADNEZZAR'S DREAM—Dan. ii. 36-49.

GOLDEN TEXT: Heb. iv. 13.

THE whole story of this dream is deeply interesting. The dreamer was Nebuchadnezzar, the king of the proud city of Babylon. Sleep departed from him (1). His thoughts were full of his kingdom, and its possible future (29); and God granted him a picture of its future in this dream. In the morning the dream itself was forgotten, though it had left a deep impression upon Nebuchadnezzar. The wise men, skilful in explaining mysteries, were called (2) If they could interpret, and so reveal the future, it was an easier thing to recall what had already taken place (9). For their failure they were doomed to die, the king being an absolute despot. Daniel came to the rescue (14-16). His three friends helped by prayer (17-19), and the dream was revealed to him. The Golden Text was proved true. Secret things belong to God, and are revealed to his people in answer to prayer. Recall the dream—the great image with head of gold, breast and arms of silver, belly and thighs of brass, legs of iron, and feet of iron and clay. Then the Little Stone which smites and destroys this image, and in its place becomes a kingdom, universal and everlasting. The lesson opens at the interpretation of the vision.

The four different parts of this image represent the four world-empires which were to arise in the earth to the end of the present dispensation. These four have appeared.

1. The Babylonian — represented by the head of gold (37, 38). Power in the hands of Nebuchadnezzar was of the most absolute character. God gave it to him in its most perfect form. He did according to his own will (iv. 21, 22); even the lives of his subjects were at his command (i. 10; iii. 6). Why should not this monarch continue? It was more difficult to acquire than to maintain it. Yet the prediction said it should fall, as it did.

2. The Medo-Persian—represented by the breast and arms of silver (39). This took the place of the Babylonian. Cyrus, who took Babylon in the days of Belshazzar (v. 28-30), was himself the subject of prophecy (Isa. xlv.) long before he appeared. The change from gold to silver represents the inferior character of this kingdom. This may refer either to the base and cruel character of the successors of Cyrus, who are described as "the worst race of men that ever governed an empire," or to the loss of absolute power. See proof of this in chapter vi., where Darius is evidently the helpless tool of his nobles. Power had been abused in the first kingdom; it was therefore diminished in the second.

3. Grecian—represented by belly and thighs of brass (39). That this is the Grecian is clear from viii. 21, where also Alexander, the first king, is mentioned. Though more extensive than the Medo-Persian, this was inferior in governmental power. Alexander's power was acquired by his conquests. When he died he left no successor able to continue his kingdom. It was ultimately divided into four parts, as another prophecy foretold (vii. 6; viii. 22).

4. The Roman, represented by the legs of iron (40). Iron is a still more inferior metal, and the deterioration of power in this kingdom fulfils the prophecy. The emperor was the choice of the people, and his power was dependent upon them. Yet iron is also suggestive of strength; and this feature is much insisted on in the prediction (40), and was remarkably fulfilled in the Roman Empire. One writer speaks of it as "a colossal empire of force," and another speaks of the "iron monarchy of Rome."

This was to be the last world-kingdom before the setting up of the Kingdom of the Son of Man. And though intercourse between nations was never so free as now, yet it is remarkable that no other universal empire has appeared. How could prophecy foretell this except it was spoken by God?

The divided condition of this empire is indicated by the ten toes of iron and clay. Probably the mingling of these two represents the modern attempts at government of the people by the people. Ultimately the divisions of this empire will be literally ten (42, 43; vii. 24).

5. The Kingdom of the Son of Man is represented by the little stone (44). This is, without doubt, Jesus Himself (Matt. xxi. 42, 44, 45), who is either the corner-stone upon whom the whole arch depends, a stumbling-stone as He was to the Jews (Rom. ix. 33), or a falling stone as to this image. Which is He to us?

This prophecy describes not a gradual, but a sudden work; not the absorption of these kingdoms into the Kingdom of God, but the destruction of the whole fabric of Gentile government. Seek an interest in that Kingdom which cannot be moved. (Heb. xii. 27-29.)

Nebuchadnezzar was deeply impressed by the revelation and interpretation of his dream (47). We are not to suppose that Daniel accepted the homage which he sought to pay him (46), though he did accept the exalted position to which the king raised him (48, 49.) How well would it have been for Nebuchadnezzar if he had not so soon forgotten the lesson! Is he the only one who has stifled convictions?

Letters to the Editor.

MR. AKED AND THE BAPTIST UNION.

DEAR SIR,—I am glad to see you so boldly challenge, in this week's issue, Mr. Aked's speech at Bloomsbury in the Assembly of the Baptist Union. If that speech was not clever it was cunning, and completely shunted the whole question. To a few in the Union it was a sweet relief, and hailed with undisguised delight. To the majority, though, it was a painful farce, a bitter irony on the whole situation.

But since the meeting and the speech, many things have leaked out of which the huge majority of the Union knew nothing. My letter to the papers has brought letters to me from all parts of the country, and now things are not what they seemed. Mr. Aked's speech is challenged, questioned, and denied. I have before me in writing, from those in Liverpool who know the facts and history of the Social Purity Movement, the clearest, flattest contradiction of Mr. Aked's statements at Bloomsbury. It is not a question of Theology, but of morality—of truth or falsehood. There was no mistaking Mr. Aked's statement about who shut up eight hundred brothels. He used no veiled language or involved terms. He made it plain, certain, absolute, that Mr. Armstrong and he did shut up the brothels. Here are his clear, confident words, as reported in The Freeman for April 29:—

> Mr. Armstrong represents in Liverpool not a negation, not a denial of the divinity of Christ, so much as he represents to more than half a million of people in the second City of the Empire a man who has closed eight hundred brothels in twelve months.

Having said that, and much more about Mr. Armstrong's heroic deeds, he links himself with his hero, and says:—

> We drove the legal adviser of the big brewers off the Watch Committee, of which he had been chairman. We revolutionised the whole policy of Liverpool, and I tell you, sir, that in the course of twelve months (I have brought with me the official report), busy as the Devil is, we had closed eight hundred such houses in the city. Our chief constable has reported as well that the number of women of known ill-fame in Liverpool is now reduced by one-half. This is the work of a man who is theologically a denier of the Divinity of Christ.

Now it was just that statement that carried everything before it in the Union. It was not the speaker, but the statement of such an unspeakable blessing as the closing "of eight hundred brothels in twelve months, and reducing the number of women of known ill-fame in Liverpool by one-half." And now it is forced home upon us that the whole statement is false. The work was well-nigh done before Mr. Armstrong had anything to do with it, and before Mr. Aked arrived in Liverpool. The man who had done the work, and knows every step that has been taken, writes, "A more barefaced statement than Mr. Aked's I never read."

I am told that the Baptist Union has nothing to do with a man's theological views. I wonder if it has anything to do with the integrity and moral straightforwardness of its members. If not, is it not time it had? What Mr. Aked stated in its assembly is either true or false. It is distinctly contradicted, privately and publicly. I wonder what Mr. Aked has to say.

He has said much about the speeches and the resolution made and passed at the Union meeting, and laughs the whole thing to scorn. He has not hesitated to betray the confidence that Rev. C. Williams and others reposed in him about the resolution. In Plain Truth for May, page 4, we read:—

> There can be no harm done now in revealing a secret. Before the resolution was given to the denomination by the Press it was submitted to Mr. Aked, who promised to support it. There was something unspeakably entertaining in the spectacle of eager disputants fighting over the resolution which they believed to be an attack upon Mr. Aked, while those behind the scenes knew that Mr. Aked was pledged to speak in favour of the resolution, and that Mr. Meyer had accepted the situation.

Could anything be more pitiable than this whole business?

But this is not all. Having exposed the secret arrangement made with him to come and support the resolution, Mr. Aked proceeds to expound it. In his speech he assured the Union that he accepted the resolution, in words that could not be misunderstood. Here they are:—

> And for myself I say, and I ask you to accept it with the frankness with which I have tried to speak to you, that I join hands entirely with you in the plain grammatical meaning, and in the full complete spirit of the letter and of the purpose of the resolution which Mr. Williams has submitted this afternoon.

Now let us hear this same gentleman on the same subject in another place:—

> We are dead against the compromise of principle and the tampering with conviction. And as we have done nothing in the past out of harmony with the plain and grammatical meaning of that resolution or with its spirit, so we shall do nothing in the future inconsistent with it. It is open to us or any Baptist minister to occupy the pulpit next Sunday or a dozen times over if this can be done without sacrifice of principle; and whether it can or not is a question to be decided by every church for itself, or by each minister for himself, according to time and circumstance....

And so it would be open, with that resolution on the minutes of the Baptist Union, for Mr. Aked to invite a Unitarian minister any Sunday, and he might go to a Unitarian chapel, and both preachers might discourse upon our common Christianity.

Is that the plain meaning of the resolution? Did Mr. Williams move it and Mr. Meyer second it, and the Union vote for it, to sanction for ever the exchange of pulpits with Unitarians? Most assuredly not. I know the Baptist Union well, and venture to say this cannot be the intention of its vote. Under this stigma it cannot honourably rest. It has passed two declarations of A DISTINCTLY EVANGELICAL BELIEF AND PRACTICE within four years. Are these to be flung to the winds and trampled underfoot by a few who challenge or deny nearly all the great truths which some of us count dearer than life? I trow not.

I venture to plead lovingly and earnestly with all my evangelical brethren to rally to the old standard and with one voice say, "We will have no parlance with aught or any that questions or denies the proper Divinity of our Holy Saviour." For one, I am prepared to be called narrow, bigoted, or anything else, but, God helping me, I will be true to my Lord and his Holy Word. I am confident many others in the Union will do the same.—I am, Sir, yours very sincerely,

W. CUFF.

ARMY CHAPLAINS AND GOSPEL WORK.

DEAR SIR,—I saw a note in a recent number of THE CHRISTIAN stating that difficulties have been raised in the way of evangelistic work amongst soldiers and sailors in garrison towns and elsewhere. I hope, however, that this is not so general as your correspondent thinks. May I suggest that you should invite readers to give you particulars of such opposition? I am sure that the friends in Parliament and elsewhere of Miss Weston, Miss Robinson, and other similar efforts, would be glad to bring the matter before the authorities, as it appears to me that we are rather past the day when such action would be allowed.—Yours faithfully,

KINNAIRD.

1, Pall Mall East, London, S.W.

SIR,—I read with surprise and concern the allegations in your issue of 7th inst. against the Army chaplains of the Church of England, headed by the Chaplain-General.

As soon as I possibly could I saw the Chaplain-General, who knew nothing whatever of Miss Robinson's matter. So much for that. With regard to the general allegation—it is untrue: the door was never so wide open as now to outside evangelistic effort. I corresponded immediately with the senior chaplains of the troops at Portsmouth and Netley. What is their reply?

Allegation in "Christian."	Chaplain's Reply.
I. "Miss Robinson's meetings in barracks at Portsmouth have been forbidden at the request of the Chaplain."	I. "This is absolutely false. I have heard of such meetings after they have been held, so that I could not have forbidden those. Once only did I hear that such a meeting was to be held by one of Miss Robinson's representatives, and so far from this being forbidden by 'request of the chaplain,' my then assistant chaplain himself attended it."
II. "The men are told not to go to the Soldiers' Institute."	II. "This is absolutely false."

And now for Netley. I have lived for some years near Netley but I have never heard of Miss Robinson's ladies visiting that hospital, and, considering it is nearly twenty miles from Portsmouth, it is extraordinary they should. The Chaplain's reply to my letter is as follows:—

Statement in "Christian."	Chaplain's Reply (Netley).
"Her ladies have been refused permission to visit the Hospital at Netley. As we understand, this was done by desire of the chaplains."	"No such visit has been made to Netley Hospital for some years past; and when recently the authorities were asked if such were desired, the Chaplains and officiating clergy of every denomination unanimously answered in the negative."

I now turn to your soldier correspondents, and the visits of the chaplains to the hospitals. It is alleged "if they visit hospital, it is only to take comic and general newspapers round." I will venture to affirm this to be the very worst kind of falsehood—that is, a falsehood built up on the stratum of truth. I have not the least doubt (though I have no authority for saying so) that many a chaplain has taken the poor fellows in hospital, where cunni plays so terrible a part, something to enliven their weary hours in the way of comic, illustrated, and general literature, this being a means to an end. I have done so myself hundreds of times, and certainly shall do so again. I should consider any man who wants to reach the soldier, lacking in common-sense if he could not at times wisely give secular literature which was both good and amusing as a means to an end. Is it a sin to read a comic paper? or to have a good laugh? If so, I am one who can enjoy both.

Again, it is alleged, "the chaplains are also trying to stop the distribution of tracts in barracks." Is this so? I have distributed through the army, at home and abroad, in the last eighteen months, nearly one hundred thousand anti-infidel tracts, besides a large quantity of religious and other literature, through the medium of the chaplains, officers, and men, and the former not only took a keen interest in it, but many subscribed to the fund to provide the same, an evidence of how little reliance can be placed upon the accuracy of many soldier correspondents, as I have had ample experience of for years past. Allow me to inform you that Mrs. Evered Poole and I are in communication with very many regiments, at home and abroad. Being thus brought into close touch with the inner life of the Army, we can speak with a great degree of accuracy, and I have no hesitation in saying these statements are untrue.

These paragraphs are followed, apparently to emphasize the same, by a reference to Truth, and its bitter attack on the Chaplain-General in the last few months. He can afford to be, and is wisely and discreetly silent, knowing whence it comes.

Why does not the editor of Truth, if he has any real cause of complaint against the administration of the Chaplain's department, or any abuse to rectify, bring the same before the House of Commons, and ask the Secretary of State a few pertinent questions? The reason is obvious—he would then get the snubbing he so richly deserves. Unfortunately the large majority of the public do not know what the veriest tyro in military matters knows, that the Chaplain-General acts only with the authority and approval of the Secretary of State and Commander-in-Chief. I confidently appeal to the Army, officers and men, whether one could be found as Primate of the Army more able, just, and generous, with a truer and keener desire for the soldier's best interests, and who more universally commands the respect of both officers and men, than Dr. Edghill.—Yours faithfully,

W. T. EVERED POOLE.

Rockholme, Southampton.

[We have no doubt this will be replied to in our next issue.—ED.]

The following is from the report of the proceedings in the House of Commons, Thursday, May 12, 1892:—

Mr. Samuel Smith asked the Secretary of State for War whether he is aware that for many years Miss Robinson has devoted herself to mission work in the Army at Portsmouth with much acceptance:—If he will explain why Miss Robinson's meetings in barracks at Portsmouth have been forbidden, at the request of the chaplain, and her ladies have been refused permission to visit the hospital at Netley, and whether the Army chaplains are trying to stop the distribution of religious tracts in barracks:—And whether he is aware that there exists at the present moment among many of the senior chaplains great dissatisfaction with the conduct of the Chaplain-General.

MR. BRODRICK:—I am aware of the good work which Miss Robinson has carried on for many years at Portsmouth. Inquiries are being made with regard to the alleged interference with her meetings in barracks there. Soldiers of all denominations are treated in Netley Hospital. The chaplains of all denominations objected to the distribution of tracts by outside visitors, on the ground that the peace and harmony now prevailing would be disturbed. The Secretary of State is not aware that there is among any class of chaplains dissatisfaction with the conduct of the Chaplain-General. On the contrary, the recent attacks upon him in certain newspapers called forth spontaneous expressions of confidence in his administration from all classes of chaplains.

Y.M.C.A. TRIP TO SWITZERLAND.—A holiday tour will be made through the Bernese Oberland, from June 10-23. Arrangements have been made which will afford an opportunity for members of the Y.M.C.A. and their friends (young men) to spend their holidays amidst the grand mountain scenery of Switzerland, at a moderate cost. The route has been chosen under the direction of a gentleman possessing a thorough knowledge of the country. The party (which will be personally conducted) will be limited to a certain number. The cost of the tour will be: Members and associates of any Y.M.C.A., £8 5s.; young men (non-members of Y.M.C.A.), £8 15s. Application for tickets accompanied by deposit (£1) should be made at once to the Secretary, Y.M.C.A., 186, Aldersgate-street, London, E.C.

THE SALVATION ARMY FUNDS.—In an article in The War Cry General Booth thus refers to the serious condition of the Army funds: "It will be remembered that I only anticipated being able to succeed with the Darkest England Scheme on the understanding that one hundred thousand pounds were given for its commencement, and that thirty thousand pounds were afterwards contributed annually for its development and maintenance. Of the thirty thousand pounds required for this year only some four thousand pounds has been furnished so far, which, together with the deficiency of last year, has all but brought me to a standstill—anyway, leaves me no alternative but to appeal to those who encouraged me to commence the undertaking, and to others who are in sympathy with it, for that practical assistance which alone can enable me to go forwards."

Temperance Notes.

Out of 2747 ministers of the Congregational body in England and Wales 2034 are known to be abstainers.

The publicans of Wakefield, becoming alarmed for the future of their trade, have formed a Protection association.

The May number of Our Mothers and Daughters, contains a temperance appeal to mothers by Miss Frances Willard, which is fitted to do much good.

The Cheshire County Council has refused to petition Parliament in favour of Sunday closing, mainly on the ground that it was outside its functions.

The Bromley (Kent) justices refused to transfer the licence of a Beckenham public-house to an applicant twenty-three years old, on the ground that he was too young.

The cashier of a large ironworks in Yorkshire states that on pay-day £40,000 is paid to the workmen in wages, and within an hour one half of the money is in the publicans' hands.

The Weald of Kent Temperance Societies have decided not to vote for either of the candidates for the constituency at the General Election, because they are not in favour of Sunday closing.

The licensing question is still causing considerable stir in Manchester. It is evident that the successful opposition to the drink licence at the Palace of Varieties is likely to be far-reaching in its results.

Mr. Johnstone has called the attention of the Home Secretary to the issuing of handbills by publicans offering rewards to children purchasing beer. Mr Matthews states that the Commissioner of Police has taken steps in the matter.

An Essex vicar boasted the other day he had a tankard of beer on his return from church on Sunday mornings and two if he wanted it, while before evening service he had Scotch whiskey. Probably there are few such vicars in these days, when the evil of drink is recognised.

Temperance meetings are now held in every part of Christendom at all hours and in most unaccustomed places—the railway waiting-room, the blacksmith's shop, the rink; in summer the band-stand and the sea-shore. All workers are asked to establish and maintain these free-hearted, open-handed gatherings for the people.

A brand of whisky is advertised, called "Horn of Plenty." On this a temperance writer remarks, they have chosen the name wisely, for out of the thing designated shall come

> Plenty of poverty, plenty of pain,
> Plenty of sorrow and plenty of shame,
> Plenty of broken hearts, hopes doomed and sealed,
> Plenty of graves in the potter's field.

The Daily Chronicle, commenting on a sad case of attempted suicide by a woman driven to desperation by her husband's drunkenness, remarks on the boast of the liquor traffic, at its conference at Portsmouth last week, that it has an invested capital of £120,000,000. The Chronicle says "its swollen revenues are constantly added to at the expense of such homes as that of this unfortunate victim."

At the annual meeting of the Herts Congregational Union at Wheathampstead, Rev. H. Andrews devoted a large portion of his presidential adress to the drink question, saying, "I fearlessly assert here this morning that the charges made against strong drink are proved up to the hilt, and this being so, I maintain the time has come when the Churches of Christ should set themselves to sweep away the desolating evil from our land."

Mr. J. W. Lowther stated last week in the House of Commons that the French Government had not yet seen their way to ratify the North Sea Liquor Traffic Convention. It had, however, been submitted to the Chamber, and it was hoped that, in the interests of the fishermen of all the nationalities which took a part in the North Sea fisheries, the Chamber might be able to assent to the unanimous conclusions of the Conference.

In Austria a remarkable appeal has been made to the "Upper House," in which the evil effects of immoderate drinking, both morally and physically, on the individual, his family, and the community, are enlarged upon, and the Government petitioned to enact a law, whereby any who, through the excessive use of intoxicating liquors, have weakened the will-power, and are thus incapable of self-control, can be placed under control in an Inebriate Asylum.

In a recently-published volume, "The Pinch of Poverty," the writer remarks: "It is a terrible thing to say, but as true as terrible, that a large proportion of the English poor are born to drink, just as the Esquimaux are born with a taste for food specially suited for an Arctic climate, or the Fijian to consider the shedding of blood not a crime, but a glory. They are born in a vitiated atmosphere, one of the especial effects of which is in practice found to create a taste for stimulants."

The Manchester chief-constable has issued a special report, with the avowed aim of vindicating his policy as regard the vendors of intoxicating drinks, and of showing that the city police force is doing its duty. There are 533 fully licensed houses, being an increase of forty-five; also 2548 beer and wine houses, an increase of 454. No fewer than forty-one fully licensed houses were proceeded against during the year, with the result that twenty-three were convicted and eighteen acquitted.

Evangelistic Notes.

Mr. Henry Varley hopes shortly to visit Banbury, where he has aforetime been blessed to many.

Ireland.—Rev. Jas. Kirkwood has just held a series of successful mission services in the Methodist Church, Kingstown.

Mr. W. H. Gorham (of the Evangelization Society) has commenced a tent mission, intended to last four months, and to be held in various villages around Doncaster. Many will, doubtless, pray for rich blessing.

Rev. E. Brentnall has concluded a most interesting mission in South Gosforth (Newcastle). Testimony is borne to blessing received, while a mission band has been formed and Christians set to work as never before.

Lydd, Kent.—The evangelistic services held in this town after the close of the various places of worship on Sunday evening and promoted by the Lydd Y.M.C.A. are proving fruitful, and it is hoped that much spiritual good will be reaped.

Ashford, Kent.—A special mission is being conducted at the Friends' Meeting House, by the members of the Society and the members of the local Railway Mission who have amalgamated for this purpose. There is evidence of genuine spiritual result.

"Faith" Car.—The revival work going on in connection with the tour of this mission car in the villages around York continues most encouraging. In one lonely hamlet there were no less than seventeen enquirers, while cheering news come from other villages also.

Banbury—The Evangelistic mission of Banbury is carrying on a good work and many have been won to the Saviour. At the recent anniversary interesting details were given of evangelisation in the town and twenty or thirty surrounding villages. The evangelist is Mr. D. Newell, 3, Merton-street, Banbury.

Tent Work in the South Hams, Devonshire.—Mr. J. Crofton Rainey has been working in this district. At Ford, near South Pool, Kingsbridge, the tent was filled nightly with people, who have been deeply impressed. Mr. Rainey writes to us: "Thank God for the deep interest and desire to hear. We ask your readers to join us in imploring that the Holy Spirit may list to blow on many souls the breath of heavenly life through faith in Christ. Will they please follow, or rather precede, us in prayer to Plympton, near Plymouth, where we pitch our tent in Dark-street-lane for the 22nd inst., and sixteen days following (D.V.)."

OBITUARY.

REV. J. H. MORAN.

We regret to hear of the death, on Thursday last, of Rev. John Henry Moran, at the age of eighty-four. For many years he was a familiar figure and prominent speaker at Evangelical gatherings and Protestant meetings, but naturally in recent years he had been unable to take a leading part in these. He was the last vicar of St. Thomas's, in the Liberty of the Rolls—a City church now pulled down; but his earlier ministerial life was chiefly spent as chaplain in convict prisons. His ashes were committed to the dust on Wednesday in the Tooting Churchyard.

MR. ROBERT CRANSTON, OF EDINBURGH.

In the North ex-Bailie Cranston was well and widely known as an ardent temperance advocate and a leader in Christian and benevolent work, besides being a very prominent figure in municipal life. Many, therefore, will hear with regret of his death last week at his residence, Spring-gardens, Edinburgh, at the age of seventy-seven. One who knew him writes: "For more than half a century Mr. Cranston was closely identified with the temperance cause. He joined the Edinburgh Total Abstinence Society in 1838, the year of the Queen's coronation, and from that date onwards he was a staunch and consistent supporter of total abstinence. Four years ago, he celebrated his jubilee as a total abstainer, when, in the presence of a numerous and representative gathering of the supporters of temperance principles, he recalled their small beginning and the progress which their cause had made, a success which in half a century he had scarcely dared to hope for, and which in his declining years afforded him the utmost gratification."

Durham Pit Children.—Rev. G. D. Copeland, of West Rainton, Fence Houses, Durham, who is giving breakfasts to over three hundred children belonging to the pit people, pleads for help. These, he says, are suffering deplorably, and their white, wan faces seem mutely to plead for the food for lack of which they are dying.

SEAMEN'S CHRISTIAN FRIEND SOCIETY.—Rev. G. J. Hill writes: The change of position consequent on the demolition of our old premises, has been so far no hindrance to our work. Already, at the temporary chapel in Well-street, E., our efforts have been blessed to the conversion of several sailors, whilst quite a number have signed the pledge.

Personalia.

Rev. T. R. Stevenson, is now returning from Shanghai through ill-health.

Mr. Geo. Muller has returned to Bristol again, after a protracted tour of evangelism and visitation.

Dr. Allon's last sermon, "Comfort in the Wilderness," has just been published by W. Williams and Co.

Rev. J. J. Turner, who has done good work at Tai-yuen fu, Shan-si, has been compelled to return home through ill-health.

Rev. Edward Bickersteth, D.D., the Dean of Lichfield, has felt compelled, after two years' weak health, to resign his office.

Rev. Charles Wilson, of Blackheath, has been ordered to go abroad for six months. His pulpit will be filled in his absence by Rev. W. Marshall.

The Bishop of Liverpool, who was seventy-five on Tuesday week, celebrated his birthday by laying the foundation-stone of a church at Newton-le-Moors.

Mr. Sankey conducted the evening service at Kennion-road Chapel, Brixton, last Sunday evening, Rev. James Douglas, the pastor, being absent through indisposition.

Canon Tristram, who has lately been on a missionary tour, gave the C.M.S. Committee last week an interesting account of what he had seen of the work in Ceylon, China, and Japan.

Rev. B. Oswald Sharp, who for thirty years has done a noble work at the Martyr's Memorial Church, Clerkenwell, has accepted the vicarage of Heston, feeling the need of comparative rest.

Rev. R. W. Dale, D.D., has, many will regret to hear, had a return of his weakness, which compels him to seek rest once more. His sermon at the funeral of his friend, Dr. Allon, appears to have been a severe strain upon him.

Rev. J. T. Brown, the beloved pastor at College-street, Northampton, having resigned through ill-health, has been strongly urged to remain until his jubilee—eighteen months hence—an assistant pastor being appointed to relieve him.

Rev. Dr. Alexander, Bishop of Derry, has returned from America. The lectures which he delivered in New York on "The Evidences of the Christian Religion," and which drew vast audiences, are to be published in this country and in America.

Mr. H. W. Brown, evangelist, of Chicago, crosses the ocean this month, to join in the work as the Lord may open his way. He is strong in Scripture (writes a correspondent) and blessed in soul winning. He is widely known in America, and has been much used. He may be addressed care of Y.M.C.A., Bothwell-street, Glasgow. He will be ready for work by the end of this month.

Mr. Lethaby, of the Kerak Mission, whose arrival in England we noted some time since, is now regaining health and strength. He would be glad to address gatherings of friends interested in Arabian missions who may desire to hear him. Mrs. Lethaby is expected to reach England soon for a period of rest. The permanent address of these friends while in this country is Market-place, Sidmouth, Devon.

FOREIGN MISSIONS.—Continental friends of mission work among the heathen have recently been told, in their various religious papers and magazines, the ever fresh and grand story of Carey's life and work. The May issue of the Journal des Missions Evangeliques, the organ of the Paris Society (published from 102, Boulevard Arago), is full of interesting matter, every page evincing true missionary enthusiasm. We note with pleasure a warm appreciation of the important work of the Guinness family at the East London Mission Institute and on the Congo. The undertakings of the Basle Missionary Society are described in the Revue des Missions Contemporaines and the Evangelisches Missions-Magazin, two admirable periodicals issued from the Mission Depôt, Basle, Switzerland. They give accounts of work in all lands, and vigorously advocate world-wide evangelisation. Friends of the societies named should not overlook their monthly organs.

HAMPSHIRE VILLAGE MISSION.—The colportage and evangelistic work of this Mission proceeds quietly under the superintendence of Mr. J. Hasell Charlton, who says in last year's report: "Altogether, more than two hundred places have been visited by the Herald of Mercy Bible Carriage, a large number of Bibles and Testament and several thousands of clear Gospel books sold from door to door. Many thousands of small books and tracts have been distributed freely. One good and steadfast friend to the Mission sent us more than 3000 of a most helpful gospel book, all of which have been carefully given away." Mr. Charlton writes: "We are building our second Bible car for work in the Hants, Wells, and Sussex villages, and are very anxious to start it free of debt. Anything for stocking it will be very acceptable. This is the twentieth year the Lord has permitted us to sow the good seed of the Kingdom." The headquarters of the Mission are at Gosport.

A REVIEW BY THE LATE REV. C. H. SPURGEON.

RARA AVIS—A BOOK!

Preachers abound: but divines are few. The printing press pours forth a mass of matter: but a real book is a phenomenon. We count ourselves happy, for we have met with a divine in Dr. JAMES CULROSS; and in his work entitled we have found a book. It is part of our appointed suffering in this life to be compelled to winnow heaps of literature, with great result in chaff and dust and small gain in breadcorn, and therefore our rejoicing is the greater when grain comes to our garner as clean provender, in good weight and measure. The work before us is a great book for matter, though modest in size.

Many writers are mere echoes of other men's voices, and are mainly of use in stirring up pure minds by way of remembrance. Dried fruits are their merchandise; such a thing as a freshly-gathered peach is never seen in their basket. One of the excellences of Dr. CULROSS is the freshness of his thought. The dew is on his branch: he is no withered bough of the autumn forest. His mind allows young flowers to break through its soil after their own fashion, and to blossom in their own sweet way.

This excellent author deals with John—the man, the companion of Jesus, the apostle after the Ascension, the writer, and the theologian—thus furnishing us with a full-length portrait of "the beloved disciple." He has evidently chosen a congenial subject, and has such sympathy with the man before him that he can see far into his mind and heart. Even to comment upon John's writings is far from easy: he is so simple, and yet so fathomlessly deep; he uses so many of those pregnant monosyllables, so much more expressive than long words. Dr. CULROSS is a Christian of the Johannean stamp, and hence he is at home with the beloved disciple.

It is altogether without reserve that we commend the work before us. It is not a bottle of milk for babes, but a portion of meat for men. A half-dozen readings will only make it more interesting to those who meditate on what they read.

We heard of a gentleman who entered an hotel and ordered a dinner of chops. One chop was brought him with due state, this being considered enough for a meal. The hungry diner inserted his fork into the lonely portion of flesh, and as he put it on his plate he said, "Yes, this is the sort of thing; bring me a dish of them." So have we risen from the perusal of many a modern book, feeling that the one or two thoughts we obtained were good; but we wanted more of them. No such tantalising have we undergone while reading this work; but, on the contrary, we have had a feast of fat things full of marrow.—Sword and Trowel.

"Another 'gem of purest ray serene' from the deep waters of our brother's teeming mind. "We do not know higher-toned or healthier devotional literature, of the evangelical type, than is represented by this and Dr. Culross' previous works. This work is instructive, suggestive, full of spiritual force, and at the same time strong and manly. We heartily commend this book for the refreshment of our busy teachers."

"MERINOLAN" SUMMER UNDER-WEAR—for LADIES, GENTLEMEN or CHILDREN.

Samples and Illustrated Catalogues containing all particulars sent on receipt of inquiry, post free.

Opinions of the Press.

THE QUEEN says: "The latest samples in Under-wear (Forsyth's 'Merinolan,' Glasgow) that have come under our notice, are little short of perfection, and may be obtained in a delicate, silky texture for the present season, or in heavier qualities for Autumn, both for Ladies and Gentlemen. In all the qualities they are admirably soft and exquisite to the touch, whilst in the shaping of the garments, they are beyond praise."

THE LADY says: "Messrs. Forsyth, of Renfield-street, Glasgow, have brought out a most beautiful make of Under-wear called 'Merinolan,' which is extremely soft, very elastic, and combines every possible improvement in fabrics, fastenings, and finish. Every hygienic condition is fulfilled by 'Merinolan,' and it is very moderate in price, considering the very high-class quality of the garments."

Opinions of the Press.

THE COURT JOURNAL says: "Mr. Forsyth, of Glasgow, has attained much-desired fame for his makes of Under-wear, producing garments which combine quality, comfort, and all possible improvements. His 'Merinola,' whether as an Undervest or Combination for Ladies, or Shirts and Pants for Gentlemen, are alike beautifully soft, elastic, and delicate in texture, so that the most sensitive skin may not be subjected to the slightest irritation, thus rendering the various articles of the highest utility, and to be specially appreciated by the invalid."

HEALTH says: "In the garments made by Messrs. Forsyth, the purchaser has a guarantee of their sound wearing qualities; while the great attention to the matter of finish will afford to wearers a great degree of comfort."

LANCET says: "The samples from Messrs. Forsyth are eminently satisfactory, and are gratifying examples of home manufacture."

Notes and Comments.

NEXT week we purpose giving portrait and sketch of Rev. Dr. PINDOR, pastor of the Evangelical Church of Austria, at Teschen, Silesia.

In addition to those to be found on p. 24, we have received a number of letters on the question of Army Chaplains and evangelistic work, for which we cannot find space in this issue. We may say, however, that we have before us evidence which quite confirms the original statements in our columns. We intend to return to the subject next week.

"An Englishwoman," writing to a daily contemporary on the epidemic of assaults on women that now seems prevalent, makes the practical suggestion that flogging should enter into the punishment awarded in such cases. We certainly think that if any crime calls for such punitive treatment this does.

Our readers will hear with sincere regret that Rev. W. H. Webb-Peploe is suffering from a breakdown in health, and has been debarred by his medical adviser from all public work during the summer. He will be greatly missed at the Mildmay, Keswick, and other Conferences. We are sure our readers will join in the earnest petition to God that he may be speedily restored to health and to fulness of service.

We may also bespeak a like interest in the prayers of our readers on behalf of Dr. John Kirton (author of "Buy Your Own Cherries," &c.), who is suffering from an internal trouble, which causes his friends grave concern. Dr. Kirton's long and valued service in the Temperance cause, by pen and voice, it would be a difficult matter to replace.

At the beginning of the summer season, when open-air Gospel work is being resumed in so many places, it is fitting that we should comply with the request of a correspondent (p. 10) and reproduce an article contributed to our columns nearly twenty years ago by our esteemed and lamented brother Mr. Gawin Kirkham. May it prove an awakening word to many who are sitting at ease in Zion; thus our brother being dead shall yet speak.

A great triumph on behalf of social morality, and equality before the law, was achieved in the House of Commons last week, when a clause was inserted in the Glasgow Police Bill, under which any person found on premises proved to be a "disorderly house" will be liable to a fine of five pounds. The Government, to their shame be it said, made a show of resistance, but the articulate feeling of the House was almost wholly in favour of the clause, and it was allowed to pass without a division. If such a clause were incorporated, as it ought to be, in the general law of the land dealing with the subject, a great blow would be struck at social vice.

The Charity Voting Reform Association exists for the purpose of reforming the system of canvassing and voting adopted by many of the London charities, with the view of gradually bringing about the entire abolition of these practices. We have all heard of cases in which, on the election system, the friends of poor people have been put to ruinous expense, and in the end been cast down by disappointment. Subscribers to charities are, from the nature of things, unable to form a judgment as to the relative merits of candidates, and it is clearly the duty of the managers to see that the benefits offered shall fall to the most fitting applicants. Those who wish to assist the Association in its agitation for reform, should address the secretary, Mr. J. A. Dow, 30, Charing-cross, S.W.

The circular recently issued by the Home Secretary to magistrates in Great Britain in regard to the punishment and treatment of offenders brought up and convicted for the first time, has met with great approval. It is stated that even in France the working and results of the First Offenders' Act are being watched with the keenest interest. Nearly three thousand persons have during the past three years been treated under its provisions, and it is said that the returns furnished by the magistrates show that only about 180 had to be called up to receive judgment, or had committed any further offences. It would seem, therefore, that the promoters of the legislation were right in anticipating that the lenient and merciful treatment of first offenders would be found to work in the interest both of the accused and of society at large.

It is invigorating to read in The Missionary Review of the World so many remarkable and encouraging facts with regard to the development and rapid growth of the Sunday-school movement in India. "The American missions," says Rev. Dr. Phillips, "have always devoted much labour to this form of Gospel work, but now nearly all missions are coming to see its importance and promise." He goes on to show how there are now auxiliary Sunday-school unions in all the principal provinces; that there is no serious obstacle to the planting of Sunday-schools throughout the country; that in many cases Hindus have come and begged for Sunday-schools to be opened in their villages, and that in the Sunday-school extension is opening up a field of work for Europeans who were diligent workers in England, but who have been "hidden and inactive" since arriving in India.

The deficit in the funds of the British and Foreign Bible Society should be cause for deep and general regret. Rev. John Sharp, secretary of the Society, writes to us:—

> Last year, as usual, more than every penny of new income received was turned into copies of God's Word, in whole or in part, and the vast organisation of the Society in all parts of the world, and its expenses for translations, as well as for all its grants, had to be maintained by the proceeds of sales. The receipts of old income, coming back through sales, did not suffice for this missionary expenditure, and for the necessary machinery of the Society, by £23,000. That deficit was met from reserves, but the same could not be done next year without seriously trenching on our working capital.
> In the long lists you publish weekly of good objects for which you have received funds, there are few that do not appeal to the Bible Society for aid in some form. It is the largest free distributor of the Scriptures in the world, as well as the largest seller of them at low prices. Would not some more of your friends make contributions to it, if they realised the openings for the Bible which now exist all over the world, and the immense calls that fact alone creates for this Society?

The claims of the Society are undoubted—indeed, they are allowed on all hands. But somehow it comes about that those who have the cause of the Gospel at heart do not sufficiently bear in mind the Society's pressing needs.

The two leading Scottish Church parliaments that hold session every month of May opened their proceedings on Thursday last. The Moderators this year—Professors Charteris and Blaikie—are both good men and true. At the opening of the Established Church Assembly there was the customary display of pomp and circumstance that surround the presence of the Lord High Commissioner. Dr. Macgregor's sermon, as retiring Moderator, was largely a defence of the parochial system, and a protest against threatened Disestablishment. He favoured the idea of "levelling up," and sharing the Church's endowments among all the Presbyterian bodies. A serious objection to this plan would be the refusal on the part of most of the Free Churches to relinquish their faith in the voluntary principle for the maintenance of religious ordinances and aggressive efforts.

In the Free Assembly Dr. Blaikie delivered a long presidential address, in which many important topics were touched upon. Comparing the condition of his Church at its founding almost fifty years ago, with that of to-day, he felt impelled to the conclusion that the spiritual force which marked its birth had nearly spent itself by the inevitable law of nature. If there is to be any noble future for the Free Church of Scotland, it must be along the lines of high endeavour and systematic toil. Having uttered a faithful protest against the spirit of unbrotherly criticism that is too often met with among modern ministers, the Moderator went on to deplore the decay of spiritual power in the Church generally, both among pastors and people.

Dr. Blaikie could scarcely, in his survey, overlook the growth of the "Higher Criticism," as it is called. While claiming to be naturally conservative in matters of theology, he recognised difficulties that must be investigated. Otherwise there might be a tremendous reaction, and perhaps a great rush of rationalism, which would be simply overwhelming. At the same time, unproved critical theories and conclusions must be received with caution, and critics should have more respect for the feelings of the orthodox. Above all, the great evangelical realities must be cherished with the utmost firmness.

Perhaps the Revised Version has done as much mischief by its translation of 2 Tim. iii. 16, as it has done good by all its emendations of the Authorised Version put together. In the previous verse the Apostle has reminded Timothy that from a child he has known "the holy Scriptures" ("sacred writings," R.V.), and then adds, according to the Authorised Version, "All Scripture is given by inspiration of God, and is profitable," &c., which the R.V. changes into, "Every Scripture inspired of God is also profitable," with the alternative rendering in the margin, "Every Scripture is inspired of God, and profitable."

But Jesus recognised no other Scripture besides "the holy Scriptures." Thus He says, "The Scripture cannot be broken" (John x. 35). So the Evangelist Luke records of Him that "He expounded to them in all the Scriptures the things concerning Himself." And the two disciples say, "Was not our heart burning within us while He spake to us in the way, while He opened to us the Scriptures?" And when Jesus appeared in the midst, then "opened He their mind that they might understand the Scriptures" (Luke xxiv. 45).

The Epistle to the Hebrews speaks of these Scriptures as instinct with life:—

> The word of God is living and active, and sharper than any two-edged sword, and piercing even to the dividing of soul and spirit, of both joints and marrow, and quick to discern the thoughts and interests of the heart.

And the Apostle, in writing to the Galatians, attributes the same quality and attribute of life, and even of foreknowledge to the Scripture, when he says,

> The Scripture, foreseeing that God would justify the Gentiles by faith, preached the Gospel beforehand to Abraham, saying, In thee shall all the nations of the earth be blessed.

God spoke Himself out in the Living Word; He spoke out from Himself in the Written Word; and they are wise who take care that their children, like Timothy, know the Holy Scriptures from their earliest days.

It is delightful to observe the deepened interest that is at present being shown in the life and work of Dr. Carey, the pioneer of modern missions to the heathen. In all circles where there is sympathy with those who are following in Carey's footsteps, there has of late been a very natural desire to know more of the life of the man himself. Not only in England and America, but on the Continent of Europe and in lands farther away, the "consecrated cobbler" has been the text, particularly in the religious press, of inspiring story and stirring appeal in behalf of the millions who are still perishing from lack of knowledge of the Gospel of Christ.

The "Centenary Volume of the Baptist Missionary Society," issued this week, is much more than a supplement to all the biographies of Carey. Edited by Rev. J. B. Myers, it describes in a comprehensive way the work of the Society from its inception until now. The pages record cases of devotion to duty such as the imagination of the novelist loves to present, and marvels of Divine providence such as stop the mouths of scoffers and gainsayers. The work of several writers, and amply illustrated, this book should not only greatly help the celebrated Society in whose interest it has been written, but it should also impress many Christians with the privilege of having a share in the urgent duty of promoting the evangelisation of the world. (340 pages, 2s. nett. B.M.S. House, 19, Furnival-street, Holborn.)

We are glad to see that the question of regulating Kanaka immigration and labour in Queensland is exciting widespread attention. However desirable and politic this traffic may appear to such as have financial interests at stake, it is an unmixed evil when regarded from the point of view of England's duty to the weaker and more backward races of men. Dr. J. G. Paton, in a vigorous protest, says:—

> This traffic has taken away some seventy thousand of the most healthy lads and girls from the New Hebrides, and similar proportions from other groups, nearly half depopulating our islands....On the sugar plantations the Polynesians are by law paid 4d. per day, if they live to get it, for doing work for which white men would have to be paid from 5s. to 8s. per day. The poor islanders have no rights in common with white people, and as they do not, or dare not, complain, they serve the planters' purpose best in all respects....The traffic is a system of deception and cruel oppression throughout.

Dr. Paton finds in the serious decline of the sugar industry in Queensland evidence that the curse of God rests upon it. He is not alone in condemning the traffic, for another missionary from the New Hebrides recently assured us that the veritable flower of the community is carried off, only old and young people being left. Christian work is thus robbed of its most useful agents, and that by a system of fraud and compulsion. If the traffic is not stopped soon, it will come to an inevitable end, for in twenty or thirty years the population will be reduced to about one-tenth of what it now is. The people of the New Hebrides, after years of devoted missionary labour, have become Christianised—many of them being true Christians. They now desire to be taken under British protection. Instead of assenting to this, however, Britain sanctions a shameful wrong, which threatens the speedy extinction of populations which have been won from cannibalism to civilised life, from darkness and Satan unto God and his righteousness.

Our readers will thank us for commending to their notice Our Lord's Signs in St. John's Gospel, discussions chiefly exegetical and doctrinal, on the eight miracles in the fourth Gospel, by T. Hutchison, D.D. (T. and T. Clark. 7s. 6d.) It is a most helpful and suggestive work. Also The Face of the Deep, a devotional commentary on the Apocalypse, by Christina G. Rossetti (Society for Promoting Christian Knowledge. 7s. 6d.) The latter has, indeed, little expository value, but it is full of devotional thought and experience, exquisitely expressed in poetry and prose.

It is said that about three hundred millions of British Capital has been invested in the Argentine Republic, where so much financial trouble has of late reigned. A different state of affairs might have existed, had we poured in the Gospel before the gold; then righteousness might have kept covetousness in check.

Christians and Money.

BY REV. J. P. GLEDSTONE.

"Modern Religious Life in Relation to Money" was the subject of a thoughtful, spiritual, purifying paper, read by Mr. T. W. Harrison before the late Assembly of the Congregational Union, and well deserves the consideration of all disciples of "Him who for our sakes became poor." Congregationalists are not the only Christians, we fear, who need words of faithful love on this vital subject; for, perhaps, no single influence has so corrupted, so weakened, and so endangered the Church as the love of money.

To point out particular instances as evidence might not be profitable, but we are persuaded that an impartial investigation into the history of every denomination would reveal the same deplorable condition of things—time and strength unduly consumed in making money, the heart hardened, the conscience dulled and perverted, pride and exclusiveness created, neglect of spiritual privileges and work, undue attention to the mere lifeless machinery of the Church, trust in carnal means for diffusing the Gospel, instead of prayer and faith in God and the teaching of the Gospel in simplicity.

Mr. Harrison, after having first given, we think inadequately, the teaching of Christ on money, said that "the only conclusion which can be arrived at by those who accept the authority of Christ is that the common estimate of money, its worth, its uses, and its place, as openly avowed by irreligious people, and as practically adopted by a great many religious people, must be terribly wrong." Now it is the judgment and practice of professedly religious people which fill us with concern; we expect the world to be wrong here, as in other things, but it ought not to be possible to say that the Church and the world are alike. The life of Christians ought to be different from those who only buy and sell and get gain, and then hoard their money or else spend it in pleasure. Whether the teaching which Mr. Harrison suggests will be a correction of the tendency which he and others so deeply deplore seems to be open to serious doubt. His exposure of the evil is all that can be desired, both for faithfulness and love, while the principles he lays down are also sound as far as they go. Yet we seem to be very familiar with it all, and as painfully impressed with its futility.

We call to mind an essay of extraordinary ability and force written fifty-four years ago, by Dr. Harris, on Mammon, in which all that is now advanced was said, but with no appreciable result. His picture of things in the world and in the Church then might stand for the picture of to-day. And he was also wonderfully clear and persuasive in showing the duty and responsibility of Christians who are rich. He had some perception of the weak place in all Christian thinking and teaching on the subject of money, but failed to apply his view resolutely and consistently throughout. His most advanced position is seen in his handling of the text, "He that provideth not for his own, and especially for those of his own house, hath denied the faith, and is worse than an infidel." On which he says, "The sacred writer, in giving directions relative to the maintenance of widows, distinguishes between such as the Church should relieve, and such as should be supported by their own relatives. And concerning the latter he makes the statement in question. Whence it follows, first, that the provision contemplated by the Apostle is not a-laying up beforehand for future contingencies, but a present supply of present necessities, a simple maintenance of needy relatives from day to day. And, secondly, that instead of countenancing parents in the accumulation of great fortunes for their children, he is speaking of the maintenance which children, if able, should afford to their aged and destitute parents. With the subject of providing for families, therefore, the text in question has nothing to do. Rightly interpreted, we see that it enjoins not accumulating, but giving." Roused by his perception of the meaning of Scripture on this vital subject, Dr. Harris inquires: "What is to be thought of the consistency of a Christian parent who, with our Lord's representation of the danger of riches ringing in his ears, goes on scheming and labouring to leave his children rich in the element of destruction; toiling to place them in a condition in which, he admits, it is all but impossible that they should be saved."

Here is the crux of the whole matter. If we may not toil for a competence for our children, no other motive can for a moment compare with that in urgency and power. To make money for saving it is the conduct which our Lord discountenances. "Lay not up for yourselves treasures on earth." Is it not because men want to amass wealth that they resort to all kinds of doubtful practices, and in gaining the world lose their own souls? Is it not because the Church has not only permitted, but even countenanced and encouraged, the amassings of wealth that all her warnings about the dangers of it, all her denunciations of covetousness, all her exhortations to seek the heavenly treasures, have been utterly ineffectual? Is it not because she has been afraid to follow her Lord's apparent foolishness that she has been kept in the snare of the devil? Mr. Harrison, along with others, insists upon generous giving, and this law of the Spirit applies to all who were rich before they became Christians, and also to all according to their several ability, but it does not touch the question of getting; and until religion restrains the getting, we shal continue to have a deadly fight with the world in the Church.

Just where Christians shrink from following Christ they would, by faithfulness, exhibit more of his wisdom, more of his perfect understanding of all life, than they do by all gifts and labours. It would form a subject of interesting and suggestive inquiry how the Church might long ere this have decided within her own borders some of the most perplexing questions of modern life: co-operation, capital and labour, care of the weak and incompetent, the poor, education, and so forth. Whether, had the Church eschewed money hoarding by her members, there could ever have come to be such huge cities as are now the menace of civilisation, may well be doubted. The more we ponder modern life and our Lord's words—"Lay not up for yourselves treasure on earth"—the more distinctly does He stand apart from and high above all human teachers on social questions, and the more persuaded are we that only as He is obeyed shall we find a safe path for humanity to tread.

WITH VERY GREAT RELUCTANCE we feel obliged to warn our readers of Evangelist E. J. Parker, who has confessed to conduct utterly disqualifying him from Christian work.

SUNDAY-SCHOOLS IN FRANCE.—At the annual meeting of the Sunday-school Society of France, a few days ago, it was stated that there are now eleven hundred such schools in the country, as many as eighty of them being in Paris. The cause found a powerful advocate in Pastor Theodore Monod.

INCREASE OF ROMANISM.—From advance proofs of this year's "Tourist's Church Guide" we are enabled to give some figures which reveal progress in this direction of rather a startling character. In 1882 the number of churches in which the Eucharistic vestments were used was only 336. The number to-day is 1029. Similarly, ten years ago, 581 churches exhibited "altar lights." The number has grown to 2048. We fancy that 3918 as against 1662 churches in which the "Eastward" (or sacrificial) position is taken largely under-estimates the increase. But it is a striking fact that whereas in 1882 only nine churches used incense, the number now is 177. What this may portend we need not point out. —Daily Chronicle.

Moses, the Man of God.

Rev. F. B. MEYER, B.A., Regent's-park Chapel.

PREPARING FOR PISGAH.

JUST before the dark River through which Pilgrims pass to the City of Gold, Bunyan places the land of Beulah, where the sun ever shines, the birds sing, and every day the flowers appear on the earth. The air is very sweet and pleasant. It is within sight of the City, but it is beyond the reach of Giant Despair, and they who come thither cannot so much as see the turrets of Doubting Castle. And in some such blissful experience saintly men have sought to spend a brief parenthesis between the press of life's business and their entrance into the welcome of Christ. Dr. Chalmers was wont to say that a Sabbatic decade should succeed to the six decades of years of daily toil, and usher in the morning of the first day of the new week of heavenly bliss.

But such was not the experience of Moses. The last year of his life was as full of work as any that had ever passed over his head.

There was, first, the conquest of Eastern Canaan.—Dean Stanley speaks of it as that mysterious eastern frontier of the Holy Land, so beautiful, so romantic, so little known. Its original inhabitants had been expelled by the kindred tribes of Moab and Ammon, but they, in their turn, had been dispossessed of a considerable portion of the territory thus acquired, by the two Canaanite chiefs, Sihon and Og, whose names occur so frequently in this narrative.

The attack of the Israelites was justified by the churlish refusal of Sihon to the request that they might march through his borders on their way to Jericho. He not only refused them passage, but gathered all his people together, and went out against Israel on the frontier line between his territory and the wilderness. The song which commemorated the victory lays special emphasis on the prowess of the slingers and archers of Israel, afterwards so renowned: "We have shot at them, Heshbon is perished." These words suggest the probable reason for the overthrow of this powerful monarch, under the providence of God. The sword followed on arrow or stone, so that the army was practically annihilated; no further resistance was offered to the march of the victorious foe. The cities opened their gates, and this fertile region between the Arnon and the Jabbok, consisting of "a wide table-land, tossed about in wild confusion of undulating downs, clothed with rich grass, and in spring waving with great sheets of wheat and barley," came into possession of the chosen people.

But this was not all. North of this lay Bashan, which has been described by Canon Tristram and others as a rich and well-wooded country, abounding in noble forests of oak and of olive trees, interspersed with patches of corn in the open glades. It was and is the most picturesque and the most productive portion of the Holy Land. Og, its king, was renowned for his gigantic stature. According to Josephus's narrative, he was coming to the assistance of Sihon, when he heard of his defeat and death. But, undaunted, he set his army in array against the hosts of Israel. The battle took place at Edrei, which stood to guard the entrance of a remarkable mountain fastness; and it ended in the complete victory of Israel. The result is told in the strong, concise narrative of Moses. "They smote him, his sons, and all his people, until there was none left him remaining; and they possessed his land."

Nothing could have accounted for these marvellous victories, which gave Israel possession of these valuable tracts of country, with cities fenced with high walls, gates, and bars, together with a great many unwalled towns, but the interposition of God. He had said beforehand, "Fear not, I have delivered him into thy hand;" and so it befell. Immense swarms of hornets, which are common in Palestine, seem to have visited the country at this juncture, so that the people were driven from their fortresses into the open plains, where they were less able to stand the assault of the Israelites.

Moses, at their urgent request, proceeded to allot this rich and beautiful territory to the Reubenites and Gadites and the half-tribe of Manasseh, after receiving their solemn pledge to bear their share in the conquest of Western Palestine. "I commanded you," he said afterwards, "that ye shall pass armed before your brethren, the children of Israel, until the Lord give rest unto your brethren as unto you."

Next came his last charge to the people. This was delivered in a series of farewell addresses, which are contained in the first thirty chapters of the Book of Deuteronomy. This book is to the four preceding ones much what the Gospel according to John is to the other three. It is full of the most pathetic and stirring appeals. Memory of the past, gratitude, fear, self-interest, are the chords made to vibrate to this master-touch. Well may it be said of Moses that he loved the people; and in these pages we may trace the course of the molten lava which poured from his heart.

The key-phrases of that remarkable book are. Keep diligently, Observe to do, and The Lord shall choose. It abounds with exquisite descriptions of the Land of Promise, which may be spiritually applied to those rapturous experiences denoted by the phrase, the Rest of Faith. It is, indeed, as old Canaan was, a good land, a land of brooks of water, of fountains and depths springing out of valleys and hills. There we drink of the river of the water of life; there we eat the bread of life without scarceness, and lack nothing that we really need. The 28th chapter anticipates the Beatitudes of our Lord's Sermon on the Mount, and happy is he that can appropriate them in blissful experience, and go in to possess the land.

In our judgment the much-debated question of authorship is settled by the distinct affirmation of the New Testament. Take, for instance, the quotation of Deut. xxx. 11-14 in Rom. x. 6-10. The Apostle Paul distinctly speaks of Moses as having written these words.

Next came his anxiety about a successor. Moses spake unto the Lord, saying, "Let the Lord, the God of the spirits of all flesh, set a man over the congregation, which may go out before them, and which may go in before them; which may lead them out, and bring them in, that the congregation of the Lord be not as sheep which have no shepherd." In answer to this request, he had been directed to take Joshua, the son of Nun, in whom was the Spirit, to bring him before Eleazar, the priest, and before all the congregation, and to give him a charge. This he seems to have done, but as death drew near he apparently gave him a second charge (compare Num. xxviii. 16, 17, and Deut. xxxi. 7, 8).

What a striking scene it must have been when, on his one-hundred-and-twentieth birthday, the aged law-giver called unto Joshua, and said unto him in the sight of all Israel, "Be strong and of good courage, for thou must go with this people into the land which the Lord hath sworn unto their fathers that He would give it them, and thou shalt cause them to inherit it. And the Lord, He it is that doth go before thee, He will not fail thee, neither forsake thee; fear not, neither be dismayed." Immediately afterwards the pillar of cloud stood over the door of the Tabernacle, and Moses and Joshua were summoned to present themselves before God in its sacred precincts. There, in almost identical words to those which He had spoken by the lips of Moses, God gave Joshua his commission to bring the children of Israel into the land which He had sworn unto them, together with the promise that He would be with them.

His last acts were to arrange for the custody of the law and the perpetuation of its reading. He did the first by depositing the book, in which he had recorded the Divine revelations made to him, in the side of the Ark of the Covenant. It was to be kept under the custody of the Levites, and passages read from it at the end of every seven years, when all Israel appeared before God in the place which He should choose.

And as to the second, Moses put his exhortations and entreaties into two magnificent odes, the one dealing out warnings against apostasy, the other dwelling seriatim on the characteristics of the tribes, and giving them a parting blessing, after the fashion of the dying Jacob.

The 32nd chapter of Deuteronomy is one of the sublimest human compositions on record. It was Moses' swan song. It is the store from which later Scripture writers draw plentifully. It has been called the Magna Charta of Prophecy. It is worthy to be compared to one only song else, the Song of the Lamb, with which it is combined by the harpers on the margin of the glassy sea: "They sing the Song of Moses, the servant of God, and the Song of the Lamb."

The repeated comparisons of God to a Rock, the lavish kindness with which He had treated his people since He first found them in a desert land, the comparison of the Eternal to a mother eagle in teaching its young to climb the unaccustomed steeps of air, the ingratitude with which his marvellous kindness had been requited, the dread fate to which their rebellion must expose them, the mercy with which their repentance would be greeted—all these are recorded in glowing, eloquent words that stand for ever as a witness of how stammering lips may speak when they have been touched with the live altar coal. Or take the closing verses of the Benediction on the tribes. The lonely glory of the God of Jeshurun, who rides on the heavens to help and save his people, the home which men may find in his eternal nature, the underpinning everlasting arms, the irresistible might with which He thrusts out the enemy from before the forward march of the soul He loves, the safe though isolated dwelling of Israel, the fertility of the soil and the generosity of the clouds, the blessedness of having Jehovah as the shield of help and the sword of excellency—all these features of the blessed life are delineated by the master-hand of one who dipped his brush in the colours mixed by his own experience.

What glimpses we get of the inner life of this noble man! All that he wrought on earth was the outcome of the secret abiding of his soul in God. God was his home, his help, his stay. He was nothing: God was all. And all that he accomplished on the earth was due to that Mighty One indwelling, fulfilling, and working out through him, as his organ and instrument, his own consummate plans.

Thus Moses drew his life-work to a close. Behind him, a long and glorious life, before, the ministry and worship of the heavenly sanctuary. Here the shekinah; there, the unveiled face. Here, the tent and pilgrim march; there the everlasting rest. Here, the promised land, beheld from afar, but not entered; there, the goodly land beyond Jordan entered and possessed. What though it was a wrench to pass away, with the crowning-stone not placed on the structure of his life, to depart and be with God was far better.

THE JAFFA RAILWAY, according to an article by Rev. W. H. Daniel in this month's Rest and Reaping, is a sham and "another shame added to countless abominations" which the Holy Land has suffered.

HIGHLAND TEMPERANCE LEAGUE.—The very name is of hopeful augury, inasmuch as whisky drinking and Highlanders have always seemed so closely associated. The League employs two agents who labour constantly among the Celts, addressing meetings in English and Gaelic not only in the Highlands proper, but in Glasgow and other cities, doing, it is believed much good, and resulting in a considerable increase of membership. The Secretary is Mr. A. Blackhall, 16, Union-street, Inverness, N.B.

"Go Out Quickly."

DEAR SIR,—Thousands of hearts will truly mourn the death of Gawin Kirkham, and I now write to ask you to reproduce an article of his that you published in your valuable paper, I believe in August, 1874, entitled, "Go Out Quickly." That appeal was so driven home to my heart and conscience by the Holy Ghost that, greatly against my inclination, I was thrust into the work of open-air preaching. Ever since that date it has been my privilege and joy to obey the command, "Go out quickly into the streets and lanes," with the loving invitation, "Come, for all things are now ready."

I believe the reappearance of this article would be a rousing word to many.—Yours truly,

A. CHRISTY WILSON, M.D.
President Y.M.C.A.

39, Hall Gate, Doncaster.

Can we seriously consider the condition of the masses of the people, without being saddened almost beyond endurance? When our blessed Lord beheld the city of Jerusalem He wept over it, because its inhabitants knew not the time of their visitation. And shall his followers be less concerned about poor, fallen humanity than He was? Let any one pass through the streets of an English town or city during Divine service time on the Lord's Day, and there will be abundant evidence of the utter indifference of the majority of the people. Many are busy trading, while others are idle, or engaged in vicious amusements. Then, as the day draws to a close, how unoccupied they are! During the long summer evenings they crowd to the windows and doors, and seem to invite the Lord's people to tell them words whereby they may be saved. How well I remember, three summers ago, walking one Sunday evening from all Saints', Langham-place, to Islington. Mr. Eardley Wilmot, who was Rector at that time, used to meet his curates, Scripture-readers, and district-visitors, for prayer before evening service, and after commending them to the Lord, sent them to different parts of the parish to preach, while he went alone and conducted the service in his large church. I was invited by this good man to help in the work. What an impression would be made on London if each church did the same!

On my way home I was deeply impressed with the numberless openings for proclaiming the Gospel in the streets presented by this great city. The air was balmy. The golden sunbeams cast a kind of halo over the otherwise dingy streets. Men, women, and children abounded everywhere. In every street an open-air service might have been held. But neither preacher nor tract-distributor was to be seen, save at Somers Town, where Mr. Wm. Ewart and his congregation had adjourned from his church. Doubtless when the evening congregations were dismissed they would traverse these streets on their way home without saying a word for Jesus. Would it not have been easy for each congregation to have held one or more open-air meetings after evening service? Would not the presence of intelligent, well-dressed people have had a humanising effect on the thoughtless occupants of those streets? Would not the singing of a sweet hymn have had a soothing influence on the wild wayward natures of the people? And is it not reasonable to believe that the uplifting of Jesus would have drawn sinners to Himself? Further, can the Church of Christ be guiltless in systematically ignoring and neglecting this mode of preaching the Gospel? Are we not our brother's keeper, and may not God require his blood at our hands?

But it may be urged that open-air preaching is difficult, and that few are qualified for it. Like many other things, this is more in imagination than in reality. There is a certain amount of timidity in commencing it; but all open-air speakers will testify that it is a positive pleasure and delight when the preacher is once accustomed to it. It is like swimming. Most people are naturally afraid of the water; but let them learn to swim, and the difficulty is not to get them into the water but to keep them out of it. The art of open-air preaching is like swimming also, in that it can only be learned by practice. Swimming is not learned by printed rules, however correct, but by trying. So is street preaching. I freely admit that many are engaged in it who are not fully qualified; but I know also how readily they will make way for those who are, if the latter will but undertake it.

Instead of the difficulties, I am rather disposed to dwell upon the ease with which an open-air crowd can be gathered. No notice need be given, though in a scattered population this is desirable, that the people may know when and where to assemble. But in a crowded city let the preacher and his friends strike up a hymn, and they will have the attention of half the people within hearing in two minutes. Let a couple of verses be sung, and then let the way of salvation be pointed out in five or ten minutes, so as to interest without wearying the people. Nothing is more undesirable in poor and crowded localities than long and formal services. If a long hymn is sung, prayer offered, a chapter read, and a regular indoor service reproduced outside, it is fatal to success. What is wanted is a combination of brevity, earnestness, and love. These will rarely fail to win attention, and also to win souls.

The singing of the hymn, "Safe in the arms of Jesus," in the market-place of Bury St. Edmunds this week, by myself and a Christian brother, brought a hundred people together in less than five minutes; and the same brother, by ringing a bell round a village a few miles from that town another evening, brought a hundred working men and women together after a hard day's work in the harvest-field; and they were unwilling to leave after the meeting had continued for two hours, and we had brought it to a close more than once. They said, "Don't go yet."

Some people do their work while others are thinking about it. This has been the case with the Open-air Mission. While others have been considering whether open-air preaching is desirable, and if so, who is to do it, and how is it to be done, the Mission has gone forth boldly into the degraded parts of the city, into the heart of the execution crowd, on to the crowded race-course, and the busy fair-field, among the Sunday excursionists, the country gala, and the seaside pleasure-takers; and, as a result, during its twenty-one years' history, it has literally won thousands of souls for Jesus.

Shall we not "go out quickly"? Let us consider the command to do so. Our Master has given it. Let us consider the guilt of neglecting it, and be warned by the curse which was pronounced on those who came not to the help of the Lord against the mighty. Let us have the right motive power—"The love of Christ constraineth us." Let us be sure we have the right message—"We pray you in Christ's stead, be ye reconciled to God." Let us not fear the difficulties—"Who art thou, O great mountain? Before Zerubbabel thou shalt become a plain." Let us be encouraged by the promise, "My word shall not return unto Me void." And let us consider the marvellous honour conferred upon us—"They that be wise shall shine as the brightness of the firmament; and they that turn many to righteousness, as the stars for ever and ever." Let us see to it at once. Before this magnificent summer foliage is wrapped in its autumn mantle, and these bright summer skies are covered by dark, chilling, wintry clouds, let us go out into the streets and lanes of the city, the town, and the village, and compel men to come in, that God's house may be filled. Let us "go out quickly."

GAWIN KIRKHAM.

HEBREW YOUNG MEN'S CHRISTIAN ASSOCIATION.—Mr. Abraham Hornstein, director of the Bishopsgate Mission to the Jews, writes:—We have ample accommodation in our new mission-house, 12, Devonshire-street, E.C., for a Hebrew Young Men's Christian Association. Such an organisation is greatly needed, and will serve to bring the Hebrew Christian Missionaries into closer contact with each other. The Association has been organised under regulations similar to those of the general Y.M.C.A.'s. I gladly act as Honorary Secretary, and ask the co-operation and prayer of the Christian public.

HOMES FOR AGED CHRISTIAN BLIND.—These homes have been established twelve years for destitute and aged blind from all parts of the land. The present number of inmates is eighty; of these, fifteen are between eighty and ninety years of age, forty-one over seventy, and one is in her ninety-second year. There is also a Branch for Younger Blind Persons who from painful and exceptional circumstances are disqualified for admission to other institutions. The cost of inmates is twenty-six pounds per annum for a woman, and thirty-one pounds per annum for a man. We regret to hear that through the death of generous supporters this excellent work is suffering from lack of funds. Communications should be made to the superintendent, Rev. Henry Bright, Mansion House, Hanley-road, N.

A SUNDAY IN SYDNEY.

I HAVE been spending this Lord's Day in Sydney, and am much impressed with the earnest evangelistic work of all kinds that is being carried on in a variety of forms by almost all bodies of Christians. Even the quiet Friends were "missioning" the streets for a Gospel meeting of working people in their Meeting House, at which Mr. Sankey's hymns were being sung, a good lady saying to me, "I hope thee don't object to singing!"

On my way there I looked in at the Wesleyan large Centenary Mission Hall, which is being conducted on St. James's Hall lines, and was pleased to see great numbers of people crowding in. As I stood for a few minutes at the door I saw men-of-war's men, cabdrivers, with their numbers on their coats, and poor, sad-looking people of all sorts being drawn to the meeting. There are no really squalid poor in the colony, as we see them at home; no very shabby clothes or rags. A well-conducted brass band came playing along the streets leading to the hall, and composed, I hint, of the young men of the mission.

At the junction of almost every cross street with the main streets, I saw open-air meetings being held. In the centre of each was the familiar red flag of the Salvation Army, the Salvation Army lasses in the well-known bonnets, pleading earnestly with crowds around them.

In the centre of one open-air service, I saw the lamp of the Sydney Y.M.C.A., and a number of earnest young men following it, speaking from place to place, inviting "men only" to their Sunday evening evangelistic meeting in their own splendid hall. Looking in there, later on in the evening, an "after meeting" was being held, led by the president, Mr. David Walker, whose radiant, happy face gave force and power to his earnest Gospel appeals to young men. He told me they had just closed a meeting of five hundred young men, and were then holding a meeting of those the Gospel had drawn in.

Leaving the hall of the Y.M.C.A. I saw a light in the schoolroom of the Pitt-street Congregational Church, and found the church, under the care of Pastor Scott, was holding a mission, and the number of short prayers and testimonies freely offered witnessed to the new life and blessing they were enjoying as a church. The pastor asked for twelve volunteers to come to the meetings and personally lead inquiring ones to Christ. The number was soon offered for the work.

In the afternoon, in the magnificent park of Sydney, there were multitudes of people. Many were spending the day in pleasure in a variety of ways. On the other hand, there seemed to be extraordinary efforts being made to proclaim the Gospel message. All denominations appeared to be at work, but the largest concourse of people were gathered round three clergymen.

Asking a person what might be the cause of all this life and earnestness so plainly manifested, he told me it was the result largely of Rev. G. C. Grubb's late visit to the colony; that all Christians had been wonderfully stimulated to a more devoted life and more aggressive work for the Master. That this is greatly needed in these gay and pleasure-loving colonies is too plainly evident to a passing traveller. The people seem given over to racing, gambling, Sunday excursions, and concerts. I fear that in Australia even more than at home, there is a want of that righteousness, which now, as in all time, alone "exalteth a nation."

SOUTHSEA MISSION, PORTSMOUTH.—Writing with reference to his Gospel tent work, Mr. John Denning says:—"As in past years the Town Council and Government authorities have kindly granted us permission to pitch a tent on Southsea Common (where large numbers resort for pastime and pleasure), for the preaching of the Gospel during the coming summer. Portsmouth and its neighbourhood has grown exceedingly in population, and is now become a borough of about one hundred and sixty thousand inhabitants. As our noble ships are continually bearing our tars to and from different parts of the world, and as from time to time those dear men visit our meetings, we have a fine opportunity of sending the Gospel to different parts of the world. There are many openings in villages around where tent meetings may be held for a few weeks at a time with expectation of blessing, and for this purpose I have long had a desire to add to our Mission another tent. A new one is now being made that will cost, apart from seats, about £30, and will be ready for use about the end of May." Mr. Denning's address is Myrtle Cottage, St. James's-road, Southsea.

Lights and Shadows of Mission Work.

No. I.

When I reached X—— I discovered that my fellow-missioners had assembled themselves together with the mission workers in the large vestry of the old parish church. Hurrying off to join the party, I found them singing, with great gusto, "Rescue the perishing, care for the dying." "I wonder," said I to myself, "how many of these good folk have themselves been saved." The next minute I was asked to address the meeting, and, going straight to the point, I gave to my hearers the question I had been addressing to myself. Oh, those faces! It is as if I could see them now. An old ex-Primitive put on a sympathetic grin; but if the angry glances darted at me had been of a killing nature I should never have left that church alive.

It had been arranged by the Mission Committee that I should speak to the Sabbath-school children the next morning, and I went, with the rector as a companion, to carry out this appointment. Not a bit of it! A young gentleman held the door in his hand, and virtually refused me entrance. The rector did his very best to calm the other's ruffled temper, but all to no purpose, and reluctantly we turned away. After walking some distance in silence, my venerable friend began to "hum and ha" in a fashion that told me something else was coming; and after several preparatory preambles, he informed me that I had spoken of conversion on the preceding night too much after the manner of the Methodists, and that the minds of some of his people had been rather deeply wounded. I quoted John iii. 36, and left him to his thoughts.

Not one of the "workers" would stand by me at the open-air meeting in the afternoon. Two Nonconformists volunteered their help, or I should have been left alone. Rain came on, and getting wet I took a very bad cold. At the beginning of my first after-meeting I asked if some brother would lead us in prayer. No one responded to the appeal, and so I turned to one of the curates who was kneeling near where I stood. "I have not come prepared," was his answer. "Prepared or unprepared, do pray," said I. My cold, together with the rebuffs I had met, were making me a little bit dispirited. The dear fellow recited a collect, and grateful was I for the sound of his voice, though all too soon it left the meeting to the renewed reign of silence. The next day I asked the minister of a Primitive Methodist chapel, to bring some praying people to the mission. They came, but I had not well calculated the cost of the idea. Far be it from me to think evil of such ready helpers as they were, but at the time the thought just occurred to me that some of them were rather pleased with the feeling that they had come to teach "church-folk" how to pray. At any rate, they gave the after-meetings a rather lively character.

As the days and nights went by, it pleased God, as we believed, to save souls, among others, a Roman Catholic; and the mission became like one of those autumn days that, beginning with dense and chilling mist, end with a sunset of glory. In the middle of the first week, our superintendent friend honoured me with a call. He had heard of my cold, was sorry he had been rather hasty, told me that the people about there were rather peculiar, and at last, with reddening face, fell back on that terrible Saturday night, and my offensive question "Are you saved?" "You know," said he, "that some before you were most devoted Christians, and yet they resented such a question." Poor fellow! He was little more than a boy, though just about to be "ordained." When he had finished his apologetic and explanatory speech, I asked him whether Noah, or any one of his sons, could have been in admitted the impossibility of the thing. I went a little further, and asked him if a man could be in Christ and out of Christ at the same moment. There was another "No," and, asking him to remember that it meant a great deal to the patriarch and all his family to be in the Ark when the flood came, I begged him to use his imagination a little. "Suppose," said I, "that in the excitement of getting away from danger, Shem had missed Japhet, in the Ark, and had cried out, 'Japhet, where are you?' would Japhet have turned on him in a towering rage, asking what business it had been of his, or would he have regarded his brother's question as a mark of fraternal love?"

My young friend began to see at what I was aiming, and I ventured to point out to him that it would mean a great deal to be found in Christ when the storms of the last day should strike the earth. "If these worthy Christians and yourself are indeed in Christ," I asked, "why not acknowledge the truth? If you are not, why be offended with me for seeking to make you realise your danger?" He said but little; yet, when he left me, I noticed that, if not in spirit, he was considerably softened in manner.

There was something more to follow. One of my fellow-missioners, who afterwards became a bishop, and a well-known bishop, too, came to my rooms when the other had gone, and told me that he should have to thank God through all eternity for that Saturday night's address. This made matters still more pleasant, but I felt a strong longing for the last service to arrive. I preached four times during the afternoon and evening of the last day; but when my work was done, I took my portmanteau down to the station, started home by a night train, and have never seen X—— or its churches since.

WORK IN BUENOS AYRES.

The Spanish and Italian Mission conducted by Messrs. Torre and McCarthy in this great city goes forward with much blessing. Originally started early in 1890 in a room of the Y.M.C.A., the Mission has now spread into three different preaching stations, and a free school for the poorest children, some of whom had been rejected at the Government schools through insufficient clothing. These children are brought under Bible teaching; the teachers are devoted Christian women, who make this a work of love.

A late addition to the work is a meeting-room in one of the large "Conventillos," where some two hundred people lodge. Their lives were threatened at first, but now the Gospel is winning its way among the poor people.

Mr. Torre and his co-workers are engaged during the day in business, but give up all their spare time to the mission cause amongst the neglected masses of this great city. A hall is very much needed, and can be erected at a cost of £150 on leased land; already about £100 of this has come in, chiefly through a gentleman who has visited Buenos Ayres, and knows the work and the workers.

BARCELONA PROTESTANT COTTAGE HOSPITAL.—The report for last year says that thirty-eight patients have been under treatment, twenty-five of whom left the hospital quite cured, and five greatly relieved. In all 279 patients have passed through the institution, which has proved a blessing to Protestants of many nationalities. A remarkable case in the report is that of a Swiss, who tramped all the way from his native country to Spain. "It was mid winter. While crossing the Pyrenees he was overtaken by the snow, got lost, became numb, and fell asleep. Coming to himself, he walked three days without finding food or shelter. The marvel is that he ever reached Barcelona alive. With careful attention, he so far recovered from the effects of this terrible experience, as to be able to visit some hot baths in order to complete the cure." The hospital exists, first, to meet the need of Spanish Protestants, and those whose conscience repels the idea of their entering a Romanist Hospital; and secondly, for the reception of foreigners. Communications may be addressed to Miss A., Thackrah, 33, Woodberry-grove,

CAPE MOUNTED RIFLES.

The following extracts from the diary of Mr. Holt, the mounted missionary of the Cape General Mission, who is labouring among the Cape Mounted Rifles, will serve to show the valuable work that he is doing among this fine body of men. The force is scattered over a district as large as Ireland, in small camps or stations, consisting sometimes of less than half-a-dozen men. Far removed from the centres of population, there is little to break the monotony of their solitary existence. The men seldom enjoy any regular means of grace, and, being isolated from Christian society and example, it is little wonder if they become morally and spiritually hardened. Yet, here and there, our missionary is encouraged to find the ground prepared—hearts hungering after the bread of life:—

"January 15.—After breakfast I started for the next camp. Got there about 2 o'clock. The men seemed pleased to see me. The Lieutenant in charge wanted me to stay with him; but I thought it better to stay in the men's quarter, in order to get hold of them better. After dinner all the men came to one hut, and we had several hymns; then a portion of a chapter from the New Testament and a little talk. One of them offered me his bed for the night, but I insisted on sleeping on a mattress on the floor. Two of us continued talking on the subject of salvation, while the others listened. My companion in this conversation seems to desire the knowledge of forgiveness of sins and eternal life. I am hoping the light will soon dawn upon him.

"January 16.—Set out about 6 o'clock this morning for another camp, over forty miles off. Arrived about 7 p.m. Next day was Sunday, and I stayed all day. In the evening, at the request of two of them, I read part of the Church of England evening service, and gave a short address. One of these fellows is very agreeable, and while I lay on the floor and he on his bed at night, we had a long talk. He said he could not love anybody whom he had never seen, and that if Christ were to appear to him, then he might be able to love Him. At the close of our talk I said: "He that believeth HATH everlasting life." "That is a new way of looking at it," he said; "I will think over that."

"January 18.—Two or three hours brought me to another camp, situated in a small town. Counter attractions, in the shape of hotels, &c., make it difficult to get men to talk much about their souls' welfare, but I had one or two conversations. One was with a man who had been in the regiment over twenty years, and who was once a sergeant, but now a private. My heart goes out to such men. I tried to make him see that I loved him, and that my Saviour loved him. He did not talk much, but very kindly made me a cup of cocoa.

"January 20.—Arrived at a camp in a Dutch district; only two men and a corporal, one of whom is married. They board at the house of an Englishman. In the evening we had a little service. The owner of the house, a schoolmaster, played the accompaniment on an old cracked piano, and we sang some hymns. Seldom, if indeed ever, is there a chance of listening to the preaching of the Word here!

"January 21.—Another camp, three men and a sergeant. Service in the evening at a farmhouse. Farmer's daughter played the piano; about fifteen there, including children. The Lord was present, and I believe good results will ensue. The farmer's family are Christians. About once in two months a minister has a service here!"

Funds for the support of a second mounted missionary to the C.M.R. have been placed in the hands of the Cape General Mission, and should any young man who reads these lines feel led to offer himself for the post, he should apply without delay to Mr. Arthur Mercer, 2, Berkeley-terrace, Wimbledon, for further particulars.

UNION TABERNACLE, WANDSWORTH-ROAD, S.W.—A conference on Revival was held a few days ago. Helps and hindrances were discussed, and individual preparedness urged, the speakers being Revs. P. A. Milne and J. S. Harrison, Messrs. R. C. Morgan, W. R. Lane, E. Wright, W. Groves, and others. Pastor D. M. Cameron, in the report of last year's work, says: "The workers, chiefly members of the Church, most of whom have been brought to Christ among us, labour most earnestly for the ingathering of others to the fold of the Good Shepherd. After doing all we can to provide the means whereby to sustain the aggressive work, we have to exercise our faith continually in prayer that God will touch the hearts of others to make up the deficiency." Mr. Cameron's address is: Thurlow House, 515,

A Scottish Mission to Jews.

We make the following extracts from the very interesting statement submitted to the Free Church of Scotland General Assembly on Friday evening by Rev. James Wells, of Glasgow, convener of the Jewish Committee. It will be remembered that Mr. Wells last year paid a visit to Palestine, where he met with an accident, from which he has happily, in large measure, recovered:—

A firman has been granted for our hospital at Tiberias at a time when the Turkish Government had marked out for extermination most of the Christian agencies in Turkey. This firman is one of the best ever granted by the Sultan. It makes the property as safe as property can be, and it secures freedom from many burdens and harassments. You will ask, Why has the Sultan singled us out for this coveted favour? When in Tiberias, fully a year ago, four influential deputations, representing many races and religions, Jew and Gentile, waited upon our party, and, with oriental rhetoric, expatiated upon their gratitude to our church. The hospital, they said, would be the greatest boon we could bring them, and they all declared that they had done and would do their best to secure the firman. With Mr. Ewing we crossed the Jordan, and visited the leading chief in the district. He welcomed us, as Abraham welcomed the angels, and was eager to make a royal feast for us. Without saying a word to us about it, he sent his head man with us, and made him responsible for our safety so long as we should be in the Hauran. The reason of all this was that we were connected with the Tiberias Mission. Should any of you travel among the Bedouin, on the east of the Jordan, you should start from our Tiberias Mission, and that will be an 'open sesame' to you. We went as far East as Derat, the ancient Edrei, the capital of Og, King of Bashan, and on our return we were introduced to a sick man who had been brought all the way from Derat, sixty miles, to be healed by Dr. Torrance, who is now a real chief around the Sea of Galilee.

Along with Mr. Christie, Dr. Saadeh, of Safed, and his dispenser, we made a mission circuit through some of the remote villages in the highlands of Galilee. It brought us very near Christ, for He visited these very villages on his mission circuits, healing and evangelising. This is what happened to us. The whisper ran round that the healer had come, and in a few minutes a hundred or 150 villagers pressed upon us. The Doctor prescribed, and Mr. Christie gave them Gospels in their mother tongue, and those who could read gathered in groups around them and read to them the words of Life Christ had spoken to their forefathers in these very villages. We were like them that dream. It was as if, on a magician's mantle, we had been carried back nineteen centuries and planted in the crowd around Jesus of Nazareth. We all deeply felt the charm and pathos of the situation, and an American with us declared that he had never expected to see such a sight on earth, and that he would do all he could to aid such missions. Your Mission has found favour among all these people, and, through them, with the Sultan. Hence this firman. One can scarcely exaggerate the power of such a mission in lessening suffering, softening prejudice and commending Christ in the very cradle of Christianity.

This will be the only hospital between Jerusalem and Damascus, and between the Mediterranean and, so far as is known, the Euphrates. It may cost about £2500, and we have for it £1000 on hand. Mr. Ewing is called the 'Chas. Russell missionary,' because we receive £300 a year from an Australian friend in memory of a departed son. Might not this whole hospital, or a part of it, be accepted as a most grateful memorial of some relative whom God has taken home? The hospital is to have twenty-four beds, and each will cost twenty pounds a-year. An individual, a family, a flock, a Sabbath-school might provide a bed. A beginning has been made. One of the twin sons of Dr. and Mrs. Torrance has been called away; and they are going to support a cot for a memorial of him. Some wish to have a possession in the Holy Land. Here it is ready for them. By securing it they will not only gratify a natural and respectable Christian sentiment; they will also do something to heal the sick, and again to bring the kingdom of God nigh unto the Galileans. In any case, with this significant firman in our hands, we shall surely soon get everything we need for this unique enterprise.

The last thirty years have witnessed, not a change, but a revolution, in modern Jewry. Thousands of them are now reading the New Testament, and moving Christwards. They are now discovering the distinction between what they call 'Protestantism' and 'Christianity,' and the distinction between nominal and real Christians. During the year our missionaries have reported several interesting baptisms. Some ask us if it is not very hard to convert a Jew. We reply: It is; but we often find it very hard to convert a Gentile, even when of Christian parentage and in the most favoured Christian lands.

While thankful for some hopeful signs, we must cherish a sacred dissatisfaction with things as they are. The chief burden of my message from the East is, that if this mission is to prosper, we must have at home a true revival and a more apostolic type of Christianity. The chief causes of our failure are not to be found abroad. Among Jews, as among Gentiles, now, as in every age, men are to be won to Christ by the moral and spiritual splendour of the lives of professing Christians. The ancient appeal still closely touches our situation: 'For behold, darkness shall cover the earth, and gross darkness the peoples; but the Lord shall arise upon thee, and his glory shall be seen upon thee. And nations shall come to thy light, and kings to the brightness of thy rising' (Isaiah lx. 2, 3).

HEALING LEAVES.

The following incident occurs in a report recently received by the British and Foreign Bible Society from Italy:—Having been sent some time ago to Catania, with a view to trying if the climate of Sicily would suit his health better, one of the colporteurs was warmly received in the house of a gentleman, a member of the Waldensian Church there. This gentleman is the owner of a large orange-farm in a large village on the slopes of Mount Etna. There he took the colporteur for a visit, and the two tried their best to make the people acquainted with the Word of God; on leaving, the colporteur, at the request of his friend, left with him forty francs' worth of books, which, by little and little, were sold in the village. But, as often happens, the priests managed to get hold of a good number of the books, and made a bonfire of them in front of the church.

It was a windy day, and the wind blew one of the leaves, half burnt, to the feet of a man who was looking on approvingly from the threshold of his house. The man picked it up, and curiosity impelled him to keep it. What there was on those charred pages we cannot tell, but it made the man wonder that a book in which were found such beautiful words could be condemned to the flames by the priests. He felt a strong desire to know more of the book, and went secretly to the colporteur's friend, who sold him a Bible, and gave him such instructions that the man and his family have now been received into the Waldensian Church. What an amount of good even a few words from the Bible can do!

Mr. H. Cook's Mission Ship.

Writing from Penzance, Mr. H. Cook, of Gosport, reports blessing on evangelistic work, both on the French and Cornish coasts. He states that he is building a new mission steamer at Paignton. £1000 is needed by the end of August, when the vessel will be ready for work in the rivers and seaports both in France and at home. The £1000 he proposes to raise by the help of children and Christian friends in sixpenny shares. A young person attending the meetings went to several people ashore and in one day collected 120 sixpences. Others have taken this up, and many more have since been given by fishermen and townspeople. Forty thousand sixpences are needed to secure the vessel by the end of August.

THE VATICAN AND THE ROMAN PEOPLE.—Since 1870 the aristocracy of Rome, with the exception of five or six families, has turned the cold shoulder to the Vatican. Those who remain "faithful" render only small support to the Holy See. The Pope recently directed an inquiry into this, from his point of view, very unsatisfactory state of things, in order that measures might be devised for healing the defection. He was informed that the estranged families have come under revolutionary influences, and that the rising generation is attached to "the new régime." All possible means are being taken to enclose in the fold of the Church those who have "gone astray."

The People and the Land.

In the course of an address at Miss Macpherson's Home of Industry on Wednesday last week, Rev. D. Baron pointed out the fact that this century has witnessed a wonderful revival of the Jewish people. Breaking down those thick high walls and barred gates of the ghettos in which they have been imprisoned for so many centuries, they have stepped out into the light of day. Within these fifty years past, in the providence of God, the Jew has made himself felt everywhere, and "The People and the Land" have pressed themselves on the attention of the nations.

One remarkable fact bearing witness to the vitality of the Jewish nation is the marvellous increase in their numbers. The estimates of the actual number of Jews in the world at the present day vary from six to twelve millions. Having journeyed extensively in many parts of the world where Jews are to be found in large numbers, Mr. Baron, after careful computation, is of the conviction that twelve millions is not too high a figure. Considering that, scarcely two hundred years ago, Basnage, the most painstaking historian of his day, estimated that the number of Jews had been reduced by the terrible persecutions, sufferings and massacres they had endured to about three millions, the marvellously rapid increase of the peculiar people, considering the adverse circumstances under which this increase has been going on, must certainly be taken as a sign of the times. The same God who caused Israel to multiply so enormously after years of cruel bondage just before their deliverance from Egypt is repeating the miracle now that the Day-Spring from on high is once again about to visit them. It is a matter of fact that in many parts of the world, in proportion to their Gentile neighbours, the Jews are increasing at a ratio of three and four to one.

Simultaneous with the revival of the people has also taken place a revival of "the Land." A highway has been made to the East, and Palestine especially has been brought comparatively near to us. Now everybody knows and speaks about Palestine. By a revival of interest in the prophetic Scriptures within the same period the eyes of many of God's children have been directed to the East, and redemption is again looked for for the land and the people.

The attention of the nations, too, is now turned to Palestine, and one can already see how Jerusalem is likely to become a "burdensome stone to all peoples." There is already a jealous rivalry on the part of the nations as to whose influence shall be predominant in the Holy Land.

Then a spirit of change is coming over Palestine. Hitherto the land has been locked so as, in the providence of God, to remain a stereotyped commentary on the Book. Now there is a rapid change, there is a spirit of bustle, there is a rising and a shaking of itself from the dust of centuries. "But," you say, "is not Palestine a barren and desolate land?" Yes; but what have been the causes employed by God to bring about the foretold desolations?

I. First, Palestine is for the most part a hill country, which in ancient times was cultivated by means of terraces. These terraces have been neglected for centuries, and allowed to fall out of repair, so that the heavy torrents and terrific storms to which Palestine is subject in the rainy seasons, have carried away a good deal of the soil from the mountain sides into the sea. Owing to neglect of cultivation of the plains in some parts, the deserts have been allowed to encroach, and portions of the land which were once fruitful fields are now desert wastes.

II. But perhaps the chief cause of the present barrenness is, that practically for many centuries the land has been without a people to cultivate it, even as the people have been without a land. To this day, in spite of recent increase, it is a question if the whole population of Palestine comes up to one million.

III. The unseasonableness and scarcity of the rainfall until the last few years has been the crowning cause of the present barrenness. Mr. Baron next showed how these causes are being removed in the providence of God, especially how the banished population, and the withheld showers of rain, both "the former and the latter," are returning at the same time.

With regard to mission work Mr. Baron said the best opportunities of evangelising the Jews are undoubtedly in the lands of their dispersion before their return.

Pope v. Queen in Malta.

After a series of postponements and hindrances, it is expected that this most important question will come finally before a Judicial Committee of the Privy Council next month. Although it will be argued on both sides by the best men obtainable—and there is every need for a deeper interest to be aroused about the matter in England—those most concerned feel that their only hope is in prayer; in the God who hears and answers prayer, who alone can give the victory. Our friends at home naturally fail to grasp readily the immense importance of a question which primarily concerns but an island in the Mediterranean, in which they feel personally little interest. But this question is far further reaching than that, for it embraces principles which, if once conceded, will affect even our own loved island home.

It were well, therefore, briefly to recapitulate the circumstances at this time, that the sympathies of Christians in every part may be enlisted, and that in answer to their supplications the glory of victory may be to God alone.

The real point at issue is whether the Pope of Rome or the Queen of England shall be the actual sovereign of Malta. An attempt is being made to force the British Government to acknowledge canon law—the rule of the Pope—in Malta, on the ground that its establishment was guaranteed on our taking possession of the island in 1801, in the promise made to its people that the King of Great Britain would "protect your churches, your holy religion, your persons, and your property," and the promise made twelve years later, "to secure to the Maltese in the fullest manner the free exercise of their religion, to maintain the Ecclesiastical establishment," &c. This, after ninety years of a contrary understanding, it is desired to represent as an engagement to allow canon law to govern all marriages in which one party is a Roman Catholic, and the canon law on this point is that no such contracts shall be valid unless celebrated before a Roman Catholic priest, in accordance with the decree of the Council of Trent. Lord Salisbury has further declared that it is even doubtful whether marriages in which neither party is a Roman Catholic are valid unless so performed in Malta.

The suggestion is astounding. For ninety years marriages have thus been entered into with the licence of the Governors, and celebrated by the Protestant ministers, as in any other part of the British Dominions; and here with one sweep they are to be declared invalid, and the children of such unions illegitimate. The Church of Rome may have so considered them all along, as doubtless it does the marriages day by day performed in England; but what is that to us? Our law acknowledges even a civil marriage elsewhere; yet here in Malta it would acknowledge the supremacy of the Pope over its own institutions, and that on a fictitious argument never before heard of. Malta is not only the sole spot in Europe where civil marriages are not legal, but perhaps on the whole of God's earth.

To appreciate the actual practical effects of such a measure on the people of England, apart from the important precedent which it would afford for other matters, it is sufficient to say that over fifteen thousand British soldiers and sailors are more or less continually stationed in Malta, and that many hundreds of them marry Maltese women. Those who have been married by Protestant ministers are to be told that they are free to marry again, and a premium is to be set upon adultery, while their children are to be stigmatised as bastards!

To accept the conditions imposed by canon law, the Protestant party to the contract must swear to bring up the children as Romanists, and to comply with other requirements of the Council of Trent. Now, from the point of view of Rome this is as important and just a precaution as any existing among Protestant churches to prevent similar mixed marriages, as, for instance, in the case of the Society of Friends. But that is no reason why a State, proclaiming, and elsewhere maintaining, complete religious liberty, should step in to enforce the desires of a religious body upon those who do not acknowledge its authority. To do so is to take a most decisive step towards the re-establishment amongst us of the Inquisition; for those who submit to the Council of Trent acknowledge the powers, and place themselves under the jurisdiction, of that Court, in its enforcement of its own canon law. History has told us what that means.

If the arguments brought forward in support of this deprivation of the rights of British subjects under the rule of Queen Victoria, are to be conceded, then, if the pagan or Mohammedan authorities in India or elsewhere demand the enforcement of their religious law in such matters on Christians, on the ground that we have promised to secure to them complete religious liberty, the British Government will be in honour bound to grant their request. Our only safeguard against the immediate danger of such a contingency is that, as yet, there is a less proportion of avowedly pagan or Mohammedan British officials than there is of Roman Catholic.

The disreputable pandering for votes destroys all hope that at the next election either political party may take the matter up with energy upon the side of simple justice; and it seems as though it were likely to be shunted to the eve of a dissolution, and then to be hurried through in an unsatisfactory, unaccountable way, without more than a semblance of a hearing. To provide against this, the assistance of every independent politician is required; and, as has already been said, more than all, the interest and prayers of God's people everywhere are needed to prevent a telling victory for heathen Rome.

REVIVAL AND FAMINE IN INDIA.

Sir,—We have had times of refreshing from the Lord in our Chingleput Mission in South India during the past eleven months. Hundreds of the natives are entering the Church of Christ. Village after village is being stirred to its depths, and many villagers are renouncing idol and demon worship and seeking instruction at the hands of our Christian workers.

Since May of last year we have baptised one hundred persons, and admitted 410 as catechumens. For these we have instituted regular services on week-days and Sabbaths, and built, or are building, prayer-houses and catechists' houses wherever there is a congregation. It is rather a difficult undertaking to instruct so many people. Our staff of mission agents is doing its best to cope with the new work, but more agents still are needed to do justice to it.

The people belong to the pariah, or peasant, class, and are ignorant and illiterate. In social matters they occupy an inferior position, and are despised and frequently unjustly treated by high-caste Hindus. Notwithstanding this, they often are intelligent and industrious, and in some things indispensable in agricultural pursuits. Those who have placed themselves under Christian instruction are mostly well-to-do in ordinary years of prosperity and possess land of their own. But, owing to the drought existing more or less during the last three years, they are suffering, with others of their class, as well as with their more fortunate caste-neighbours. Their resources have become exhausted, and so they find extreme difficulty in obtaining food to eat.

This state of matters will, in all probability, continue for about three months longer, till the South West Monsoon fairly sets in. But if the rains fail at this time, the famine will be great indeed. As it is, some of our poor Christians are in great distress. Help will be necessary for some time to come, and I shall be extremely thankful if friends of the poor would kindly aid at this trying time. Clothes are urgently needed for almost all of our poor Christians, and for many non-Christians. Not much is needed for each. The cost of a woman's cloth is only 3s., that of a man's about 1s., and that of a boy's a little less. The women's cloths would be purchased out here, as special cloths are made in India, but the cloths for men and boys could be purchased at home and sent out. They should be of cotton, 1¼ yards broad and 3½ yards long, the cloths for boys being shorter. If friends would kindly send cloth or money to Mr. Robert Young, Free Church Offices, Edinburgh, he would transmit such to me. A piece of forty yards would clothe twelve men; and £1 about seven women.

I have to thank all the friends who sent their contributions last year to feed those suffering from the famine. Their help was invaluable, and cheered many a poor sufferer.—Yours sincerely, A. Andrew.

CORNWALL.—The special services conducted during the year by the Cornwall District Wesleyan lay evangelist have been the means of gathering in of many, large numbers professing conversion.

SALVATION ARMY FARM COLONY.

BY GENERAL BOOTH'S PRIVATE SECRETARY.

Within the past few weeks General Booth has paid three visits to his Farm Colony at Hadleigh, near Southend, and seen it under favourable and unfavourable conditions.

Wednesday week was the last occasion on which the General inspected the Farm. A representative party accompanied him. The Salvationist immediately concerned in the development of the social scheme, in so far as it throws light upon its applicability to other lands, was there in the Army's foreign secretaries; the politician, with a practical knowledge of the difficulties connected with the transfer of the city's surplus labour to the green fields; the philanthropist, desirous of seeing for himself the use to which his money had been put; the man of the world, with an eye to the £. s. d. side of the experiment; and the ardent sympathiser with whatever is calculated to reform the depraved and save the sinner, were all composed in the small group.

The party made a careful inspection of everything—the soil, the fruit and cereal fields, the poultry, piggery, and rabbit farms, the tram and railways lines, the wharf and brickyards, the sawmill and chain factory, the dormitories and dining-rooms, the meeting-place, officers' quarters, laundry, offices, library, barber's shop, &c.; and their verdict was—"Remarkable! Promising! Surprising! Wonderful."

The General's remarks to the men on the occasion of a former visit express, I should say, the sentiments of the whole party who went to the colony on this particular day. He said to 250 colonists as they sat at dinner (Irish stew, a big junk of bread, and college pudding) "I am encouraged by what I have seen to-day. This is going to be a profitable concern. The money spent upon it is not going into a swamp where we can get no return. We believe it is going to be the beginning of the making of a great moral machine. We shall dig up from the city pits thousands of men and women, and by means of what we shall have in operation here, make them into true, contented, and happy citizens. We shall need patience. I am £30,000 and more in debt over the undertaking. I must have patience in trying to wipe the debt off. You must also have patience—patience with your governor, and patience in going up the ladder of deliverance. Don't halt till you get to the top. In getting there you may earn more than you will get. Never mind. This is a great partnership, and the margin will go to helping your former companions in misery and wickedness." This statement evoked much cheering, significant of the education the colonists are receiving. They are on the farm as brothers in one family, and helpers of each other.

Attention was principally directed to the colonists themselves—their character, work, and demeanour. There was only one opinion passed, and that was they belonged to the class most desirable and most difficult to raise; that they were heroically bending their backs to their work in the fruit-fields and brick-yards, &c., and that they manifested a disposition of obedience, cheerfulness, and application to duty.

The social scheme of the Army, of which the colony is the second part, deserves the warm and generous support of all classes, and especially at the present moment. Although the capital outlay has necessarily exceeded the amount first intended, the amount required for the working of the scheme in its entirety will not be beyond the original estimate made by the General, viz., £30,000 per annum. As that sum is far from contributed, I venture to ask your readers to rally to our help in a noble and substantial manner.

CHINESE IN LONDON.—Mrs. Piercy, wife of Rev. G. Piercy, the veteran Chinese Missionary, recently paid Colchester a visit. She gave addresses on the Opium Traffic, and on the work of the London China mission, of which Mr. Piercy has charge. Mrs. Piercy appeared in various Chinese costumes. A good collection was taken for the Mission.

SPAIN.—A correspondent writes from Vallidolid:—"I daresay you hear from others how open Spain is now to the true evangelist. It is quite remarkable. In Catalonia, where at last they are telling to the Catalans in their own tongue the wonderful works of God, several villages have asked the evangelists to come to them. God is working there.

Our Seamen.

The British and Foreign Sailors' Society has been called during these past few years to a great forward movement. As it has extended to regions beyond, God has blessed it in a very remarkable manner in the home ports. The union meetings just held by the agents and workers from home and foreign ports were times of refreshing from the presence of the Lord. Missionaries from the Continental and out ports were greatly cheered and strengthened by the great things the Lord has done in London. The afternoon Conference, which culminated at the Lord's table, will not soon be forgotten as moments rich in blessing.

In the evening, Admiral Grant presided over a large meeting at the central headquarters, where glorious testimonies were given of the grace of God to the Society's stations recently established in South American ports, where men and means are still needed. Precious testimonies of the Lord's marvellous loving-kindness to the work in the ports of Europe, including Russia, were given. Three noonday prayer meetings are now regularly conducted in the Society's stations in London.

A consecration meeting was held at the new Institute and Rest, principally founded by Louisa Lady Ashburton, at the Millwall Docks, which is to be publicly opened by the Duchess of Teck on July 14. It was reported that already meetings for seamen are conducted in Spanish, German, Scandinavian, and English. Special services are also conducted at the Seamen's Rest, Victoria and Albert Docks.

The great meeting held at the Mansion House was full of the forward movement. The Lord Mayor pleaded with the City to consecrate more of its wealth to the Society's extensions in London, the greatest seaport of the world, and to the work in ports more distant. Lord Brassey, who recently returned from another voyage in the Sunbeam, told of the godly agents labouring in ports he had visited, looking for their reward in heaven. He suggested a handy, suitable book of sermons for use at sea. He asked for still more religious work among seamen, and spoke of the wise way the limited funds of the Society were administered by a responsible board. Sir Francis de Winton told of the many fine Christian characters among seamen, and said he would report to Prince George and the Royal Family all that he saw and heard of the great work done by the Society.

Archdeacon Sinclair urged that the report of the Society, which was one of the most interesting he had ever seen, should be read. He told of what he had personally seen at the Society's stations. Rev. Alex. Francis spoke of the Secretary's visit to St. Petersburg, the need of that port, and the steps taken towards a new institute and mission there. Friends came from Rotterdam—Missionary Jones, and Mr. Walker, to tell that the Bethel there was too small, that a mission conducted by Mr. Spurgeon's evangelists was greatly blessed, that a friend had promised £500 towards a new seamen's institute and Bethel, friends on the spot £250, but that one could not be built facing the river under £4,000. The work had also so grown in Hamburg—that mighty port—that the missionary pleaded for a mission steam launch; he also was able to tell of conversions to the Lord.

Mr. J. Herbert Tritton and Mrs. Tritton invited the missionaries to their hospitable home, to spend the last evening of their stay in town. Mr. Tritton, having been long associated with ships and the ports of the Continent, has visited and been in direct touch with stations in such great ports as Antwerp, and many others. After bodily and social refreshment, brief prayers and testimonies followed in rapid succession, transporting us to every point of the compass, but always to the throne of grace. Harbours of refuge, busy docks, seamen of many nations, wonderful deliverances, tracts used by God, Scriptures afloat, many-sided salvation, made the heart sing for joy.

Mr. Tritton, the Chairman, made a list of blessings for which praise should be given to God. After his valuable and helpful address, the workers and their varied spheres of labour were sweetly commended in prayer to the Heavenly Father by Mrs. Tritton, and so ended days of blessing long to be remembered.

Mr. Edward W. Matthews, the Secretary, asked prayer that God would enable them to "go forward" with the needed Seamen's Rest in the West India Dock-road; not only an old public-house there called The Jolly Sailor, but a cottage behind it had come in a very remarkable manner into their hands.

MR. MOODY IN THE EAST.

After leaving Jerusalem, Mr. Moody, accompanied by his wife and son Paul, and his friends, Mr. and Mrs. Peter Mackinnon, paid a flying visit to Egypt. The experiences of these days, spent in lands so sacred to the devout Christian heart, must long remain a happy and inspiring memory. We are glad to be able to give some brief notes of the tour:—

Mr. Moody had a delightful meeting at Jaffa (Joppa), interesting and familiar to all Bible readers from childhood's days. He fully appreciated the privilege of preaching the glorious Gospel in these regions, around which cluster so many associations relating to the first sending of the Gospel to us who are Gentiles.

The party remained for a day at Port Said. Always willing to testify for his Master, Mr. Moody agreed to conduct a meeting, which had to be convened at very short notice. A large room was got ready as if by magic, by the help of many willing hands, placed at the evangelist's disposal by one of the merchants. Messages were sent here and there to tell the residents of Port Said of this impromptu gathering, and a notice was sent to the man-of-war lying in the harbour. Scant though the notice was, a goodly number filled the room. It was a pleasure to see the eager, responsive faces of the marines. Mr. Moody knows well how to adapt himself to his audience. Thus, on the border of the land of Egypt the evangelist had the joy of preaching the Gospel.

In his first contact with Eastern peoples Mr. Moody was intensely interested; and as he made further acquaintance with their habits his first impressions deepened. His two chief thoughts were: the degraded position of woman and the neglected condition of the children. He was able fully to realise that they were descendants of the children of Ham.

The passage through the canal was made by electric light. Now the old desert is lighted up and coloured liked fairyland. Mr. Moody's interest was keen; he remained on deck till the vessel had passed Kantarah, where the canal cuts the old caravan route from the north No doubt, by this route went the patriarchs, and all those who came "down into Egypt." How the bygone centuries crowd upon one another in these old lands!

The travellers passed from Ismailia through the desert and then through the old Land of Goshen, where the remains of two store cities were lately found. At Cairo Mr. Moody had the joy of preaching three times in the church of the American Presbyterian Mission. Although the notice was necessarily short because of the indefiniteness of Mr. Moody's plans, large audiences gathered on the week-night and on the Sunday. The Word was with power, and the visit must be a memorable one in that community.

Mr. Moody was favoured with fine weather on the short return voyage from Port Said to Naples, and was able to preach to a crowded audience in the saloon of the large steamer Orient; and again (by request both times) on the second-class deck, where a fine open-air meeting was held. Sunday was spent at Naples, and the evangelist had two opportunities of engaging in his loved work. With much joy he met on the arrival of the steamer an old Glasgow convert of '74. Rev. Mr. Johnston Irvine, of the Free Church at Naples, was unfortunately absent. In Florence also, at short notice, a good meeting was held; loving friends of Mr. Moody are to be found everywhere. Rev. Dr. M'Dougall welcomed him gladly.

THE BEGGARS OF ROME form a class by themselves, and as such they need a special effort to reach them. This has been made for some time by Mrs. Wall with great encouragement. The work among them includes a Medical Mission, the beggars having special days, one for men and one for women. The various individuals who have sunk to this position have often strange tales to tell, but to them the strangest of all is how the Lord of Glory stooped to man's estate because He loved us. After the meetings for the very poor, bread is dealt out, which not only serves as an attraction, but also shows that the sympathies expressed by their friends are real. Then there are mothers' meetings, and the work of the Bible women in the homes. Friends passing through Rome would do well to call on Wednesday mornings at 10.30 at 124, Via Lungaretta, by St. Mary's in Trastevere, or on Friday mornings at 10.30, at Vicolo d'Orfeo.' J. B. M.

THE SOCIETY OF FRIENDS.

The Yearly Meetings of Dublin and London follow each other about a fortnight apart. This year there is again some numerical decline in Ireland. Yet the tone of the Meeting throughout was hopeful and thankful. Much unity prevailed, and advancement seemed hoped for.

London Yearly Meeting is unusually large and interesting, younger Friends forming a prominent feature of the assemblies. Several American Friends add interest and profit to the meetings—with their freshness of thought and healthful freedom of expression. The statistics again show a small increase, both in the actual membership and also of adherents, and nine new meetings are reported as started, or acknowledged during the year.

The Home Mission Committee, reappointed for three years, has exhausted its tenure of office, and the burning question of the year is its reappointment or otherwise. The revival in operation, both here and in America, has resulted in the setting apart of missionaries, both as evangelists and also to work in small and dying meetings, or in closed meeting-houses, so as to reach out the hand to those needing the Gospel, both in the great cities and among our rural populations. This has excited fears among some Friends, and the Yearly Meeting has been called on to reconsider its course. While we write the discussion goes on, and, we doubt not, the question will be wisely settled in harmony with the growing missionary convictions and practices of revived Quakerism.

The annual Foreign and Home Mission meetings were held on Monday and Tuesday evenings of this week. Any lowering of the flag, either in home or foreign missionary work, would be distinctly retrogressive, and a real loss both to the Society of Friends and to the world.

FRIENDS' FOREIGN MISSIONS.

The annual meeting of the Friends' Foreign Mission Association was held on Monday evening at Devonshire House, Bishopsgate-street, E.C. Workers from various parts of the great harvest-field told of rich blessing upon the efforts that had been put forth; enlarged upon the obligation of embracing the increasingly numerous and important opportunities that are offering for evangelisation among the heathen; and in most cases appealed earnestly for more labourers to be sent out, and extended and deepened sympathy to be shown for the work. A crowded audience listened with attention marked by evidences of enthusiastic interest.

The financial year, during which about £14,000 was raised, closed with the sum of £250 due to the treasurer, and the deficit has since grown considerably. According to the statement of the Chairman, Mr. J. E. Wilson, the Association has fifty missionaries, and those who carry on the important undertakings in Madagascar were greatly cheered last year by tokens of the Divine favour. The Holy Spirit was poured out, in answer to prayers extending over many years, and many who have been brought up in the now very numerous Friends' Schools, were among those who confessed the name of Christ. The Chairman also stated that there is no lack of workers willing, and apparently well qualified, to go out to reinforce the various stations; but, so far, the support is not equal to a development of the missions such as is so urgently called for.

Dr. Dixon, who has just returned from a tour in company with the veteran Isaac Sharp, spoke of the work in India, making a strong appeal for workers of both sexes, especially such as have medical qualifications. Dr. Hingston Fox described the Mission at Brumana, in Syria, emphasizing the beneficence of the operations of the training-home, from which boys had gone forth to occupy positions of great usefulness in life, and sustain high reputations as Christians. Workers from Madagascar and other lands also delivered addresses, not by any means overlooking their personal difficulties and failures, in the joyous statement of the successes and victories of the Gospel as they teach and live it among superstitious and benighted peoples.

A USEFUL HINT.—A young Christian, wishing to serve the Lord and help others, collected the hats and bonnets cast aside in the family, trimmed them with bright, cheap material, and sold them for a few pence to the members of a mothers' meeting, the money thus paid being laid out in useful books to lend to them.

Mr. McNeill in Dundee.

This evangelist has concluded his Mission in Dundee. Not for many a year has the city been so deeply moved. Large churches and halls have been densely crowded, and there have also been great gatherings in the open air. As many were anxious to hear him who could not attend his evening meetings, he discontinued his addresses to business men, and instead, had afternoon meetings in St. Paul's Free Church open to all. So great was the interest manifested that the people came an hour before the advertised time. Mr. McNeill has been much impressed with the openness and readiness of the people, and publicly stated that in no place in Scotland, since he and Mr. Burke commenced work, had they found greater willingness to hear the Gospel.

All classes have been attracted by the preacher's bold and fearless speaking, and by his clear presentation of the truth. Professional men, merchants, manufacturers, and working-men have sat side by side listening to his fresh, stirring addresses. Many of the ministers have worked heartily with him. In the after meetings, in answer to his appeals, the anxious have been very ready to stand up to be prayed for. One of the most noticeable things in the work is the number who have been converted while listening to the address, or in the after meeting, even before they have been personally dealt with. While standing up to be prayed for they have accepted Christ, and when approached afterwards by the workers they have frankly confessed that the great decision had already been made.

Very touching were some of the requests for tickets for the converts' meeting to be held on Friday next. One man came pleading for a ticket for his wife. He himself was converted a few months ago, and although he could not say his wife was saved, she was very near the Kingdom, and he was so anxious to see her saved. Another man, who had come miles from the country, asked one for his son, a tall, strapping fellow, who was standing in the passage, thoroughly broken down.

The local newspapers have dealt very generously with Mr McNeill. They have given fair reports of his addresses and appreciatory notices. On the last evening of the Mission he publicly thanked them, and said they had really served the Mission well, for a newspaper acts as a splendid tract distributor; it finds its way into every house and every public-house.

The last evening of the Mission will be long remembered. The large Steeple Church was packed; people stood in all the passages; even the pulpit stairs were blocked. Mr. McNeill preached from the story of the rich young ruler, and showed that if his contention of having kept the law was true, the mission of the Lord Jesus Christ was the greatest mistake that had ever been made. No need of a Saviour if a man could save himself. With great power he pressed home the truth that every man without Christ must be a failure. The ruler went away from Christ and so could we, but it would only be to meet Him again, if not in this world, then in the world to come.

Mr. Burke's Gospel solos, sung with skill and feeling, have been much appreciated, and have deepened the impressions made by the preacher's appeals.

Incidents.

In one of the meetings a woman asked another sitting beside her if she liked Mr McNeill. "Like him!" she answered. "Why, since he came my mother and five sisters have been converted." No wonder her heart was full. She and hers will not soon forget the visit of the evangelist.

Mr. McNeill received a letter from a young man, part of which he read at one of the meetings. It was to the effect that he was to leave for the Continent the following day. He had been on his way to see a friend and bid him farewell and have a glass with him. While passing the Steeple Church he noticed the placard announcing the meetings. He read it, and said sneeringly to himself, "Another of these wandering evangelists; another intake." He passed on, but something compelled him, after going a few steps, to turn back, and scarce knowing what he did he went into the church. There God met him: not only was he awakened, but on the same evening he was led to decide for Jesus Christ; and he wrote to the preacher saying that he was leaving next day for the Continent a changed man.

At one of the large open-air meetings for factory workers during the meal-hour, a man was heard just before the meeting criticising and jeering at the preacher. "He was just another of the money-making tramps." A Christian man standing by expostulated, and said, "Give him a chance; wait and hear him before you judge." The grumbler was still, and remained to listen; after ten minutes' attention he said, "Why, man, that is the greatest man I've ever heard," so completely was he disarmed. J. S.

CAMBRIDGE NOTES.

The University Sermon, on May 15, was preached by Professor Ryle. He condemned those who loved to take single texts of Scripture, interpreting them according to their own will, while utterly neglecting to look to the context to see if it would bear such a rendering. He claimed for the Bible a thorough study and examination, of which he complained there was not sufficient among the Christians of the present day.

On Monday week, a meeting of the Cambridge Ethical Society was held in the small room of the Guildhall, when Dr. Felix Adler gave a lecture on the "Ethical Elements in Religion." Professor Sedgwick presided, and the attendance included a large number of lady students. Dr. Adler said they were able to classify religious history into three stages. (1.) The individualistic or materialistic age. (2.) The non-individualistic. (3.) The ethical stage. As to criticism, Dr. Adler said that if historical and rational criticism should do its utmost, it could not touch the vital kernel of Christianity.

OXFORD NOTES.

The Bishop of New York (Dr. Potter) is at present staying in Oxford, and on Sunday last gave an account of the work of the Protestant Episcopal Church of America.

The Oxford House at Bethnal-green gives an opportunity to Oxford men of becoming acquainted with life and work in East London. A largely-attended meeting was held on Sunday evening, May 15, in Exeter College, in aid of it.

The Hibbert Lectures on the Origin and Growth of Religion, as illustrated by the Old Testament, are being delivered this year by Mr. Claude G. Montefiore. Their rationalistic character is a suggestive and painful evidence of how far some modern Jews have departed from the oracles of God.

The distribution of Gospel books at the Eights, or summer boatraces, which was commenced some years ago by the late Henry Bazely, has again been carried on by Rev. C. J. Casher, curate of St. Aldate's, and his helpers, among the crowds that have been in Oxford during the last week.

Professor Sanday, of Exeter College, has been appointed Bampton lecturer for 1893, and will take as his subject, "The History and Origin of Biblical Inspiration." Dr. Sanday's distinction in the field of New Testament scholarship will ensure a valuable course.

Mr. Arrowsmith, of the Children's Special Service Mission, has been holding meetings among the Undergraduates with the view of obtaining helpers for the seaside summer work. Hitherto the majority of helpers have been Cambridge men, but it is confidently believed that more Oxford men will be forthcoming this year.

The Archbishop of Canterbury has organised a mission on behalf of the Assyrian Christians, who are usually called Nestorians, and whose record is one of the most interesting and profitable parts of church history. The Dean of Argyll and the Isles, who has been labouring there, gave an account of the work at a meeting held on May 18.

The excellent work of the Young Women's Christian Association continues to be maintained under the guidance of Mrs. Palmer, wife of Archdeacon Palmer, and other Oxford ladies. In providing lodgings for young women away from home, in affording opportunities for reading and recreation, and, above all, by means of Gospel meetings and Bible-classes, the Association is doing quiet but most real service.

THE CHURCH ARMY is about to start one or two small market-garden farms, in order to provide labour test for men in training for emigration. For these undertakings about £10,000 more will be required this year than last. The Army has received from the clerk of the Bath Union a letter testifying to the excellence of the work of the Bath Church Army Labour Home. It says:—"Not only has it effected a saving to the ratepayers of close upon £49 in twelve months, but it has succeeded in uplifting apparently hopeless cases in a way which the Guardians are powerless to do. They could offer these men the workhouse, but nothing more. During the first twelve months, fourteen union cases were received into the Home. Six were sent out into situations and have never returned to the workhouse. Five are believed to be doing well and earning faom 15s. to 35s. per week. The Guardians commend what it is hoped may be a vastly increased power for good all over the country."

DEATHS AT OLD CALABAR.

Disease and death have invaded the United Presbyterian Mission Station of Old Calabar, West Africa. Rev. Hugh Goldie writes: "The mysterious influenza has caused an extensive sickness among us, but those whose death we most especially feel and lament have been taken from us by other types of disease. Our brother Mr. Porteous was about to visit the up-river stations, especially Okureke and Ibum, in which new places we have tried the experiment of leaving two of the native agents educated by the Presbytery to form the stations themselves. He was taken from us and his most saintly life cut short ere he had well begun the fight. Dr. Rae, who came out as medical missionary in the latter part of 1890 with his young wife full of energy and zeal according to knowledge, was then appointed to carry out the plans of Mr. Porteous. He got as far as Ekpisim in Akimakuna when he also was called home.

"Now I have to record the death of our good King Eyo, a sketch of whose life was published in The Christian of October last year. He died last month of paralysis. As the disease gained on him his power of thought and speech decreased, so that on my last visit to him he was beyond earthly ministry. The spiritual world was opening to him meanwhile, the Saviour meeting him in the dark valley as He met those who had just gone before. In the death of the King the community has lost a power for good; the Mission an earnest supporter; our congregation here an active worker, and I myself an attached and helpful friend who, for many years, has been ready to put his hand to any scheme for promoting the spread and influence of the Gospel.

"His death was publicly proclaimed last week by the firing of a salute, flags half-mast, and a vast assembly of mourners from all quarters, and now the town lies as quiet as if this event had not occurred. How great a change from the days, you will remember, when hundreds of slaves would have been murdered to keep him company in the other world!"

A correspondent who sends this extract reminds us that Mr. Goldie, the writer of the letter, has been "praying and working" in Old Calabar since the commencement of this Mission by the United Presbyterian Church of Scotland, in 1846—well-nigh half a century ago. The monthly reports given in The Missionary Record of that church for the present month are full of encouragement, and supply songs of thankfulness.

Dublin Believers' Meetings.

Mr. George F. Trench requests us to state on behalf of those heretofore concerned in the arrangement of the Dublin Believers' Meetings, that they are unable to make the usual announcement for the first week in June, and fear that it will be impossible, in the limited time now available before the summer exodus from Dublin, and in view of conferences elsewhere with which it is important not to clash, to arrange for these meetings in the present year.

They have had an unbroken record of blessing for thirty years, and the present interruption causes the greatest regret, tempered by the hope and prayer that in 1893 they may be resumed on the same lines as always, and with renewed vigour, zest and power.

MR. HENRY HUTCHINSON has conducted a successful ten days' mission at St. Simon and St. Jude's, Anfield, Liverpool. Quite a number of children were led to yield themselves to the Saviour.

CHILDREN'S SCRIPTURE UNION.—The following are the portions for the ensuing week:—Sun., May 29, Psalms xxvi. 1-12; Mon., May 30, xxvii. 1-14; Tues., May 31, xxviii. 1-9; Wed., June 1, 1 Timothy i. 1-17; Thurs., June 2, ii. 1-15; Fri., June 3, iv. 1-16; Sat, June 4, vi. 1-21.

PORTSMOUTH.—A six days' mission for young people at Lake-road Baptist Sunday-school was conducted recently by Mr. Jones, of the Sunday-school Union, London, and proved very successful. Mr. Jones' addresses were marked throughout by clearness, earnestness, and fidelity to Gospel truth; and it is believed a great deal of good will result from them. The teachers have received a fresh impetus in their work, and several scholars have professed faith in Christ.

CHILDREN'S SPECIAL SERVICE MISSION.

Mr. E. Arrowsmith, at Eastbourne, May 27 to 29; Mr. J. S. Tyler, Birmingham, during May, for Scripture Union Meetings; Mr. T. Lewes Sayer, Streatham, May 28 and 29; Mr. Henry Hutchinson, St. Matthew's Schools, Brixton, June 1 to 3, at 6.30; Mr. Reginald Callender, Cox Green Mills, Bolton, June 5-14; the 25th anniversary of the "Children's Special Services," Hawkstone Hall, Westminster-bridge-road, May 31, at 7 p.m.

News Notes.

Messrs. Moody and Sankey will visit Wandsworth this week, holding a few meetings there with the friends in that locality who have been carrying on Christian work for the last eight years in Down Lodge Hall, which was erected as a memorial of their labours there in 1883. The Evangelists will also visit Stratford Conference Hall, which was erected near the site of their former work in that district. They do not propose to hold any other services in London at present.

Dr. Barnardo's "Young Helpers' League" has now nearly nine thousand "companions," as its members are called. An adjunct to the League has been started for those over eighteen years of age, to be called the Voluntary Association of Adult Helpers, or "V.A.A.H." Members of these two organisations can have tickets for Dr. Barnardo's annual meeting in the Albert Hall on June 22 at half-price.

The special appeal issued seven months ago by Rev. D. B. Hankin on behalf of the Mildmay Institutions, has realised close on £4000. The annual expenditure of these institutions is £28,000. Intending visitors to the coming Mildmay Conference will do well to bear that fact in mind.

The letter of invitation to the Keswick Conference on July 25-30 is issued, as usual, by Mr. Robert Wilson, of Carlisle. One paragraph says: "It behoves all who love God to keep close to his Word, in these days when many are turning away from the truth, and lightly esteeming that Book, 'written by inspiration of God,' and slighting the Gospel message of salvation." Mr. Postlethwaite, Eskin place, Keswick, will again attend to applications for apartments; those taking rooms for longer than one week will find it easier to secure accommodation early.

The Bishop of London has written to Rev. Dr. Lunn, with reference to the approaching conference at Grindelwald, that the term "common communion" can only be applied when the "celebrants" are ministers of different branches of the Christian church. Dr. Lunn announces that no common communion will be held. In these circumstances it is difficult to see how union is to be advanced.

The Daily Chronicle, whose daily page of literary notes and reviews is a very interesting feature, commenting on the failure of Mrs. Humphrey Ward's latest book, "David Grieve," says that the author supplied herself with a big library of French literature before she wrote the book, but she has not herself realised the religious experience she sets herself to describe.

Rev. Alfred Turner, Ashford, Kent, has addressed a letter to Mr. Gladstone on behalf of voters who feared that the establishment of Home Rule in Ireland would enable the Roman Catholics to enact laws in favour of their church and detrimental to Protestantism. They wanted to know from Mr. Gladstone whether, if a Liberal Government came into power, their Home Rule Bill would entirely withhold from an Irish Parliament all means to regulate, endow, or otherwise meddle with religious subjects. Mr. Gladstone's reply is as follows:—"You can set your minds quite at ease. The best legislative security and assurance is an imperial prohibition of all ecclesiastical establishment or preference. Such a prohibition the Home Rule National party promise."

In his new book on Persia, Mr. G. N. Curzon paints a very sombre picture of the official corruption which prevails. The hold of Islam as a religious system, Mr. Curzon believes, "is not seriously weakened. Fanaticism can still be played upon by adroit fingers, and the day is yet far distant when the Crescent will be supplanted in Iran by the Cross."

Mr. George Muller presided at a meeting in Bristol on Sunday week for the first time since his return from his missionary journey on the Continent. Though over eighty-seven years of age (says a correspondent of The Daily Chronicle) he delivered an address of half-an-hour's duration on the first section of Psalm cxix. with the same vigour and intensity which characterised his pulpit utterances in his earlier years. Eighteen years ago, when he had concluded forty-three years of pastoral work, he resolved to devote himself to preaching in foreign lands. Since then he has made sixteen tours in the principal cities and towns of the world, and it is said he has preached three thousand sermons and travelled one hundred-and-fifty thousand miles. In August 1890 he left England for a missionary tour through Austria, Germany, Switzerland, France, and Italy, and has now returned to resume his work in Bristol.

A census bulletin of the leading religious denominations of Canada just issued, shows that the adherents of the Roman Catholic religion considerably outnumber those of any other denomination in the Dominion, being no less than 1,990,465. Of Protestant denominations the Methodists come first with 847,469 adherents, being followed by the Presbyterians with 755,199. The members of the Anglican Church number 644,106. The Baptists count 303,749 followers, the Congregationalists 28,155, and the Lutherans 63,979. The percentage of increase in each denomination is about the same.

A correspondent of the New York Independent severely criticises Sir Edwin Arnold's superficial utterances on the social condition of women in Japan, and says:—"It is plainly and painfully evident that the realest and deepest need of the women of Japan is neither petty legislation nor fulsome adulation, but the vitalising, transforming, and uplifting Gospel of the Son of God."

The American "Chinese Exclusion Bill," having been passed by the Senate, and signed by the President, has now become law. A leading Chinese merchant in New York declares that his countrymen will institute reprisals.

Among the speakers at Mr. Moody's College Conference at Northfield, July 2-13, will be Rev. Drs. A. J. Gordon, Boston; Merrill E. Gates, President of Amherst College; A. F. Schauffler, H. Clay Trumbull, from New York; Bishop Thoburn, of India; Major Whittle; and Anthony Comstock. Mr. Moody will, of course, not be present, but Mr. Sankey expects to be there; he purposes sailing for New York early in June.

Lady Henry Somerset has informed an interviewer that she thinks New York as bad as London, but not worse. "Dreadful as are the dives and the saloons, I was much struck and encouraged by the fact that no women who have not completely lost their characters are to be found in these places. In New York and Chicago I saw no such sight as I saw in Piccadilly when I left St. James's Hall last Sunday night. Vice is not publicly flaunted in that way."

A correspondent of The Methodist Times says: "Twenty-five or thirty years ago I used to look forward to the Conversation upon the Work of God as one of the most interesting items in the district programme; I always hoped to get a blessing, and to take back something that would do my circuit good. But I consider that for many years those conversations have greatly deteriorated; some of them of recent years have not been worthy of the name, but have been little more than a mere farce."

Dr. G. F. Pentecost, in reply to the question of an interviewer, gives it as his opinion that the number of converts from heathenism in India is from fifty to two hundred per cent. greater than what it is with an equal number of workers in England or America.

The famous Bible histories of Dr. Barth have been translated into many tongues. The R.T.S. has helped the Barmen Mission, through Dr. Schreiber, to put the Old Testament Stories into the Mandheling dialect of Sumatra; and now the missionaries have come again, asking that the translation, made by Rev. A. Schutz, of the New Testament Stories might be published. The committee have agreed to bear the cost of the same. An interesting feature in connection with the Mission is that it affects a large number of Mohammedans, hundreds of whom are already reading the Mission publications and receiving instruction.

Eleven young ladies, members of the "King's Daughters" Philanthropic Association, have sailed from New York for Russia. They are the bearers of a large sum of money subscribed by American women, for the relief of the famine-stricken peasants in Russia, and they will personally distribute it.

At a meeting of the London Wesleyan Council on Monday, in the Centenary Hall, Bishopsgate-street, it was resolved, by fifty-nine to thirty votes, to secure legal authority to permit a moderate and limited extension of the ministerial three years' term in special cases.

A convention on the deepening of the spiritual life was held last week at Nottingham.

The new "Beach Rocks" Convalescent Home at Sandgate, of the London Samaritan Society, is now approaching completion, and will be formally opened by Sir Edward Watkin, M P, and Lady Ingram Watkin, on Saturday, June 25. The building is a truly splendid one, and will be perfect in all its appointments, greatly surpassing any institution of the kind, so far as we know.

AMERICAN STUDENTS AT WORK.

Our brethren, Messrs. Pierson and Goldsbury, of Princeton University, began meetings at Hyde-park Hall last week. We have had the joy of hearing the Word preached with power, and the pleasure of seeing souls brought to Christ at every service. The meetings each night were prefaced by a good open-air meeting, at which our choir did good service. Open-air work was a novelty to our American friends, who were struck with the large audience, and the help it was to augment the indoor meetings.

There is a clear, decided ring of the old Gospel in our brethren's ministry. The closing address on "The Bible" was a logical address, which was greatly appreciated by a large audience. Our two friends are with us in Hyde-park on Sunday next at 6 p.m. After twenty years of continual meetings in the Park we were able last Sunday to add greatly to the comfort of our audience by providing some hundreds of chairs, which, through the courtesy of the authorities, we have been enabled to hire for the whole of the summer. Will your readers remember these meetings in prayer?

Chas. Cook.

MESSRS. FULLERTON AND SMITH.

Cambray Baptist congregation and St. Andrew's Presbyterian Church united to invite these brethren to conduct services in Cheltenham. They could only spare eight days, and were thankfully accepted on these terms. The whole town was divided between the two congregations, and eight thousand circulars, giving detailed information, were distributed from door to door. United-prayer meetings were held the week before, three nights in one place and three nights in the other, presided over by the members in turn.

Besides the great nightly meetings, filling Cambray Chapel, and the large afternoon gatherings in St. Andrew's Church, the evangelists addressed meetings for men only each Sunday afternoon. These were largely attended. Mr. Fullerton addressed meetings for women only, when there must have been one thousand present. Truly the workers associated with these dear brethren would say, "Our mouths have been filled with laughter, and our tongues with singing, for the Lord hath done great things for us." The inquiry-room was so crowded the last night of this mission that personal dealing was out of the question almost, and Mr. Fullerton addressed his hearers in the mass.

REV. R. J. WARD,

CONGREGATIONAL MINISTER, ST. HELENS.

FOR over a quarter of a century Rev. Robert John Ward has, with the devotion of a true Christian, laboured as pastor of the important and flourishing Congregational church of St. Helens. Mr. Ward was born in the beautiful seaside town of Scarborough, 1841. A very brief period of his life was spent in the business of a local printer and bookseller, and then he felt compelled to accept the call from on high to enter into the Master's earthly service. He entered Airedale College in 1859, and remained there until 1863, when the late Rev. Dr. Macfadyen's resignation of the pastorate of the St. Helens Church opened the way for the commencement of a work to which Mr. Ward has devoted his useful life.

As a three years' student, Mr. Ward was, in the spring of 1863, invited to become a candidate for the vacant pastorate. The prospect of a young student succeeding such an influential pastor at such an important church was a very high honour. But Mr. Ward thought little of the personal aggrandisement. He thought more of the honour of being counted worthy to labour in the vineyard of the Lord. His trial sermons were earnest, eloquent, and beautifully simple. Though possessing mental capabilities of a high order, his preaching touched the heart first and the head afterwards.

The impression he made upon the church may be gathered from the fact that in the autumn of 1863 he received a unanimous call to the pastorate. At that time he was only twenty-two years of age, and as his college course was not concluded, the church paid him the additional compliment of waiting for him until midsummer, 1864, when he was ordained by Rev. John Kelly.

At the very opening of his pastorate, Mr. Ward established a perfect community of interest and sympathy between himself and the officers and congregation, and, acting and reacting beneficially one upon the other, they have accomplished a work which has relieved the town of much of its moral sombreness.

St. Helens was at that time springing into great commercial activity. Workmen, of a vastly diversified character, flocked to the town, and ever since the population has increased with almost phenomenal rapidity. But the Congregationalists more than keep pace with the times. The central church and schools in Ormskirk-street have been enlarged, and they now constitute one of the finest and best equipped Congregational blocks in the provinces. The church was enlarged in 1869, and will now comfortably accommodate more than a thousand worshippers. The church roll numbers over 400, and the chapel, at almost every service, is well filled. Then there are three actively-engaged missions in the Peasley-cross, Gerard's-bridge, and Knowsley-road suburbs, each having a commodious chapel. Though these missions are chiefly under the control of Revs. W. R. Parry and G. White, they are allied to the parent church, and Mr. Ward regards his ministrations amongst the poorer classes, who largely attend these suburban mission chapels, as amongst the most blessed incidents of his pastorate. By his simple, loving, earnest nature, Mr. Ward is especially fitted for successful mission work, in the performance of which he has been very richly blessed.

The Knowsley-road Chapel is the latest of the trio. A mission was established in this district (one of the poorest in the town), many years ago, but the chapel was not opened until January, 1889, when nearly every penny of the cost (£1600) had been quietly and unostentatiously raised. The schools are used for Sunday teaching alone. The Congregationalists have not taken an active part in the controversies which arise out of secular education. The present building—a substantial and capacious one—was erected in 1870, at a cost of £4000. The average attendance of Sunday scholars is over six hundred. The building is used also as a lecture hall, an entertainment room, &c. It is also the home of the recently established guild, which is already producing most encouraging results. At Gerard's-bridge School there is an average attendance of 270, and at Knowsley-road 150.

Mr. Ward has devoted much attention to the large number of young people who attend the church. He has done all he possibly could to make it a home for them. He has preached, during the whole of his twenty-eight years' pastorate, the Gospel of hopeful cheerfulness, and by precept and bright personal example he has convinced many that the highest happiness which brings no sorrow is to be found in the service of Christ. His sermons, though not oratorical, are always earnest, always suggestive, always helpful. Often he has turned what may be called popular subjects to the highest of uses, and his series of "Open Services" resulted in adding many to the church. Mr. Ward is not afraid of social questions. By his treatment of them he destroys their secular character, and makes them befitting subjects for profitable discourse.

Mr. Ward is an ardent temperance reformer, and considers total abstinence the basis of social reform, and very often he has made this principle the stepping-stone to higher things. He was one of the secretaries of the Blue Ribbon Mission, and when General Booth's "Darkest England" scheme was published he thoroughly awakened the conscience of his fellow-townsmen, who united in giving the veteran leader a magnificent welcome on the occasion of his visit to the town.

Mr. Ward has been a member of the Executive Committee of the Lancashire Congregational Union, and in 1887 he was appointed Chairman of the Liverpool Congregational Board of Ministers. In the highest sense of the term Mr. Ward is a popular public man, and has cheerfully given his assistance to every effort that has been made to uplift his fellow-men. He is respected by all classes.

Not long ago the conduct of Mr. Ward was instrumental in directing Christian people towards a certain aspect of the Temperance question. He saw a drunken man enter a public-house in St. Helens, and he boldly followed him for the purpose of taking, at first hand, evidence of the landlord's breach of his licence. On finding a glass of intoxicants before the man, Mr. Ward immediately went to the Town Hall, and, on his own responsibility, took out a summons against the landlord, who was convicted of supplying drink to an intoxicated man. The matter created great controversy in the town, and Mr. Ward's action was freely criticised, both favourably and adversely. A painful element was introduced into the question by the sudden death of the landlord a day or two after his conviction, and within a week his aged mother also passed away. Mr. Ward possesses strong feelings on the Temperance question, and he has for many years laboured hard to deliver men and women from the thraldom of this terrible curse.

A month or two ago, Mr. Ward's services in the county of Lancashire were recognised by his unanimous election as Chairman of the Lancashire Congregational Union. The position was accepted by him with great reluc-nce. Previous to his election to this portant position, he had offered himself for rk in the foreign mission field, and only a ry few days after his election the London issionary Society accepted him for service India. For many years Mr. Ward has felt s responsibility to the heathen, and he adly accepted the offer, much to the regret the congregation, to which, for such a long riod, he has ministered so faithfully and so ceptably. In the autumn, Mr. Ward will go t to Madras to take charge of a centre of ission activity which has already produced e best results.

In this respect Mr. Ward's conduct is of e most chivalrous character. He will leave hind him much that men hold dear, for the ke of accepting what he regards to be a call om God. His conduct ought to be a revela- on to all branches of the Christian Church, nd should re-awaken the deepest interest in e work of God abroad. The church at t. Helens will have the greatest difficulty in lecting as successor a minister who will be lly able to gather the harvest which Mr. ard has so patiently, so loyally, prepared. r. Ward, however, feels that fifty men can secured to succeed him in St. Helens, here, perhaps, not one could go abroad. In s new sphere Mr. Ward will have the fervent ayers of many in this country who have atched his work for the Master with the eepest interest.

SONGS IN THE NIGHT.

ISE up in the darkness and knock at the portal
That leads to the mansions of glory and rest,
Those golden gates sever bright spirits immortal,
From earth's dim obscurity—land of the blest!
o thee are we hasting, who soon shall be resting,
mid thy glad scenes at the Lamb's bridal feast.

ho' sorrow's dark billows may sorely distress thee,
Involving thy spirit in tumult and fear,
e arms of Omnipotence closely embrace thee,
The still voice of mercy and love thou may'st hear bove the deep roar of the surge evermore—
y peace will I give thee. Oh, be of good cheer.

When through the deep waters thou passest together
The proud waves assail us, for I too am there.
hold, I am with thee thy soul to deliver,
Surrender thyself to my merciful care,
y heart shall receive thee, my love never leave thee,
nd thou with thy Saviour heaven's glories shalt share."

ROYAL HOSPITAL FOR INCURABLES.—At the birty-third annual festival last week the friends of s hospital mustered in strong force, and about £10 was subscribed in the course of the evening.

REV. PAULUS ASHKENAZIE has undertaken, nder the auspices of the Barbican Mission to the ews, a missionary tour among the Hebrew popula- ons in the South East of Europe, including some of e Danubian principalities. While setting forth to s brethren the claims of Christ and his kingdom, r. Ashkenazie will also endeavour to ascertain the titude of the Rabbis and leaders towards Baron sch's westward emigration scheme, and their ews on prophecy, which is now so evidently being lfilled as it affects the House of Israel.

JERUSALEM.—Mrs. Ben-Oliel writes with joy f the work in connection with her Jewish mothers' eeting, which has been much helped by the gifts money and materials from friends far and near. he proposed Evangelistic Hall, Rev. A. Ben-Oliel's ork, is now within measurable distance, a friend in anada having offered to pay for the site and con- ribute substantially towards the building. The adies of Dr. Murkland's church at Baltimore have ust sent £125, of which seventy pounds is to be evoted to this important step in the development of he Mission.

GLASGOW HOUSES OF SHELTER.—The institu- ion in Hill-street was founded in 1850, to provide a ome for females, on their liberation from prison, in ases where they are desirous to reform and willing o support themselves by honest industry. The verage number of inmates during last year was fifty. The mission shelter in Whitedale-street was egun, with a like object, in 1878, its distinctive eature being that inmates are not required to remain or a year, as in the Hill-street house. The report ust published says: "The homes have been filled lmost constantly to the limit of their capacity, and hile we have to record a good many disappoint- ments, we have also to acknowledge with gratitude o God that some of the women have fully justified ur hopes, and are now occupying creditable posi- ions in society. An excellent spirit seems to reign n both shelters, to which the good order and in- dustry of the inmates testify." The secretary of his excellent work is Mrs. A. A. Fergusson, 11, Gros- venor-terrace, Glasgow.

Mr. R. F. Horton.

LAST week we received the following letter with reference to a Note respecting Mr. R. F. Horton in our issue of May 12:—

I feel impelled to drop you a line, after reading your note about Mr. R. F. Horton in THE CHRISTIAN. You say he is "an enigmatical and uncertain quantity." As far as my experience goes, I can say he is the most Christ-like man I have ever known. His book on "Inspiration" cleared away mists and doubts that dogged me from a child, and has made me read my Bible with delight and profit.

Recently, I have benefited greatly by reading Proverbs, which has been such a help to me through life; with his work on that book. I recommend all I can to procure it, and study it with their Bible.

As a Congregationalist, I can see how wonderfully God has used him to bring about a complete change of tone in our autumnal gatherings; the daily early prayer-meetings, which he introduced some four years ago, have grown in intensity, till the whole assemblies seem hallowed by the presence of the Holy Spirit. Any one can note the difference by comparing the meetings last year at Southport with those, say, of six years ago.

Recently, when speaking at the Adult School Conference at Birmingham, and at a two-days' Mission Mr. Horton conducted at Kidderminster who will forget his address to Christian workers, to business men, and the simple Gospel invitations at the evening meetings? We have over forty converts as the result, many of them young men, for whom the Christian Band have been praying some time.

We replied that we were always better pleased to speak well of our brethren than otherwise, and asked permission to publish the letter; which was given, with the following additional letter:—

I may be accused of exaggeration, but I see in Mr. Horton's wonderful influence with the young men of our colleges, and with all the younger ministers in our denomination, the promise of a great spiritual future, because the Holy Ghost seems to use him to bring home to them the poverty of intellect and of every gift apart from the Holy Spirit, and that all our work must be preceded by wrestling prayer; such teaching, coming from one of such academical distinction and personal character, commands attention and bears fruit.

I send you a copy of The Friend, which gave the best report of Mr. Horton's speech in Birmingham. As we were leaving the hall, some gentleman came up, and thanked him, saying he was glad to believe he was a Universalist. It pained him very much, as he said to me, "Anything but that;" but some people would seize hold of a sentence and read into it their own wishes and convictions, and thus altogether distort the meaning.

There is no doubt Mr. Horton's book on Inspiration, published by so young a man—it must be nearly ten years now since it was written—excited much prejudice in the minds of many, and that is why I feel it unfair to pin a man whom God is now using so unmistakably to expressions he would perhaps modify if writing to-day. Of the Christian workers who meet at Kidderminster, I had invited several, who came with this "unsound" prejudice, but each one speaking or writing to me since has said "what a false impression they had formed, and how wonderfully they had been helped." The reading of 1 Corinthians xv. 17-31, and the address from Daniel xii. 3, were inspirations they hoped never to forget.

I must write you again about the book on "Inspiration," for it is quite four years since I read it; but I may say St. Paul said several things hard to understand, even by the Apostle Peter, and often in his letters he appears to be quoting from memory the Old Testament, but when passages are turned to for comparison they differ, showing how feeble, in a sense, language is to convey to us the Spirit's teaching. The oracles of God are deeper than the letter—that is what I take as Mr. Horton's teaching. If any man speak let him speak as the oracles of God. I read these oracles as our lives being the interpretation to the world of the Spirit of God. God in Christ made unto us wisdom, &c.

We are rejoiced at these good accounts of Mr. Horton's work. But does not the mistake of the Universalist lend some colour to the justice of our note? And do not the remarks of our correspondent respecting Mr. Horton's book on "Inspiration" show a similar uncertainty? That book was not published ten, but a little over four years ago, and a fifth edition, dated 1891, is now on sale.

In the report in The Friend we find the following sentences:—

The Apostle Peter says: "Love the brotherhood," which means the Christian Church....All earthly possessions shrank in insignificance, and men were brought into the wonderful sense of equality which comes from an acknowledgment of the Fatherhood above and universal brotherhood below.

Is there not here again the uncertainty we spoke of? The brotherhood in one sentence is said to be "the Church," in the other to be "universal." We might add other discrepancies.

We commend the subject to Mr. Horton, whom we regard with admiration and Christian affection, and whose usefulness we sincerely desire to see greatly increased.

HUMBLE SERVICE.

Often the most useful Christians are those who serve the Master in little things. He never despises the doing of small things, or else He would not hide his oaks in tiny acorns, or the wealth of a wheat-field in bags of little seeds.—T. L. Cuyler.

GOD AND THE SOUL.

A soul in commerce with her God, is heaven,
Feels not the tumults and the shocks of life;
The whirls of passions, and the strokes of heart;
A deity believ'd is joy begun;
A deity ador'd is joy advanced;
A deity belov'd is joy matur'd. —Young.

DELIGHTING IN GOD.

The Christian's great desire and delight is God, and by desiring and delighting he hath Him. Delight thou in the Lord, and He shall give thee thy heart's desire—Himself; and then, surely, thou shalt have all. Any other thing, commit it to Him, and He shall bring it to pass. —Robert Leighton.

WATCHING FOR THE LORD.

We watch for the Lord, not when we gaze up into the sky, expecting Him to come forth, but when we keep our minds open and alert in the line of the development of Christ's kingdom. The officers on board ship watch for the haven as soon as they leave Liverpool, taking it all bit by bit. So we are watching for the grand consummation of this economy when we fill up the opportunity of every hour as it comes. —The late John Pillans.

DIVINE COMPASSION.

On thy compassion I repose
In weakness and distress;
I will not ask for greater ease,
Lest I should love Thee less.
Oh! 'tis a blessed thing for me
To need thy tenderness!

THE MINISTER'S POWER AND GREATNESS.

There are fringes of truth that are very beautiful; there are scraps of truth which we may gather up that nothing may be lost; there are neglected truths which we should bring forward; many parts and great subjects of Scripture have become difficult to treat because hackneyed; but our power, nevertheless, lies in the great common truths, and our proper business is to get hold of them ourselves, and give them to others in freshness and power. We must have the substance and marrow of the Gospel in our teachings, or our teaching will not have power.

—The late John Pillans.

THE SOURCE OF SPIRITUAL WEALTH.

Is there any region in which to ask is to have, to seek is to find, and in which every door flies open at our knock? Certainly not in the world of common life, where bitter disappointment, vain wishes, and bootless search are so common. The promise given in Matt. vii. 7, 8, is true only in the spiritual realm, or in regard to the development of the Christian character. We may have as much of God as we will. Christ puts the key of the treasure-chamber into our hand, and bids us take all that we want. If a man is admitted into the bullion vault of a bank, and told to help himself, and comes out with one cent, whose fault is it that he is poor? Whose fault is it that Christian people generally have such scanty portions of the free riches of God?

—Rev. Dr. Maclaren.

THE MAY MEETINGS.

EXETER HALL Y.M.C.A.

Exeter Hall was crowded by young men and their friends on Wednesday last week on the occasion of the annual meeting of the Y.M.C.A. Association; the announcement that Mr. Sankey would sing helped, no doubt, to attract many. The great concourse overflowed into the lower hall, and even then many hundreds had to go away disappointed. Mr. George Williams presided.

Mr. E. J. Kennedy began a brief statement with some reference to international Y.M.C.A. work, there being some associations scattered throughout the world with a membership of about half a million. A special effort is being made this year with regard to India, one of the best men going out in October.

As to the home-work, it was stated that the primary aim of the Association is to win young men to a knowledge of Jesus Christ as their personal Saviour, and to foster a real, manly Christianity, to effect which the Committee endeavour to bring into play every agency that is calculated to build up the character of those young men that come within their reach. The religious department has been vigorously sustained, no less than 1455 meetings of an evangelistic or missionary character, or for Bible study, having been held. The educational classes have largely increased. 2029 students joined the educational classes. To meet the need of technical instruction, so prevalent at the present time, a day school has been formed. The social element has occupied considerable attention. The employment bureau has had no less than 13,471 applications during the twelve months which have elapsed since its enlargement. The various athletic and social clubs have been as popular as ever. Cricket, swimming cycling, rowing, and rambling have each in turn occupied the attention of the members. The gymnasium has not lost its attraction, the interest taken being greener than in any previous year. The total number of young men in connection with Exeter Hall during the year has been 4528.

Mr. George Williams briefly and happily reviewed the reasons for thankfulness to God by reason of the extension and fruitfulness of Y.M.C.A. work.

Mr. Ira D. Sankey narrated an incident of a man overboard at sea, and sang his rousing and now well-known song, "Throw out the Lifeline."

The Dean of Norwich (Rev. Dr. Lefroy) began with a lofty tribute to the late Mr. C. H. Spurgeon and others who have passed away, and went on to show how the gaps must be filled by the young men now coming forward. Passing on, the Dean spoke first of the advantages the Y.M.C.A. offers its members, and second, of the objects it has in view.

The advantages he regarded as threefold: physical, mental, and spiritual, on each of which he had something to say. He believed in play, because he believed in work. He who said "Remember the Sabbath-day," said also "Six days shalt thou labour." Honest work is not a curse, but a blessing, in spite of all the Socialistic hullaballoos of the present day. After a reference to mental advantages, the educational classes, Dr. Lefroy went on to speak of the spiritual side of the work, which he regarded as the sheet anchor of the ship.

But many might appreciate and share all these advantages without helping to carry out the objects of the Association. A man might know his sins forgiven, might love God and his ways, and yet might fail to prove useful in winning others, which is the great aim of the Y.M.C.A. He said he believed in individuality. It was one solitary monk who, out of a mass of sacerdotalism and corruption, shook the world, and the pulsations of that catastrophe thrilled this isle of the sea until it became known as Protestant England. So young men must be brave enough and strong enough to have convictions, and act on them. But while he believed in individualism, he also believed in fraternity. There is, said the Dean, not only an I but a thou; not only a we but a they. Men are saved to become witnesses for God. If the one thousand young men who were converted, as we have heard, in the Y.M.C.A.'s last year, were living for this great end, they would shake the world. No man can answer "I have done nothing," for inaction is impossible. Death and disaster are known by those who do not seek to bless and save. London seems in one aspect the ocean of the world, for all currents flow into it; but in another aspect it is the reservoir of the world, for all currents flow out of it. The men who in our colonies are to rule and lead, who are to influence nearly all lands, are going out from London. What influence are they to carry with them? If it be for God and good, they may be, while faithful in business and duty, the best and most effective of all missionaries, carrying out in every clime the true objects of the Y.M.C.A.

Mr. Sankey, accompanied by three friends, sang a new and beautiful setting of "Rock of Ages," as given in New Hymns and Solos.

Rev. A. T. Pierson, D.D., said: The Apostle Paul wrote to Archippus, "Take heed to the ministry which thou hast received in the Lord, that thou fulfil it." This is as true of an organisation as of an individual. The Y.M.C.A. has a ministry which constitutes its providential right to be. What is that ministry? It is, amongst other things, to mould character. Character is the grandest thing in the world; reputation is, or ought to be, an echo of character, though its record is not always true. If the character be noble we can leave the vindication of reputation to God. If, on the other hand, the reputation is superior to character, retribution will come in due time. Character should be so moulded that we become blameless. Do not mistake me; I did not say sinless. Before God we are sinners always; but before men we ought to be blameless.

There are four centres of idolatry, or current forms of sin—the nervous, the sensual, the imaginative, and the acquisitive—each of which demands attention. For example, there is acquisitiveness lying at the root of avarice, greed, and dishonesty. Many are destroyed by the idolatry of the acquisitive faculty, hoarding and keeping, obtaining without bestowing. But, in a world of sin and iniquity, the man who lives to himself only, in whatever sphere, without imparting to others, is a miserable being, deserving the anathema of God. I do not think now of money merely, but of anything temporal, intellectual, or spiritual worth the having and worth imparting. Then there is the idolatry of the senses, getting and enjoying merely. But there is something far higher than getting, and that is giving. The noblest use of getting is giving. The noblest enjoyment is that which is curtailed for the sake of others.

These things laid to heart by individuals help to build up noble characters, and a noble community is formed of noble individuals. We need some agitation to promote a bloodless revolution in favour of dignity of manhood. One of our great mottoes ought to be, "A man's a man for a' that." Not accidents but essentials make the man. Thus society is moulded through the moulding of individuals. But, further, the Y.M.C.A. is moulding the churches by enforcing and illustrating the unity of all who believe in one Christ and worship one God. The Y.M.C.A. has demonstrated that things on which Christian people agree are infinitely greater than the things on which they differ. It is magnificent in this year of grace, 1892, to find the servants of God uniting as a solid phalanx to confront the foe. The Y.M.C.A. has a missionary ministry the wide world over, and that in three departments—City Evangelisation, Home Missions, and Foreign Evangelisation. I believe the Y.M.C.A. is designed by God as one of the greatest foreign missionary agencies the world ever knew. Take heed, I say, to the ministry ye have received of the Lord, and solemnly and faithfully fulfil it.

Mr. Sankey having sung "God be with you till we meet again," the proceedings concluded.

LORD'S DAY OBSERVANCE SOCIETY.

Sir John Field presided over the annual meeting of the Lord's Day Observance Society at St. James's Hall on Tuesday morning last week. The report submitted was replete with very interesting matter. One of the most important features of the year was the Blackpool prosecution, which established the validity of the law against Sunday amusements for which payment is demanded. The evidence which the Society has been able to gather for the Labour Commission showed that Sunday work now done in England amounted to only 2·79 per cent. of the whole amount of labour done in this country. Another significant fact is that in nearly all the London cemeteries Sunday funerals are now forbidden, except under special circumstances.

Canon Girdlestone delivered an address at once thoughtful and practical. The Lord's Day, though for us, is not ours, but the Lord's. We have no right to give it away, or to look on unmoved while it is being taken away. The Sabbath is not simply a Mosaic institution; the very word is found in the oldest cuneiform inscriptions, taking us back to a time long before Moses was born. Tablets are in existence which show that thus early, in Ur of the Chaldees, "the rest day of the heart," as it was termed, was kept sacred. Sabbath observance is not a duty so much as a privilege. The speaker gave some interesting testimony from the Early Church. The Epistle of Barnabas states: "We keep the eighth day for rejoicing, because it is the day on which the Lord rose from the dead;" and that ancient manual, "The Teaching of the Twelve Apostles," says: "On the Lord's own day we gather to break bread and give thanks, first confessing our sins that the sacrifice may be pure." He discriminated between the rest-day, the preservation of which was the business of the State, and the Lord's Day, which it was the duty of the Church of Christ to protect and secure.

Other speakers were: Rev. H. Stevens, Mr. Mark Stewart, M.P., Commander Dawson, and Mr. G. Lidgett.

MEDICAL MISSIONARY ASSOCIATION.

The annual meeting of this Association was held on Friday afternoon in the Lower Exeter Hall, Dr. H. Sinclair Paterson presiding.

The report, which is given in full in the June issue of Medical Missions, states that throughout the kingdom the number of medical missionary students steadily increases. In London, where the medical student life, till a few years ago, was almost barren of interest in missions, this interest has sprung up quite remarkably. There are at least four hospital schools where medical missionary societies are found, each seeking to remember the little band on the mission-field which represents the school. And, of course, with this there is the personal interest in missions, which means a growing number of intending medical missionaries. Nor can it be overlooked here that what is true of the ordinary school is equally true of the Women's School of Medicine in London. That school has now eighteen representatives on the mission-field, and at present a considerable number of ladies are pursuing their studies there with a view to foreign mission work.

One hundred and fifty-six medical missionaries with British diplomas are on the wide field this year. Last year the number was 142. The increase is substantial, but not large. It is capable of indefinite development. As to the training work of the Association itself, it is stated that of the ten students now under our wing, three are looking forward to complete their studies and obtain their diplomas ere the year closes. One of them, Mr. Parrott, is earnestly purposing to work in China; another, Mr. Scheurer, has his face towards Java; and the third, Mr. E. Williams, will join the mission band on the Khasmia Hills in Assam. Details follow as to medical missionary work at home and abroad, which will be found fully in the published report.

Dr. H. Sinclair Paterson recalled the historical fact that the foundation of our Eastern Empire of India was laid by a medical man. Passing on, he showed forcefully how medical missions soften hard and prejudiced hearts, and gain a hearing for the Gospel amongst those who otherwise would absolutely refuse to listen. He believed the medical mission will in the near future be regarded as the grand agency for reaching heathen and moslems, as well as the lapsed masses at home.

Dr. J. L. Maxwell, in the course of a brief statement, showed how, some years ago, the importance of medical missions was re-discovered, and how medical missionaries began to be sought for. In this re-awakening, and in the supply of the medical missionaries, this Association had, during the past few years, borne a considerable part. He believed that in the medical schools of London some forty men and twenty-six women were at this moment definitely training for medical mission work. A detailed reference followed to the help rendered by the Children's Medical Missionary Society.

Dr. Henry Soltau, who has been labouring successfully at Islington, and who is shortly returning to medical mission work in India, spoke of three great powers possessed by medical mission:—It is a penetrating power, reaching those who are not reached by ordinary methods, and of this several instances were given; 2. It is a power that tears to pieces, rending hard hearts; and 3rd it is a transforming power. After describing the Islington medical mission, and glancing at past experiences in Burmah and China, the speaker told how he and his wife were hoping shortly to be at work in India.

Mr. J. G. Scheuker, who hopes to go next year as the first medical missionary to Java, told how mission work was begun in that lovely island by two godly ladies, wives of merchants, whose faithful witness paved the way for the first missionary. He thanked God he was to be sent to that island to heal and to preach.

Rev. George Tonge, M.A., spoke chiefly on the needs of the 139,000,000 of women in India. His experiences in connection with the C.E.Z.M.S. had impressed him with the appalling condition, medically and spiritually, of these women, and of the urgent need for medically-qualified Zenana workers.

Mr. James E. Mathieson made an earnest appeal for liberal financial aid on behalf of this important and Christ-like work.

STRATFORD CONFERENCE HALL.

The seventh annual meeting, on Tuesday evening last week, was rendered specially joyous from a sense of the great blessing which has, during the past year, attended the work of the Stratford Conference Hall and Young Men's Christian Association. We have seldom perused a report of such solid interest, and so eminently spiritual in tone. The secret of the success which has attended the varied operations is to be found in the singleness of purpose and prayerful solicitude of the workers. Loyal to Christ and anxious for the welfare of their fellows, our Stratford friends have from the first been making steady progress, and with "Forward!" as their watchward, they will assuredly go on and prosper in the strength of the Lord of hosts.

Among the many cheering statements in the report, we note the continued growth and usefulness of the Mizpah Bands. Temperance work is prosecuted with much vigour, and evangelization is carried on in the open air and in lodging-houses, as well as in such public buildings as are available. The weekly congregation in the Conference Hall ranges from fifteen hundred to nineteen hundred people, and scarcely a week passed during last year without some interesting cases of conversion. Since the formation of the Y.M.C.A. no year has been so marked in blessing. The report says:—"A growing interest has been noticed amongst our members in spiritual things, and many are showing a great desire for the salvation of their friends. The greatest number of visible results have been seen in connection with the Sunday afternoon Bible-class: a large number of young men testifying to the fact that this class has been instrumental in bringing them to see their lost condition by nature, and leading them to trust in the precious blood of Christ for pardon and peace." This class is still growing, and has an attendance of 150, all the members being between the ages of sixteen and thirty.

A good work among children is also carried on, and there are educational classes for those who wish to profit by them. During the year two members of the Association left for mission work abroad—one in China, the other in Sumatra. The report says:—"We now have six missionaries in the foreign mission field, which keeps our Young Men's Foreign Missionary Society well occupied in praying for and corresponding with these young men."

At the outset of the meeting, a number of converts gave testimonies, most of them remarkably clear and earnest. Lord Kinnaird, who presided, gave an address on the terms on which the men who went to David at Ziklag are described in 1 Chron. xii. He exhorted all Christians to be definite workers for God. Mr. T. A. Denny followed with words of hearty sympathy, urging the cultivation of holy ingenuity in the service of Christ.

Then came Mr. C. Boardman, the treasurer, to whom all look up as an ever-ready counsellor and guide. He praised God for all that has been done. Alluding to the financial situation, he said that the debt on the building remains at £530. It was with great regret that the meeting heard that the Stratford Town Council is compelling the payment of £270 for the making of two roads—one on either side of the hall. It had been hoped that the Council would extend to the institution the same consideration that is shown to other registered places of worship, but as the authorities insist, there seems to be no hope of the work being exempted from the charge. Several promises of support were given in during the evening.

Rev. D. J. Stather Hunt, vicar of St. Paul's, New Town, Stratford, delivered an earnest address to the young men. From first to last the proceedings were of a nature that could not fail to encourage the workers, than whom no one is more devoted than the general secretary, Mr. E. Fox Butlin.

THE RAILWAY MISSION.

There was a large muster of railway men and their friends in Exeter Hall on Thursday evening, on the occasion of the annual meeting of the Railway Mission, presided over by Mr. Wyndham S. Portal, deputy-chairman of the London and South Western Railway.

The Secretary, Mr. R. Nixon, read extracts from the report, which acknowledged, with sincere gratitude, the many tokens of God's blessing upon the work. Continued testimony has been received from railway officials as to the beneficial results of the work on the men under their control, and those in authority on various lines regard the work of the Mission with growing appreciation. Twenty-three missionaries and evangelists have been engaged in conducting special services for the men and their families. Several of these have been stationed at large centres of railway work, where, in addition to arranging meetings, they have visited the people at their houses. Twelve new branches have been opened, making a total of 352. At these considerably over one thousand meetings are held every week.

The Mission has been strengthened in Ireland by the appointment of Miss Riddell as hon. superintendent in Belfast, and a missionary to assist in the work throughout the northern district. Mr. Allan Stewart, who was for several years leader of the Edinburgh (Abbeyhill) Branch, has been appointed agent of the Mission in Scotland. One of the most prominent and hopeful features of the year's history has been the remarkable increase of interest manifested in Railway Mission work in the Colonies and places abroad. On the return of the Secretary from South Africa, two additional missionaries, Miss Beisiegel and Mr. Joseph Beaupré, were appointed. Work has been commenced on the Natal lines. A new field has been occupied in Egypt, where a large number of men of various races are employed. Encouraging reports of progress have been received from Ceylon and Australia. Steps have been taken to form a branch of the Mission at Adelaide, in South Australia. The Convalescent Home at Hastings is a great boon to the work at home. It will accommodate twelve inmates. Though these will be expected to contribute a small sum towards board and lodging, the amount will not suffice to cover the working expenses.

The Chairman's address was vigorous and hearty. The Temperance work of the Mission first secured his interest, but later on he came to hold all its endeavours in high esteem. Referring to the great need for halls in which to meet, he said that it does seem a shame that while tap-rooms, private rooms, and bar rooms to the number of hundreds and thousands encircle the railway stations, the Gospel and Temperance work of the Mission should have no better accommodation than that afforded by an old shed or carriage. Illustrating the points in his address, the speaker told of a driver who carries his Bible on one side and his pledge-book on the other; of a station agent who influenced a hundred out of three hundred of those under his control to become Gospel total abstainers, not to only assemble in public meetings, but to visit him at his house in small parties, and engage in devotional exercises; and of a guard who, impressed with the need of a place of meeting, trudged many miles at night, after his work was over, collecting funds for the erection of an iron room, or "saucepan," which was opened free of debt for its very important purposes. Quoting the saying, "White is right, and red is wrong, and green goes dawdling slowly on," the speaker encouraged his hearers to heed the "signals" and travel the "safe" way to God, through the Lord Jesus Christ.

Mr. William Noble delivered a Gospel temperance address, characterised by his old force and fire. It was difficult to believe that for some time he had been on the sick list, for his points—every one of them clear and strong—were driven home with telling effect. The response of the meeting was hearty, and, combined with the congratulations of friends on the platform, must have been very cheering to Mr. Noble.

Rev. W. R. Mowll followed with a straight talk. In his undergraduate days at Cambridge he engaged in work among the railway men there. Without "telling tales out of school," he admitted that he had occasionally "had a spin" on the engine, so he was disposed to reckon himself somewhat of a railway man. He recalled interesting conversations with well-known railway characters, combining deep earnestness with an open manner which the audience greatly enjoyed.

Railway men from near and far gave testimonies of the grace of God and of the spread of the work, and a collection, with promises of help, brought a good meeting to a happy ending.

THE RELIGIOUS TRACT SOCIETY.

The public breakfast of the Religious Tract Society, on Tuesday morning last week at the Cannon-street Hotel, was the occasion of an influential gathering of friends of mission work at home and abroad. Mr. Albert Spicer presided, and voiced the general feeling when he said: "Remove the Religious Tract Society, and you cripple nearly every Christian association with which we have to do."

Rev. F. H. Kruger, of the French Mission in Basutol and, gave an encouraging account of the growth of Christianity there. He expressed his deep gratitude to the Society, not only for hymn-books, but for much other literature which had been generously granted to them.

Rev. W. H. Ball (C.M.S.), showed how greatly he is indebted to the Society for help afforded him in his work at Calcutta.—Rev. Arthur Bonsey, of Hankow, gave a thoughtful address on the position of things in China. He illustrated the value of tracts by announcing that he had known two churches founded as the result of the distribution of those silent messengers.

Rev. George Everard, who has recently returned from a tour in India, described the tract depôts as so many wells of salvation, the waters of which were fertilising the land all round. He read a moving letter from a young Hindu, and upon it based a stirring appeal that help might be sent, for it was the R.T.S. by its literature that might be the means of leading these young men to Christ. Rev. James Sibree told of the progress Christianity has made in Madagascar mainly, as he believed, as the result of Christian literature. In all this work they had been materially helped by the R.T.S., and he hinted that he should ask the secretaries for some better illustrations for the new edition of his Bible Dictionary, which is urgently called for. Rev. J. A. A. Fuller, a coloured missionary from the Congo, hoped the Society would not slacken its efforts. Rev. Dr. Mathews, of the Presbyterian Mission, added a few stirring words.

THE EVANGELICAL ALLIANCE.

As customary at this season, when so many from various parts are in London, the Evangelical Alliance called on Tuesday of last week a gathering of its friends in the pleasant grounds of Regent's Park College, kindly granted for the purpose by Dr. Angus. Amongst the company were workers in all parts of the kingdom, and missionaries from China, India, Africa, and many Continental lands.

Lord Kinnaird, who presided, warmly welcomed the missionaries and representatives from abroad, and briefly dwelt on the work of the Alliance.

Mr. Donald Matheson referred to the resignation of General Sir John Field, to the good work he had done, and to the new arrangements whereby Mr. Arnold remains as General Secretary, while Rev. P. Colborne and J. Consterdine have been appointed deputation secretaries.

Rev. W. H. Ball (C.M.S.) spoke on the vast needs of India, now stirring in a new life, and demanding many more labourers. If the educated natives are not to be left to lapse into scepticism and infidelity, they must be evangelised, and that speedily.

Rev. David Hill, speaking of China, saw in the introduction of telegraphs, railways, and factories, an outward and visible sign of an unseen movement. Even the recent riots had borne good fruit, and had, he believed, opened the way for the Gospel. The opium trade was, however, the grand hindrance, and, alas! even were our trade closed, the evil is done, for Chinamen now grow themselves three times as much as is imported from India.

Rev. J. Pindor, D.Th., an account of whose life and labours we hope to give next week, told something of the dark history and fierce persecution of the Austrian Evangelical Church. In recent times, though under various restrictions, the Protestants have been permitted to worship God in their own way. His own work is among the Poles of Teschen, Silesia, a poor and needy people, who willingly tramp many miles each Sunday to attend church. The speaker is in this land pleading for funds for the erection of a church near a great factory, where eight hundred Protestant workmen are employed. These poor workmen and farmers have raised themselves over £4000 for this purpose. His congregation often numbers three thousand.

Rev. J. D. Kilburn (now of Hamburg) pleaded warmly the cause of the Finnish people, described, on Russian testimony, as active, firm, persevering, uncomplaining, manly, and seriously disposed—a poor, brave, religious people. Having traversed the country from the top of the Gulf of Bothnia on the north to Helsingfors in the south, he knew the land and the people well, and what was being done by the Wesleyans, Baptists, Eollites, and the Free Christians, an evangelical and earnest body, on whose behalf he specially pleaded. An interesting reference was also made to the work of the Baroness Wredé, a devoted lady, who, in order to bring the Gospel to the prisoners, spends whole days with them in their cells.

CHRISTIAN LITERATURE SOCIETY FOR INDIA.

The anniversary meeting was held in Exeter Hall on Wednesday week, the Right Hon. the Earl of Northbrook, presiding.

Rev. James Johnston submitted a brief abstract of the report, from which we learned that during the past year seventy students were under training as Christian teachers; eight thousand children in the villages of Bengal received an education suited to their simple needs, with sound moral, and religious instruction. But the principal resources of the Society are now devoted to the preparation and diffusion of educational works, books for women, and popular Christian literature. Last year 1,356,334 copies of various publications in twelve languages were issued. The total receipts were £9804, and the expenditure £9777. The reports from India of the good effected are well fitted to encourage the friends of the Society, and to stimulate them to greater efforts and increased liberality.

The noble Chairman said that the work of the Society was of great importance. Its main object was to supply Christian literature to the natives of India. They did not suppose that they would be able entirely to fulfil that work. It would be impossible to supply to the vast population of India a Christian literature, which undoubtedly would be required in the future. That must be left to Christians in India. All they could pretend to was at a time when a deficiency was felt over the whole of India to do something, however little it might be, to meet the deficiency, and to leave others on the spot to take up the work. He had always felt that with the spread of education, the exertions of the missionary societies of all denominations, and the blessing of God, the time would arrive when there would be a vast movement in the direction of Christianity among the people of India. One of the reasons why they felt confidence in the vitality of that Society was that it always received the support of those men who were most conversant with the wants of the people of India. Lord Lawrence was the founder of the Society, and the men who worked with him on the committee were men of strong religious sentiment. It was gratifying to him to find present that afternoon representatives of the services in India, thereby showing that those who knew most of the conditions of the people recognised that the work of the Society was worthy of support and encouragement. They also had the support of a resolution signed by representatives of the missionary societies of Great Britain, and also the support of societies interested in women's work in India.

Mr. B. H. Baden-Powell, C.I.E., late of the Bombay Civil Service, as one who knew much of India, had lived long there, and had travelled widely, spoke of the good work the Society is doing, urged the vast need for the literature it supplies, and pressed for liberal aid.

Rev. S. Mateer (L.M.S. Travancore) dwelt with striking effect on the vast vacancy there is in India of anything like a wholesome literature. Newspapers, periodicals, books, were needed, and needed urgently.

Rev. G. F. Pentecost, D.D., described his experiences among the educated classes, who are eager to read English, who are familiar with sceptical and rationalistic works, but have yet few useful books of a Christian spirit likely to influence them for good.

Rev. W. Gray, M.A. (C.M.S. Secretary), and Col. G. A. Jacobs also spoke briefly, but warmly, of the value of the work the Society is doing, and the necessity for its wide extension.

SEAMEN'S CHRISTIAN FRIEND SOCIETY.

That this Society has sought to do its duty among our maritime population, Rev. G. J. Hill, the Secretary, set forth in a lucid speech at the annual meeting in Exeter Hall last week. Besides London, sixty other ports have been directly dealt with through sailors' homes, reading-rooms, and bethels. Twenty missionaries and other agents have been employed. More than a hundred meetings have been held every week ashore and afloat. Bibles, books, and tracts, in English and other languages, have been widely distributed, in addition to libraries placed on board ship free. Many destitute seamen were relieved. Correspondence is kept up with sailors at foreign ports. As to spiritual results the reports of the missionaries give numerous gratifying incidents.

Rev. W. R. Mowll delivered an address, which admirably fulfilled the twofold purpose of enlisting public sympathy with the work of the Society, and of impressing on the sailors present the necessity of accepting Christ as their captain, and of influencing for good those with whom they might be associated.

Rev. W. F. Gooch spoke in appreciative terms of the international and unsectarian nature of the efforts of the Society. Rev. Thomas Charke described in detail what he knew of the operations of the Society on the Cornish coast. Admiral Grant said it was a mistake to suppose that it was more difficult to be a Christian on board ship than on shore. But to command respect for religion and himself the sailor must be true and courageous, and let his light shine unmistakably. Among the others who spoke briefly and well were Rev. Charles James, Mr. M. H. Hodder, and Mr. H. W. Maynard. Every part of the hall was crowded, and representatives of nearly every maritime nation in the globe could be seen in the gallery.

DISTRIBUTING THE SCRIPTURES.

One of the most unassuming, but one of the most useful and most frugally-conducted, societies is the Association for the Free Distribution of the Scriptures, which is kept going largely by the devotion and generosity of one Christian lady, Mrs. Robertson, of Hampstead. The annual gathering of the friends of the work was held on Saturday afternoon in Exeter Hall, and was an occasion of singular interest. The testimony borne by travellers and workers of wide experience was the best possible plea for the work of the Association.

Mr. T. A. Denny, who presided, said that whether by sale or free distribution the utmost effort of the past had but barely touched the fringe of the vast field that remained to be occupied. There is no danger of this work being overdone. He was followed by Dr. Baedeker, who related something of what he had witnessed as to the results of Bible distribution in Russia. To Mrs. Robertson's Association he was indebted for many gifts of the Scriptures. Unlike other publications, the Bible is admitted readily and unmutilated into the dominions of the Czar. Railway officials, in some instances, not only franked his boxes containing Bibles, but gave him a pass gratis. The Scriptures are received with gratitude everywhere—in the wilds of Siberia and in inaccessible districts elsewhere; especially so by the persecuted Stundists, whose only crime is that they read the Word of God and try to live up to it. Dr. Baedeker concluded an address crowded with reminiscences by stating that in Russia at present the Bible is a quickening and consoling power, and that what is now done in circulating it there will certainly bear fruit after many days.

Dr. Pentecost gave several reasons why he liked the word "free" in the title of this Association. In the course of a long and interesting address he told how in a town in India, where he had a high caste audience, the fact that he offered them copies of the Scriptures free sufficed finally to break the barriers of caste and open the way for a general demand for the Bibles. Supply heathen peoples with the Word of God, and you give them at once life, liberty, and a literature. The Doctor is in his element when speaking of India, and of the grand field it offers for active Christian work.

Archdeacon Sinclair gave a spirited historical summary of what the Bible has done for the English people, and of what it has effected in Japan and other foreign countries.

Mrs. Isabella Bishop said her travels had taught her that there is great need of the free distribution of the Bible in Eastern, Western, and Central Asia. If reliance is placed on selling the Scriptures, the people there will remain indefinitely without them. She had repeatedly witnessed the eagerness of Orientals to become possessed of even a portion of the Scriptures. Wonderful instances of its power had also come within her experience. In one remote place, where no missionary had ever been, she found a whole community of Christians who had learned, by the guidance of the Holy Spirit, the way of salvation through the reading of a copy of God's Word that had reached them. Into the seclusion of the abodes of women in the East the Bible can penetrate, and it is on the effect of Christian teaching among these women that the future of millions of our fellow creatures in Asia may be said to depend.

A brief review of the circumstances which led to the formation of the Association was given by Mrs. Robertson herself, and she touchingly entreated hearty, prayerful co-operation in giving freely the Word of Life to perishing sinners. Mr. Robert Paton read part of the report, stating that the income for the year was only some £1700; it ought to be ten times that amount. We may repeat what we have often said of this Society, that every penny contributed is spent in the purchase or distribution of Scriptures; the entire secretarial work is a labour of love.

THE BOYS' BRIGADE.

This young but flourishing institution seems to have survived the period of criticism, and to have entered on a course of confirmed prosperity. It made its public début before an Exeter Hall audience last Friday evening. The meeting was an unqualified success in point of attendance and enthusiasm. Only the London battalion of the Brigade was represented by the five hundred odd boys who crowded the back portions of the orchestra; a detachment from Sheffield skilfully discoursed sweet music, to the delight of the crowded audience.

On the ticket of admission the following sentence was printed as setting forth in brief the object of the Brigade:—"The advancement of Christ's kingdom among boys and the promotion of habits of reverence, discipline, self-respect, and all that tends towards a true Christian manliness." The speeches of the evening—a round half-dozen in number—were directed to proving that this laudable object is being attained. As Honorary President of the Brigade and Chairman of the meeting, Lord Aberdeen expressed himself in words of unstinted praise of the movement, and the way in which it had proved to be a missing link between the Sunday-school and the Church. Many parents, said his lordship, are finding such an improvement in the conduct and demeanour of their boys who are members, that they are wishing all boys could belong to it. Dr. Donald Macleod, editor of Good Words, had come all the way from Glasgow to bestow his blessing on the Brigade. The idea that its operations foster a warlike and bloodthirsty spirit in the lads, as many good people seemed to fear, he regarded as pure nonsense. Rev. Lockett Ford, rector of Bessbrook, who is also captain of a company of the Brigade, appeared before the assembly in very unclerical costume, and told how he had got hold of a lot of boys in his parish through the organisation who were formerly quite outside all religious influences. He described the routine of the work, which includes Bible reading, prayer, addresses, physical drill, &c. He believed the Brigade was being instrumental in raising up loyal, self-respecting Christian men.

One of the announced speakers was Rev. W. H. Webb-Peploe, who was unable through indisposition to be present; but he sent a letter, in which he declared that he placed a high value on the work the Brigade is doing, and considered it the real missing link in parish life. In Mr. Peploe's absence a short statement was made by Mr. Wm. Smith, of Glasgow (Brigade Secretary and founder of the organisation). He insisted on it that the future existence and prosperity of the movement would depend on the way in which the original high standard of its promoters is maintained.

After an appeal from Mr. J. C. Alston for £600 for the maintenance of headquarters operations during the ensuing year, an address followed from Mr. R. F. Horton, who, after some pleasantries, defended the principle of military organisation (purged of its fighting aspects) as an antidote to excessive individualism, and an agency for fostering habits of social and national discipline and united action.

The last address was by Professor Drummond, who expatiated on the field that the Brigade offers for the devotion of young men desirous of laying out their lives in elevating and Christianising the lives of youths in humbler stations of social life. The Professor said he had closely watched the movement from its inception, and he did not hesitate to say that it does nothing but good to the boy and to the whole nature of the boy.

Between the addresses there were exhibitions of company and musical drill, and all present appeared to be charmed by the precision with which the boys went through their combined movements at the word of command. If the spiritual and mental exercises prescribed are at all commensurate in result with the bodily exercise exhibited on the platform, the Brigade must certainly develop "the whole boy" in a striking way.

DEACONESSES' INSTITUTION, TOTTENHAM.

At the twenty-fifth anniversary of this excellent institution, on Thursday last, Mr. James Mathieson presided; his address on the evangelising influence of medical missions and of the high position women's work has taken in Christianising the world, was heard with the deepest attention by the large audience.

Rev. Dr. Reynolds (Principal of Cheshunt College), Rev. Dr. Russell, and Mr. Joseph Howard, M.P., dwelt in detail on the labours of Dr. Laseron, and the good accomplished through them locally and at distant places. Dr. Rasch, one of the medical staff, said he knew no better way of making converts to Christianity than in the employment of the skilled ministrations of a Christian woman.

Rev. F. B. Meyer said God had evidently guided Dr. Laseron and his helpers all through the past twenty-five years. He spoke also with deep gratitude of the influence for good which the sisters obtained from the institution had exerted on both women and men, to his own knowledge, in such sin-stricken places of London as Leather-lane. Mr. John McCall and several other gentlemen having also spoken, Dr. Laseron thanked God for having privileged him to engage in this work.

Cape General Mission.

Mr. Dudley Kidd is on his way home from South Africa, and is due in England about the first week in June. His first meetings will be on June 14 at Mildmay, June 16 at Eastbourne, and June 18 at the Bridge of Allan Convention. He is also engaged to give addresses at the Rothesay and Guildford Conventions. Mr. Kidd will be open for engagements in England up to the end of August. During September he hopes to visit Scotland, and in October to visit Ireland.

Friends in the United Kingdom who may be able during these months to assist in arranging drawing-room or public meetings, at which Mr. Kidd and Mr. Mercer may speak of the needs of South Africa, will oblige by kindly writing at once to the Secretary, Cape General Mission, 2, Berkeley-terrace, Wimbledon. Mr. Kidd hopes to return to South Africa, with a reinforcement of workers, about the first week in November.

THE WORLD'S FAIR.—The Queen, of last Saturday, gives an excellent view of the women's building at the Chicago World's Fair, and portraits of the ladies on the English Committee, including Princess Christian, Lady Burdett-Coutts, Lady Aberdeen, Lady Henry Somerset, and others.

CENTRAL SOUDAN MISSION.—In the quarterly leaflet of this mission, Mr. H. G. Harris, director, says: "We thank God that more young men are being led to offer themselves for the Soudan, and we expect in time to be joined by some from Bristol and Liverpool. While any fully saved men will be welcomed, yet we especially need those who have a thorough knowledge of some handicraft. We are considering prayerfully the question of forming an industrial home here at Tripoli, for the instruction of negroes and Arabs in some useful arts, while at the same time they are brought under the influence of the Gospel. Such an establishment would give plenty of opportunities to our own members for mixing with the natives, and learning their language and modes of expression. It might also by God's blessing become a recruiting ground for a band of native evangelists, who would join us in taking the Gospel to their fellow-countrymen in the dark interior." At the beginning of May pioneers were expecting shortly to proceed to Sokoto. Copies of the leaflet may be had from John Heywood, Deansgate, Manchester, 6d. per dozen.

OBITUARY.

REV. JAMES L. BLAKE.

This earnest and faithful minister of the Gospel, at Langton, near Duns, N.B., was called home on Saturday week, aged seventy-two. On the Sunday morning he was to have preached his farewell sermon. In the earlier years he edited The Missionary Record of the Church of Scotland, and published several essays.

DR. DAVID RUSSELL, D.D.

We regret to hear of the death of this honoured minister, who since 1839 has laboured faithfully in the Gospel in Glasgow. He passed away on Sunday week, in his eighty-first year. Rev. Alexander Maclaren, D.D., speaking at the funeral service, paid an eloquent and just tribute to the memory of Dr. Russell, whom, he said, he knew when their departed friend conducted a class of young men in Sauchiehall-street, and expounded to them the Gospel of Christ. Dr. Russell was a man of great intellectual powers, of large common-sense, was singularly unobtrusive and disinterested, and distinguished by childlike simplicity. He never sought the praise of men, and was an active worker both in the denomination and in his own church.

REV. JAMES WINTER OF CAITHNESS.

The sad death of Rev. James Winter, Free Church minister of Bower, Caithness, has awakened deep regret. Mr. Winter preached on Sunday week at Lyth, an outlying part of the parish, and held a religious service in a house in the same district. About half-past ten o'clock he left for home on horseback; but at five o'clock in the morning his body was found lying face downward in a ditch at the roadside. The horse is subject to staggers, and it is supposed that the animal had suddenly swerved to the side, and that Mr. Winter, being thrown on his head, had been rendered unconscious, and had been suffocated by the water in the ditch. He was about thirty years of age, and was a son of the Rev. Dr. Winter, of Dyke.

MR. GEORGE DUNCAN.

Many will deeply regret to hear of the death of one who for many years was regarded amongst the leaders of the Presbyterian Church in England; who first became associated with Regent-square in Dr. James Hamilton's days, and who for nearly thirty years threw himself with characteristic ardour into all the work of the congregation, occupying for many years the responsible position of Treasurer of the Synod Fund. His death took place on Wednesday week at his residence at Coldrey, Hants. It had been, he was wont to say, a great pleasure for him to enjoy the personal friendship of such men as Drs. Candlish, Robert Buchanan, Roxburgh, Patrick Swan, and others of that noble band. Towards the evangelical party in the Church of England he was early drawn through the devotion and earnest piety of his wife's family, for many years active workers in connection with the church presided over by Baptist Noel. He had intimate relations with many devout and warm-hearted Christians, leading him to recognise the spirit of the Master in all good men.

MR. W. P. GRIFFITH.

In the death of Mr. Griffith, Methodism in the south of England suffers a serious loss. As a class-leader, Sunday-school superintendent, preacher, as well as generous supporter of the Lord's work, he was known and loved far and near. Speaking at the funeral, Dr. Finnemore said: As a man he was gentle, generous, and kind; as a Christian he was loyal to Jesus Christ, whom to the last he confessed as his only ground of trust, the one foundation on which he built all his hopes for time and eternity. Full of activity, in his Christian as in his every-day life he was pre-eminently a man of deeds rather than of words. He (Dr. Finnemore) had never approached him in vain when he desired him to undertake any work for Christ. He had a firm, intelligent grasp of Christian truth, and stood by the old landmarks with little sympathy for the strangely fascinating modern thought infused too largely into the public teaching of the Christian faith. It was a deep sorrow to him when he detected anything not in accord with the doctrines of the New Testament. At one time or other he held every office in the Church which he could hold, and in all he displayed a perfect fidelity.

COMMANDER A. P. WILLIAMS, R.N., is carrying on a good work in Oxford as mission secretary of the Protestant Reformation Society. He was among the most diligent in recently awaking public sentiment against the proposed statue to Cardinal Newman, and many members of the University and undergraduates reckon him among their most faithful friends. In his address, a few days ago, at the annual meeting of the Society, that well-known Oxford clergyman, Canon Christopher, referred to the Commander as one of the most useful men of his acquaintance. Knowing a large number of undergraduates, the Commander takes great pains in calling upon freshmen, and inviting them to his house, and to classes and prayer-meetings. We are glad to call attention to this work. Some of our readers, desirous of bringing young men in the University under the influence of Commander Williams, may like to communicate with him. His address is—Stoke House, 26, Farndon-road, Oxford.

THE SONG OF SONGS.

There have been many expositions of the Song of Songs, and not a few attempts to versify the poem in the speech of Western people. Sometimes interpreters have been so literal as to exclude the spirit and life of the beautiful idyll. Others have been so mystical as to leave out of view the native warmth and colour. Therefore, we welcome a volume* from the pen of Rev. James Neil, in which the first canto is presented in poetical form. This work at once conveys the natural meaning and indicates the deeper significance of that section of the Song which is, perhaps, the most attractive of all—from the beginning to chap. ii. 7.

In the form of notes at the end of the book, Mr. Neil gives information such as is specially helpful to a thorough understanding of the poem. He points out that in the title of the book Solomon is not defined as "King of Israel" or "Jerusalem," as in the opening of Proverbs and Ecclesiastes respectively; a plain indication that the personality of Israel's mighty king is eclipsed by that of Christ, of whom he was such an eminent type; for, according to the universal testimony of the Church, "a greater than Solomon is here." As Rev. A. Moody Stuart has eloquently said, "it belongs to the earthly Solomon, as the skilful work of his hands; to the heavenly Solomon, as the utterance of his heart to the Church, and of the heart of the Church towards Him. It is the 'Song of Songs,' as the choicest of all the songs of the sons of men, and of all that Solomon sang; the chief of his thousand songs and five; the sweetest, the simplest, the highest, the deepest of the songs of the Church in the house of her pilgrimage; above all others her song in the night until the day break and the shadows flee away."

In the prologue we have the following lines:—

> Monarch hands thy measures trace,
> Wisest son of mortal race,
> Shel'omoh, a king of kings,
> Shel'omoh, whose glory brings
> Shadow faint of fairer things.
> All the sweets that strew the song,
> Prince of Peace, to Thee belong;
> Breathes in music, ev'ry chord,
> Thine the voice, Messiah Lord.

The words "Draw me; we will run after Thee" ch. i. 4) are thus developed:—

> Draw me, for I fain would be > Nearer, O my life, to Thee;
> Trembling, strengthless, wanting will,
> When thy joy my soul shall fill,
> Swift as hind still leaping higher,
> We will mount and never tire—
> We, for not alone I'll come,
> Speeding toward my spirit's home—
> Drawn resistless to thy side,
> Ransom'd souls shall join thy bride.

The words of the Bride, "I am black but comely" (3), have inspired these lines:—

> Daughters of Jerusalem,
> Strangers still to Jesus' grace—
> Tears for Him your cheeks begem,
> Heedless still how sad your case—
> Bid me not, so vile I seem,
> Hold this glory but a dream.
> I am black, all black within,
> Marr'd by sorrow, shame, and sin;
> Swarth as tent, with hue of night,
> O'er the dusky Ishmaelite.
> Yet I'm comely, this I know,
> Christ, my Master, counts me so.
> Comely as the curtains fall,
> Shel'omoh, around thy hall.
> Now his mantle s o'er me thrown
> I've a grace that's not my own;
> Black in self, in Him I wear
> Brightest garb of glory's heir,
> Loveliness supernal mine,
> Robed in righteousness divine.

Perhaps the choicest pages are those in which verse 15, "Behold, thou art fair, my love," &c., is spiritualised, as follows:—

> THE KING.
> Lo! my love how fair to see,
> Lo! how fair thou art to me;
> Thou hast eyes of gentle dove,
> Eyes of chaste and constant love.
> THE BRIDE.
> Lo! Belov'd, 'tis THOU art fair,
> Mine alone thy grace to share—
> Fair in heav'n and fair on earth;
> Fair in deigning mortal birth;
> Fair in Naz'reth's peaceful glen;
> Fair in Zion's strife of men;
> Fair in signs of wondrous power;
> Fair in shame and weakness' hour;
> Fair in pity's tender word;
> Fair in deeds of love unheard;
> Fair in cross, and fair in grave;
> Fair in risen might to save;
> Fair before the Father's throne;
> Pleading now for all Thine own—
> Lo! Beloved, 'tis THOU art fair,
> Mine alone thy grace to share!

Thus the Gospel is made to shine through the sacred allegory. An epilogue is founded on chapter viii. 6, "Set me as a seal upon thine heart," &c.

Exquisitely printed and artistically bound, this volume is above all suitable for a wedding gift. Those who see little to admire in the "Song of Songs" may learn from these pages something of the wealth of meaning conveyed by the poem when studied by a devout Christian scholar.

NOTES ON DAILY READINGS.

SUNDAY, MAY 29.—GENESIS XL.

What a remarkable parallelism there is between the life of Joseph, and that of the Lord Jesus! Who of us can forget that He, too, had to deal with two malefactors, one of which was sent from the cross to his own place, while the other entered Paradise. And it is a solemn thought that as we go through the world, we cannot help being a savour of death to some, as we hope to become a savour of life to others. On all hands some are being saved and some are perishing. We should be watchful of the changes which pass over the faces of those with whom we associate, whether for sorrow or joy, that we may be able to sympathise. Joseph did more than his bare duty to these men; he entered into the causes of their sorrow. He had plenty of grief of his own, but he found respite from his own in seeking to alleviate theirs. There is no such cure for the heartache as in seeking to comfort others. As we pass our comfort on we get more. And how quick is grief to detect and understand grief! This youth was evidently living near God. His first thought was that God could give answers of peace. And God was not unmindful of him. He was standing there in the shadow keeping watch on his child, and though Joseph little knew it, in that act of unselfish sympathy he was fixing a ladder by which he would hereafter climb to the upper air and light. Do not be too hard on the butler's forgetfulness; remember that thou hast forgotten One who had even greater claims on thee.

MONDAY, MAY 30.—GENESIS XLI.

"It is not in me." How true that is! We have nothing to boast of save what He puts into us. "Not unto us, not unto us, but to thy name will we give glory." "It is not I, but Christ liveth in me." But what cannot God do through a surrendered soul! He can advise with such wisdom, speak with such grace, act with such discretion, as to compel the admission, Here is a man in whom the Spirit of God is. But there must be the emptying before the filling; the descent before the ascent; the prison and (so to speak) the grave before the palace and the exaltation. Be brave in the prison of present circumstances. God will not forget you, though the butler may; He will make you the necessary link in some chain, and you will be so blessed as to call your child Manasseh—made to forget—or Ephraim, caused to be fruitful. The sorrow of the present shall be remembered as a bad dream. In all this wondrous story see the reflection of the glories of the Lord, who was raised from the grave to the right hand of God, and has become a Prince and a Saviour, the giver of corn, before whom all creatures in heaven and earth are summoned to bow the knee. His life is now spent in making blessed provision for those who must else have starved in hopeless misery. And the bread which He gives is his flesh for the life of the world.

TUESDAY, MAY 31.—GENESIS XLII.

In this rough usage on the part of Joseph, we see his design to repeat to his brethren the treatment which he had himself experienced at their hands. Probably they had accused him of being a spy, notwithstanding his protestations to the contrary. His design was to bring their sin to remembrance and to ascertain their attitude towards it. If they were truly penitent, they would give some sign of it in the way in which they behaved under similar trials to those which they had inflicted. Ah! how often do we find ourselves placed in circumstances that recall our own dealings with Christ and others in bygone years. Then we exclaim, as the Nemesis of our sin overtakes us, 'We are verily guilty concerning our brother." Many are the providences of God that speak roughly to us. The east wind blows long and bitterly in our faces. We are pressed by the famine behind and by the austere governor in front; our motives are misrepresented, and our good faith questioned. All these things are hard to bear. But behind all these adverse appearances there is the sweetest, tenderest love. Beneath that foreign garb there beats a brother's heart, which can hardly keep back the tears of sympathy and love, and finds it difficult to carry out the discipline it has devised. In the meanwhile you shall want no good thing. There shall be corn in your sacks, and money, too, since all is of grace. And every day brings you nearer the great light.

WEDNESDAY, JUNE 1.—GENESIS XLIII.

Thus does God bring us to Himself. The famine forbids us to stay in the far country, and Simeon is like an anchor, of which the cable draws us to a distant shore. We move forward with dread into the unknown, but that dread is the child of ignorance. If only we knew that there is nothing but love waiting for us there, which does not want our balm and honey, our spices and myrrh, but craves only for ourselves, and wants us that it may seat us with itself at a feast, making us merry. We travel forward with fear because we do not see that Jesus is there, and that He is providing for us a welcome which will make us glad indeed. He knows all about us—our names, and ages, and temperaments. He has his Benjamin to whom He sends double portions. He returns our money because He needs nothing that we can give. He waits to manifest Himself, as He does not to the world. The only thing that can separate us from his love is unconfessed sin. But just so soon as that is put away, the flood-gates are opened, and there is a commingling of heart and heart. Oh, if you have crucified Him by sin, this will not shut his heart to you; it will rather induce Him to heap on you coals of fire, till you melt into confession and tears, and make Him able to tell all that is in his heart.

THURSDAY, JUNE 2.—GENESIS XLIV.

What transitions there are in life! The end of the last chapter finds the brothers as happy as they could be, but this shows them plunged into the deepest grief, which was not the direct result of their sins. They were the victims of circumstances over which they had no control. The intensity of their suffering was like fire, burning out their love of sin, and purging them of the jealousy and evil which had been honeycombing their relations to each other and to Joseph. It must have required extraordinary tenacity of purpose for Joseph to make his brethren suffer like this, but he dared to enforce the ordeal because he so clearly saw its necessity, the result to which they were coming, and for which they were being prepared. What a revelation this is of the reasons for the sorrows through which we have to pass! Jesus is behind them all, determining each, its duration and character and intensity. He sits as a refiner of silver. He dares to make us suffer to rid us of sin and to prepare us for a solid blessedness which shall last through all the sunny years that await us. But what pain it costs Him to give us pain! Like Joseph, He often turns aside to weep. And like Judah, He pleads for us in the presence of God.

FRIDAY, JUNE 3.—GENESIS XLV.

It may be that we have here an exact representation of a revelation which Jesus is going to make of Himself to his brethren the Jews. Now He is passing them through awful sufferings to bring them to repentance, and to prepare them to receive the supreme revelation of Himself. Ere long He will drop the veil, and say, I am Jesus, your brother, whom ye sold unto Pilate. The bride of Christ may well rejoice as she hears the tidings of this blessed reconciliation, for his brethren must ever be dear to her. It is a great art in Christian living to look through the agencies that lie closest to our lives, so as to discern God's presence behind them, permitting if not appointing them. Do not let us attribute too much to the malevolence of men. They could have no power at all if it were not given them. "It was not ye that sent me hither, but God." How tenderly our Joseph considers our needs; waggons for the aged and children; corn, bread, victual, raiment; loving messages of welcome. Oh to trust Him, who will supply all our need according to his riches in glory, till we see Him as He is!

SATURDAY, JUNE 4.—GENESIS XLVI.

Jacob might have feared to go down into Egypt after the experiences of his family there in the past, so God gave him a special injunction to go, and pledged Himself to go down with him. We need not fear to go down even into Egypt with such company, and as surely as we go down with God we shall come up with Him again. The years may seem to pass wearily enough, and God to have forgotten his promise, but at the destined moment He will appear to redeem his pledge, and emancipate his people. What a greeting that was, when the old man wept on the neck of his long lost son! He had said that all these things were against him, and so they appeared to be, but they were all working for him in a marvellous fashion, bearing him towards that happy meeting. In that moment of rapture the yearnings of years were satisfied. Wait, sad and weary heart, t y God will not fail thee! Such are the reunions that lie in the morning-light of happier days. Wait, trust, be still. Weeping endures for the brief Eastern night; joy comes at dawn.

SUNDAY AFTERNOON, JUNE 5.

The Fiery Furnace—Dan. iii. 13-25.

Golden Text: Isa. xliii. 2.

Contrast Nebuchadnezzar at the close of the former chapter and at the beginning of this. There he seems like a convert to the worship of the God of the Hebrews, here he uses his great power to compel his people to idolatry. How speedily good impressions may pass away (Hos. vi. 4). The time when this image was set up is not stated. The most probable conjecture is that it was immediately after the destruction of Jerusalem, and the captivity of Zedekiah and his people. Nebuchadnezzar probably regarded his victory as a proof of the superiority of his gods over the God of Israel.

An exact description of the image is impossible. Its height was sixty cubits—about ninety feet—and its breadth six cubits—about nine feet. It is probable that it consisted of an image of his favourite deity Bel-Merodach, placed upon a high pedestal. If it was entirely of gold it gives us some conception of the wealth of this empire.

The plain of Dura (1) is, by some authorities, identified with Dur on the left bank of the Tigris. But this has been objected to because it is 150 miles distant from Babylon; and a more probable site has been suggested near to the mound of Dowair, or Duair, where the pedestal of a colossal statue has been discovered—See Smith's Dictionary.

The various officers (2) are the representatives of the provinces included in the empire. The king seems to have thought that unity of worship would help to secure political unity. Religious fervour was not the only motive that actuated him.

We have no means of knowing what the fiery furnace (6) was like. That it was of great size is evident from the fact that four persons could walk together in it (25). It was so placed that persons at a distance could look into it. Its heat was so intense that it was dangerous to approach near it (22). With the threat of such a punishment who will dare to disobey?

Daniel was probably away at this time; but his three companions refuse obedience to the king's command (12). The men who owe their lives to Daniel and his companions (ii. 14-18), but who regard their exalted position with envy, are first to inform the king (12). At this point the lesson opens.

A Bold Confession (13-18). In presence of the furious king another opportunity is given them (14, 15), which they quietly and resolutely refuse (16, 17). Their reply means that their course is a very straight one, and requires no hesitation; and that their purpose is to obey God and leave the issue in his hands. This testimony is valuable. Consider (1) before whom it was made. Not only a king but such a king as Nebuchadnezzar, whose power none could resist. And Nebuchadnezzar "in rage and great fury" (13). See Prov. xvi. 14, xxviii. 15. To withstand the wrath of such a king required no mean courage. (2) Who made it. They were yet only young men; and so far as the narrative informs us, they stood alone. If there were other Jews present they seem to have forgotten their duty to God. To be faithful where so many are faithless requires great strength of Christian character. (3) The excuses that might have been urged by them. Would not some have waited for the example of older Hebrews? Were they not captives compelled to do all Nebuchadnezzar demanded? Had they not already been of some use in Babylon, why should they throw their lives away? Their testimony would not be appreciated among such a people? And an outward act of worship need not carry with it the consent of the mind. Against all these excuses was the command of God (Exod. xx. 3-6). Admire, honour, and imitate their fidelity, which was proof against the threat of such a death.

A Miraculous Deliverance (19-25).—If, to approach the furnace was death to the king's servants (22), to be thrown into the furnace must be death to these young men. Perhaps they had read the Golden Text, and could trust God to fulfil this word. See (1) the strength and weakness of God's enemies. They can get furious (19), can heat the furnace, and throw into it the servants of God. But the fire is also God's servant, and cannot hurt where God forbids it. See Isa. liv. 16, 17. New Testament promises should make us fearless in witnessing for Christ (Luke x. 19; Matt. xxviii. 18). See (2) How God honours those who honour Him. The fourth person whom the king saw in the fire was none other than the Angel of the Covenant—the Lord Himself. His presence rendered the fire powerless except to loose their bonds (25). Faithful witnesses for Him have still the same defence (2 Tim. iv. 17, 18; 1 Pet. iii. 13-15.)

Letters to the Editor.

ARMY CHAPLAINS.

Dear Sir,—I wish you to say this with regard to the Army chaplains: That only the other day, in conversation with an intelligent staff-sergeant, now serving at Aldershot, he told me how, before his serving in the Army, he had been in the Church of England, but that he had since joined the Wesleyans. He said his experience was that all the chaplains went in for High Church services, and that the men had to stand up on the entrance of the chaplain with the choir. Having a conspicuous place, he said, he could not sit back among the unobserved, and he objected to this sort of man worship.

Also, he added, the Church Institutes are all conducted on this "High" plan; a bust of Christ and a cross, then a saint and a cross, and saints in all the windows, are, to his mind, most objectionable. But all are sanctioned by the chaplains. Can this all be their "truer and keener desire for the soldier's best interests, and universally commanding the respect of both officers and men"? If so, my staff-sergeant is an exception to the rule, and I am another.—Yours faithfully,

G. F. Windham (late Major, Rifle Brigade).
Ashley Lodge, Lavender-hill, S.W.

Sir,—With reference to your "Notes and Comments" of the 5th inst. on the subject of Army Chaplains I feel it my duty to write to you, in defence of those who, I think, are misrepresented.

I cannot say anything about the prohibition of Miss Robinson's work, as I do not know the facts of the case. Nor can I say anything with regard to the articles in Truth. I should hardly expect to find in that paper (which I do not read) reliable information on any religious question.

In common justice to the chaplains, however, I feel bound to testify from my own experience (and for the last six years I have been serving at our largest military stations) that, although I have been frequently brought into sharp antagonism with them on doctrinal matters, I have not found them "trying to stop spiritual work." Many of them I know to be humble and devoted followers of our Lord Jesus Christ, anxious above all things to do his will, and endeavouring amid the greatest difficulties to attract men to Him. [We said twice over, "With some bright exceptions."—Ed.]

You say that "soldiers in general are said to regard official chaplains as shams." As a soldier, let me ask you to withdraw this statement. Some of them are shams, but although I could tell you of "useless chaplains," I believe, and I thank God for it, that the majority are not useless by any means. If it were the case that soldiers regarded them as shams, how is it that our voluntary services in garrison chapels are filled with red coats? At most garrisons where I have been, these are well attended.

You say further, that it would be well if chaplains "were abolished and the men allowed to attend any place of worship they choose." I have heard this sentiment expressed by godless brother officers, but I little expected to see it in The Christian. I can only say to you what I have said to them, that our weekly church parades are a bowing before the Lord of Hosts, an acknowledgment of His sovereign power. What if there are ungodly men present? It only gives the greater opportunity to the preacher. I have myself, when on detached duty, had the opportunity of preaching to the men under my command at church parade, and have thanked God for the chance it has given me—a chance, which otherwise I should not probably have had—of calling on sinners to repent and turn to Christ. I earnestly trust that the day may be very far distant when the office of army chaplain will be abolished and all collective worship of God discontinued.—Yours faithfully,

Chatham, May 17. G. K. Scott Moncrieff,
Captain R.E.

Dear Sir,—I regret exceedingly that my name has appeared in connection with allegations against Church of England Army Chaplains. It must be borne in mind that they rank as officers, and it is a rule with all who work among soldiers not to criticise, much less oppose, any order given by an officer. Especially is it disastrous for a soldiers' institute to come into collision with military authority; one would bear any grievance rather than risk that.

But it is urged upon me that silence now would be criminal, therefore I beg to testify to the truth of those two paragraphs in The Christian of May 5, with the exception of one sentence: "the men are told not to go to the Soldiers' Institute." I never knew a soldier say this of the chaplains, but only of their helpers and adherents.

I have read Major Evered Poole's letter. As an official of the Army Scripture Readers' Society, which is dependent for its very existence on the goodwill of the Chaplain-General and chaplains, he is bound to stand up for them, but he tries to prove too much. The opposition of chaplains to "irregular work" is nothing new, but it has certainly increased of late years, as the chaplains become more pronounced Ritualists. It is the present fact that I am not allowed to hold meetings in barracks (as formerly) solely because the chaplains disapprove.

As to Netley, our ladies do not go over very often, but there was no hindrance until last March. "The Acting Principal Medical Officer presents his compliments to Miss Robinson, and would explain to her that the delay in answering her letter has been occasioned by the necessity of inquiring the opinion of the various chaplains, who all object to the systematic visiting by ladies connected with the Soldiers' Institute, and especially to the distribution of literature among the patients." I do not wish to make a grievance of all this; there are many outside ways in which we can help and influence the men. As to books and papers, for instance, we spend £500 to £600 yearly in free distribution, sending to all regiments and all Army Scripture Readers (even at Netley). The chaplains cannot stop post-parcels. A serjeant writes: "I used to visit the strong-room to speak to men waiting to be settled with for their crimes by the Commanding Officer—a good time when they were brought face to face with the consequences of sin and were prepared to receive advice; but one day the chaplain saw a small book there with Miss Daniell's Soldiers' Home on it; he at once made inquiry, and I was found to be the culprit who took it there, so was strictly ordered by him never to go in again on such errands." This is a sample of many scores of similar complaints. I can name no one.

I noticed Lord Kinnaird's suggestion, but the difficulty is that no one in the Army or in soldier-work would dare to give evidence. Officers must support the chaplains, and even if outward restrictions were removed by Parliamentary action, there are numberless ways of hindering work if those in authority desire to do so. Our one aim is to bring the men to Christ, irrespective of creed or church, and our friends can best help us by prayer and money, not by attacking chaplains.

Although a Presbyterian, I love the Church of England in its purity. I was converted to God in a village church, and have a happy remembrance of the simple services there. My eldest brother was a Church of England clergyman. I placed my Institute at Alexandria under the charge of a Church of England clergyman and his wife, from 1886. Many of my helpers are also Church of England. Recognising the chaplains' position, I have always invited them to visit and to make use of our Soldiers' Institute, but they will not, generally speaking; the more earnestly ritualistic any chaplain or officer is the more does he dislike and attempt to put down work and teaching such as ours.

I have written this letter with great pain, and in the full consciousness that our work at Portsmouth will suffer for it. Officers will be against us; subscribers may withdraw; rectors and vicars, who have been among the kindest of our supporters, will probably close their doors against me on my next journey. Yet I do feel it right to speak out as in the presence of the God of truth.—Sincerely yours,

S. Robinson.
Soldiers' Institute, Portsmouth, May 20.

THE BIBLE LEAGUE.

Dear Sir,—As one who sees an answer to prayer in the establishment of the Bible League, perhaps you will kindly permit me to refer to the note in a recent issue. You credit us with a name we have not taken. We are a Bible League, not a Bible Defence League. Let me say, however, that, personally, I should not have objected to the latter title. The ridicule poured upon us by "a well-known evangelist" is beside the mark. The sun may not require to be defended from mists, though if the evangelist will found a league with some promising plan to clear away London smoke and fog, I shall promise him help and not criticism. If he were, to my knowledge, unjustly aspersed and assailed, I should, without hesitation, defend him. If I heard the Lord Jesus misrepresented and defamed I should defend my Master—not because He needed my poor support, but simply because it would be the duty of the moment, and possibly a work of supreme necessity for those within reach of the defamer's influence. Many of the martyrs died for the simple reason that they felt they must at any cost do that very work. Did they err, and bring down upon themselves the judgment of God as well as the murderous fury of men? If the Bible is misrepresented and aspersed and assailed, am I to keep silence? Perhaps the well-known evangelist will let me know, and clear away the mist and fog from my understanding. For, if I speak, I should be defending the Bible; and, if I understand him rightly, that would be a mistake and a sin.

But, I repeat, we are not a Bible Defence League, but a Bible League. We shall assuredly undertake defence work, but we have also larger aims, as will be seen from the following list of our objects:—

1.—To organise conferences in various parts of the country. Attention will in this way be drawn to present movements, and a public opinion will be created which will have a powerful influence on the issues of the struggle.

2.—To arrange for lectures by capable and reliable men. Many brethren, specially fitted by study and experience for this work, may be induced to lecture in their own and surrounding districts.

3.—To recommend and supply books adapted to the needs of the time. These will be supplied to members of the League at greatly reduced prices.

4.—To encourage the formation of classes for the study of the Bible and its evidences.

5.—To offer prizes, and to prepare papers for Sunday-school Examinations, with the view of fostering doctrinal instruction, and of counteracting in a measure the present extreme tendency to emphasize merely the historical element in the Scriptures.

THE ACCUSER IN REV. XII.

Dear Sir,—I am much obliged to my dear and esteemed friend, Mr. Bland, for having paid some attention to the real question—that of our justification. Confining myself to the former part of his letter, I cannot but express my surprise at the distinction which he draws "between accusations against our justification, and accusations against our walk as Christians." This is an entirely new view of justification, so far as I am aware. Surely it is we ourselves who are "justified from all things," and to whom righteousness is reckoned, counted, imputed, "if we believe on Him that raised up Jesus our Lord from the dead." It is we ourselves who being justified by faith have peace with God; and it is we ourselves who have access by faith into this grace wherein WE STAND.

I am very glad that we have got to Rom. iii., iv. viii., for here we are on ground on which our difference of interpretation may surely be reduced to a minimum. I ask, therefore, is it to be seriously maintained by evangelists and teachers when dealing with the great subject of our JUSTIFICATION, that that magnificent question, "Who shall lay ANYTHING to the charge of God's Elect?" is not unanswerable, but leaves room for this reply: "No one, indeed, can lay anything to the charge of God's elect—that is, 'no accusation against their justification'—but as to themselves, their walk and conversation, the devil is accusing them BEFORE GOD day and night. The death, resurrection, and glorifying of Christ their Surety have made no difference in this respect." If this be so, we must repudiate much of the solid food on which our fathers fed their souls, and re-write in a minor key the mighty melodies in which they praised the Gospel of the glory of the blessed God.

Mr. Bland is one of a body of Christian brethren who have rendered essential service in Scripture exegesis by their expositions of "Dispensational Truth." I have appealed to their own principles, and shown that so long as no atonement had been made for sin, and so long as the righteousness of God, in passing over sins done in the dispensation before Christ died, was not manifest, there was room for the accuser to accuse his people before him day and night. But when through death Jesus rendered powerless as an accuser him that had the power of death—that is, the devil (i.e., the accuser)—he was cast out of the place where his accusation had been carried on.

I am also surprised at the assertion, not made by Mr. Bland alone, that the accusing of God's people concerning their walk and conversation "needs the advocacy of Christ for us as referred to in 1 John ii. 1, 2." Granting and claiming the importance of the distinction between our relation as men to God the King, and our relation to Him as children to our Father, I would ask, What has the accuser to do inside the family circle?

The question in John's Epistle is that of communion with the Father. There is no suggestion of a legal process such as would make room for an accuser; nor of an advocate, in the sense of a barrister-at-law. The Advocate we have with the Father is precisely our great High Priest, who is King of Righteousness, and therefore King of Peace. The Epistle to the Hebrews amplifies the brief suggestions of John's Epistle. Walking in the light, it is not the Satanic accuser, but the Word of God—quick, powerful, sharp, piercing—that makes us conscious of sin, and reassures the fainting spirit by testimony to the blood which cleanses the conscience and to the great High Priest who ever lives to make intercession for us.

That no mention is made of the accuser in John's Epistle, and that before the High Priest is mentioned in the Hebrews, the devil, the accuser, is said to have been rendered powerless by the death of Jesus, is enough to show that it is not to meet the accusations of the devil that God has given us a High Priest who ever liveth to make intercession for us, and who is gone into heaven itself now to appear in the presence of God for us.

We have a vivid illustration of the occasion and method of our Elder Brother's intercession in that touching word to Peter: "Simon, Simon, Satan hath desired to have you that he may sift you as wheat; but I have prayed for thee that thy faith fail not."

M.

Dear Sir,—Mr. Bland's letter in a recent issue confirms a conviction I have long had, that in interpreting the man-child of Rev. xii. 5 to mean Christ—as I fully believe we should—we ought not to limit the birth set forth in the sign to his incarnation only, as is commonly done, but should make it include his death and resurrection also.

The words "Thou art my Son, this day have I begotten Thee," are by St. Paul referred (Acts xiii. 33) to Christ's resurrection. Now these words occur in Psalm ii., and are immediately followed by the words referred to in Rev. xii. 5, where it is said of the man-child, "Who was to rule all nations with a rod of iron."

It may be objected that Satan's efforts to devour the man-child point to Herod's attempts to compass the death of "the young child," as recorded in Matt. ii. This may be fully granted as a preliminary fulfilment, but when we trace Satan's further efforts against Christ in entering into Judas Iscariot to make him betray Jesus, in stirring up the Jews to ask, and Pilate to deliver Him to be crucified, in finally, as the one "who had the power of death" (Heb. ii. 14), laying hold of Him, though it proved to be to his own destruction, it is more natural to see depicted in Rev. xii. 1-5 the whole of the conflict between Satan and Christ here below than only the commencement of it.

Do not the words "caught up to God and to his throne" seem to be absolutely prohibitory of any other application than to Christ Himself? His people are to share his throne hereafter, but not God's throne, to which Christ alone is taken, and on which He alone is ever represented as sitting. Eph. ii. 6 is no contradiction to this, for it is plain that the Apostle is there speaking of the Saints' mystical union with Christ in glory. He represents them there, but they do not themselves ever sit on God's throne. Our Lord teaches us the distinction between the two thrones in Rev. iii. 21; his Father's, where He now alone sits, and his own hereafter, which his people will share with Him.

Mr. Bland says of the man-child—"I submit that whoever it be, it is some one who comes into existence, or, at all events, appears in the scene during the time of Israel's travail-pangs," and then he goes on to identify this time with that of the great tribulation spoken of in Dan. xii. 1.

But does not our Lord by his use of this very metaphor (John xvi. 21) identify the time with that of his own death and resurrection? Persecution is not necessarily involved in the figure, but rather, as our Lord applies it (ver. 22), sorrow such as was even then settling down upon the hearts of his disciples, to be followed by the joy which his resurrection would afford, of which we see the commencement in John xx. 20.

If it be objected that in Rev. xii. 2 the "travail-pangs" are those of the mother, one must remember that from the wonderfully unique position of our Lord, as being God and man, He was not only the God of Israel ("How often would I have gathered thee"), but also Israel itself personified. "Thou art my servant, O Israel, in whom I will be glorified" (Is. xlix. 3), and, therefore, even his own sufferings and death might well be called "Israel's travail-pangs," and, perhaps, in a higher and more real sense than could be said of the future national tribulation of Israel after the flesh. It is worthy of note that the Apostle Peter applies this very term to the death of Christ, Acts ii. 24, "Whom God raised up, having loosed the pangs (R.V.) of death (the word in the Greek is travail-pangs), because it was not possible that He should be holden of it."

The Lamentations of Jeremiah i. 12 and iii. 1 seem to throw light upon this subject. I will not enter into controversy as to any other points referred to in Mr. Bland's letter. My object in writing is to urge that the birth of the man-child in Rev. xii. 1-5 does not point to the incarnation alone, but includes also the death and resurrection of our blessed Lord.

H. E. Brooke.

P S.—Since I wrote the above I find that Mr. Pember, the ablest Futurist writer of the present day, takes the same view of John xvi. 21, viz., that it is our Lord's own explanation of the symbol. He takes the woman to be the Church, i.e., the true people of God of both old and new dispensations; but he regards the man-child as being not only Christ personal, but Christ mystical—head and members combined—and the period of travail as spread over the whole dispensation. I am thankful for his testimony, so far as it goes, and only wish that he could see the immense difficulty of taking what is described in the vision as an event, as being a continuous series of events spread over eighteen hundred years.

[Besides those which have appeared, we have received several communications with reference to the articles on "The Accuser Cast Out." But scarcely one, except Mr. Bland, has touched the question: How we can be declared justified, and yet be at the same time accused. All our correspondents have asserted or assumed that all the Revelation from iv. 1 is future to this dispensation. But this has never been proved; on the contrary, it has been shown that in i. 19, 20, "the things which thou hast seen, the things which are, and the things which shall be hereafter," are defined to be "the mystery of the seven stars, and the seven golden candlesticks"; and that there may be no uncertainty as to the subject of the book, these symbols are themselves interpreted: "The seven stars are the angels of the seven churches, and the seven candlesticks are the seven churches." To say the least, therefore, the interpretation of the book from iv. 1 onward, in a wholly future sense, is not proved, and therefore the arguments based on this assumption have no weight. Whereas, the question of our justification is one which can be considered and discussed on definite doctrinal declarations of Scripture, concerning which there is no such uncertainty and difference of view as exists with regard to the interpretation of Rev. xii. Mr. Bland's view as to future events may be taken as substantially representative of all the rest. At the same time we cordially thank our correspondents for their courteous letters expounding their ideas of things yet in their judgment to come to pass.—Ed.]

The Book World.

The Late C. H. Spurgeon.

Charles Haddon Spurgeon. Door C. S. Adama Van Scheltema. (Nijmegen: P. J. Milborn.) As the famous preacher was of Dutch descent, it is fitting that the story of his life should have been written thus soon in the language of the Netherlands. Mr. Van Scheltema has thrown much enthusiasm into his pages, which well deserve a wide circulation. The book, which is suitably illustrated, has been written for the benefit of the Orphanage of Neerbosch, and already has excited much interest in religious and philanthropic circles. Workers among the Dutch in South Africa and America will do well to promote the sale of this work, the author of which has long been engaged in literary labour for the good of his countrymen.

From the Pulpit to the Palm-Branch: A Memorial of C. H. Spurgeon. (2s. 6d. Passmore and Alabaster.) This volume was, as the preface intimates, at first intended to be merely a report of the memorial services held in the Metropolitan Tabernacle, "while the mortal body of its late beloved pastor lay asleep in the olive wood, under the palm branches." It was enlarged to make a place for a brief history of the last chapter in Mr. Spurgeon's faithful and fruitful earthly life, and is a good sequel to Mr. Shindler's attractive biographical sketch, entitled "From the Usher's Desk to the Tabernacle Pulpit." Beginning with his last appearances in the pulpit, the course of the last few months, so full of pathetic interest, is traced; but the bulk of the book is a record of the events succeeding Mr. Spurgeon's death, the funeral and memorial services being described at length. A number of excellent illustrations add to the value of the book.

Books on Holy Scripture.

The Inspiration and Authority of the Bible, by Dr. Clifford, is very eloquent. The preface declares the purpose of the work to be "to inspire faith in God and his Gospel, to prevent men from sailing towards 'the sunless gulf of Doubt,'" but we cannot see how it can do either of these. The author's strength is largely expended in criticisms and comparisons which will disquiet such as are unfamiliar with the ways and works of modern thought. (1s. J. Clarke and Co.)

The Higher Criticism: and the claims of Popular Faith in the Old Testament considered. Being the Merchant Lecture for April, 1892. By Edward White. (1s. J. Clarke and Co.) Too many have allowed the claims of the "Higher Criticism" without inquiring into its origin or method. A clever assertion of those claims in a magazine article has been sufficient to satisfy people who are not profoundly versed in Holy Scripture and are unable to conceive of answers to the "posing" questions of destructive critics. Mr. White's popular statement will enable thoughtful readers to examine these claims, whether as regards the Pentateuch, the Psalter, or the writings of the Prophets. It not only exposes the pretensions of men who combine a species of sceptical purpose with marvellous imaginative resource—and who, therefore, cannot be worthy of confidence—but by arguments which can be followed with ease it champions the cause and establishes the credibility of the Holy Scriptures of the Old Testament, which have been instrumental in making many besides Timothy "wise unto salvation through faith which is in Christ Jesus."

From an Indian Zenana: The Story of Lydia Muttulakshmi. By Rev. W. H. Jackson Picken. (1s. C. H. Kelly.) An illustrated book which will be read with peculiar pleasure by all who are interested in Zenana mission work in India.

First Principles of Scripture History, by T. S. Taylor, is a small book for schools. The pages bear evidence of careful compilation. In subsequent editions, the author may, on p. 14, correctly define "Exodus," as a Greek (not Hebrew) word meaning "going out." (1s. Relfe Bros.)

Holiday Stories, by Ruth Lamb (Religious Tract Society), are well named. The six short tales in this book will pleasantly serve to pass a recreative hour during the holiday time; but each will carry with it some important lesson in the regulating of conduct and the formation of character.

Sacred Memories and Testimonies for Jesus. By J. M. P. (Howe and Co., 23, St. Paul's-buildings, E.C.) Not all who sympathise with the author in urging a high standard of Christian life, will approve of some of the distinctions which she recognises. Nevertheless, the testimonies are stimulating, and we pray they may indicate to some the royal road to rest and fruitfulness in Christ.

The Moral Crusader: William Lloyd Garrison. By Goldwin Smith, D.C.L. (Funk and Wagnalls. 4s.) Those who recall or who have heard of Mr. Garrison's noble struggle against slavery in the United States, will be thankful to have this brief outline of his life and work. The four-volumed biography already issued is within reach of few; this modest book may be secured by all.

Messrs. Hodder and Stoughton have issued in a neat case a "Sunday-afternoon Library for the Young," containing four popular volumes of sermons to children. Three of the volumes are by the late Dr. Macleod, of Birkenhead—the prince of preachers to the young—and one "The Churchette," by Rev. J. R. Howatt, of Camberwell. Anything more appropriate as a gift or prize for intelligent young people it would be difficult to imagine. The price of the complete case is 12s. 6d.

Why I Belong to the Church of England. Being six sermons on the position and claims of the Church. By Rev. T. Howard Gill, M.A., vicar of Tonbridge. (2s. 6d. Elliot Stock.) These pages are addressed to the general reader. We could wish that all members of the Church of England were of Mr. Gill's mind, and understood the articles and formularies as he does. Though not severely controversial, the book contains statements which members of dissenting bodies may readily call in question.

Faith Healing. By Alfred T. Schofield, M.D. (1s. 6d. Religious Tract Society.) This book is an elaboration of a series of thoughtful papers which appeared in The Sunday at Home in 1889. The author, in summing up, thus declares his position. "While utterly repudiating the leading doctrines of faith-healers, we believe that God now, as ever, answers believing prayer, when and how He wills, but that, as far as we have been able to discern, He is usually pleased to work through purely natural means."

Mr. Alfred Holness has included the life of Wm. Carey in his series of memoirs of mighty men. (Paper covers, 1d.; cloth, 6d.)

The A.B.C. (London and Suburban) Church and Chapel Directory for 1892 is a useful manual of reference. (2d. Banks and Son.)

God's Proclamation is a useful Gospel booklet, by T. M. Carleton, of the Irish Evangelisation Society. (1d. Cootstown: J. Glasgow, Bookseller.)

Messrs. Partridge have published in an attractive booklet Rev. P. B. Power's charming Truffle and Nephews, with illustrations by Frank Barnard. (6d.)

The Housetop, a half-penny weekly paper "for homes and highways." It is in the hands of faithful men, to whom we wish a successful ministry. (Holness.)

The Bristol Christian Leader, a mid-monthly magazine for the Free Churches, is a model publication of its kind. (2d. W. F. Mack, 70, Park-street, Bristol.)

Messrs. Oliphant, Anderson, and Ferrier will issue shortly 'What and How to Preach,' lectures delivered in the U.P. College by Alexander Oliver, B.A., D.D., Author of "In Defence of the Faith."

The June issue of The Life of Faith will contain the first instalment of the account of Rev. Evan Hopkins' visit to the Holy Land. It will be beautifully illustrated with original sketches taken by himself.

She Spake of Him: A Sacred Song, by Jean McLean, has been set to music by W. J. Wood. It is in praise of the name of Jesus, and dedicated to Mrs. Griffith John. (4s. Weekes and Co., 14, Hanover-street, Regent-street, W.)

Recent issues from Drummond's Tract Depot, Stirling, are two series of Gospel Tracts, by Rev. P. B. Power. Six-penny packets contain 32 four-page and 16 eight-page tracts, all of them illustrated, and written in the author's well-known racy style.

As usual, The Pall Mall Gazette has issued a very attractive selection of the Royal Academy pictures of the year. An edition in colours has been sold out, and a second issue in black and white is now ready. It is a truly wonderful shillingsworth.

Hazell Huesdell; or, Finding Treasures. By Faith Chiltern. (Religious Tract Society. 1s. 6d.) A well-written story of a girl who lost her father, found him long after on a dying bed, and was the means of leading him to pardon and peace. It will thoroughly interest the girls.

Messrs. Horner's "penny stories" continue to maintain their now world-wide reputation. Surely they must be supplanting much of the cheap sensational trash that used to hold the field. The threepenny pocket editions are beautifully got up, and ought to be great favourites with railway travellers.

Mr. Henry Varley has written another booklet, directed against present-day negations. Entitled Death and Afterwards (Holness), it examines Scripture teaching regarding the punishment of sin, and is a firm statement of the orthodox position. We need not say it is outspoken throughout. May it lead many to prepare for the death of the righteous and the hereafter of the redeemed!

The London School Board has taken a forward step in relation to Temperance teaching, by adopting the recommendations of the Schools Management Committee: (1.) Rev. J. Watkins, at the recent Band of Hope Union meeting, referring to the horrible waste of infant life through the drink, illustrated his remarks by a pathetic story. Summoned one night to one of the slums of Manchester, to visit a dying baby, he found the poor withered little creature in a chair surrounded by four drunken women, all too helpless to hold it. They asked him to pray, and his prayer was this: "Father, take this little one home to thyself."

Evangelistic Notes.

Mr. William Sampson has held special services at Ilkeston, with tokens of much interest, several professing conversion.

Nottingham and Derby.—The evangelistic missions, conducted in connection with the Nottingham and Derby Wesleyan Home Mission, have been particularly fruitful this year.

Bracknell.—The Nonconformist bodies here have united together and formed a United Gospel Band, the object being to hold open-air evangelistic services on Sundays and Wednesdays.

Kingston.—In connection with the Kingston Y.M.C.A. and various places of worship, a United Cycle Mission Band has been formed for the purpose of prosecuting evangelistic work in the district.

Mr. Charles Inglis has concluded a fortnight's mission at Maryport. The afternoon Bible readings have been greatly blessed to the Lord's people, while the solemn searching addresses nightly to the unsaved have been owned by the Spirit of God in the salvation of souls.

Fraser-street Mission Hall, Chiswick.—The friends of this Mission have recently concluded an eight days' mission, under Pastor W. H. Broad and Mr. Burnham, with encouraging results. Souls have, it is confidently hoped, been saved, and the members been stimulated and blessed.

Belfast.—During the past week Mrs. Baeyertz, a Christian Jewess, conducted a Gospel mission in Donegall-square Methodist Church, Belfast, and in the hall of the Y.M.C.A. The meetings were very largely attended, and evidently profound impressions for good were produced on many minds by her interesting addresses.

Mr. Henry Thorne conducted a mission in Station-street Baptist Chapel, Burton-on-Trent, from May 7 to 16. The services were well attended. The Gospel was preached with freshness, earnestness, and power, and was the means of reclaiming backsliders, quickening believers, and bringing souls "out of darkness into marvellous light."

Bristol Y.M.C.A.—A fortnight's mission, conducted by Mr. George Clarke, has been held at the Bristol Y.M.C.A. Great blessing, both to Christians and the unsaved, has been experienced. The meetings were well attended, especially towards the close; those for workers being characterised by great fervour. H. T. W.

Railway Mission Hall, Hastings.—The opening of the Mission Hall was followed by an eight days' mission, conducted by Mr. W. R. Lane. The services were well attended throughout, and on two or three evenings the spacious hall was so packed that numbers could not obtain seats. It was a time of blessing to Christians, and of awakening to the indifferent, and much good has followed.

Spalding.—The "Out and Out" Gospel Car, conducted by Messrs. Belben and Ball has just finished a fortnight's mission. The power of God was very manifest. People came in crowds, especially on the Sunday nights, when many could not get in. The children's services were well attended, about forty boys and girls professing to come to Jesus. Many adults sought Christ, afterwards testifying publicly to grace received.

Luxembourg.—Mr. W. Nock, of Aldringham, near Leiston, Suffolk, who paid a visit to the Grand Duchy of Luxembourg, on the frontier of Belgium, some two years ago, writes to say that there are good opportunities there for distribution of tracts in French and German. All papers distributed, he says, must have printed on them address of author and publisher. Mr. Nock will be happy to give information to any intending visitors.

Newcastle-on-Tyne.—With the permission of the chaplain and the officer commanding the garrison, Mr. Charles Lazenby, of the Evangelisation Society, has held a month's mission—three weeks inside the barracks and one week at the Soldiers' Home. Hundreds of soldiers and their wives came to the services. Whole families have professed to be converted. Mr. C. Lazenby has won the affection of many during the mission.

Boston Fair.—An open-air Gospel campaign was sustained during the recent annual fair at Boston, Lincolnshire, Rev. A. G. Whaley, vicar of St. Andrew's, Wakefield; Mr. George Heath, London Open-Air Mission; and Mr. John Payne, Tolbooth Mission, Glasgow, were the speakers. A large band of workers were among the people, who gathered round in crowds each night to hear the Gospel, and many, it is believed, there and then decided for Jesus. On the Sunday night one of the large shows was lent, and the Gospel was preached from the stage front to an attentive crowd of about 2500 people.

Bromley Park, Kent.—From May 1 to 10 a general mission was conducted at Christ Church by Rev. S. C. Morgan, D.D., late vicar of Swansea and rural dean. Much preparation had been made. We are now able to praise Him for giving us very real blessings. Many clearly and definitely came to the Lord; believers were led to a deeper anxiety for the unsaved and the need of real consecration of themselves to the Lord. Very great blessing rested upon Mrs. Morgan's work amongst women every afternoon. Many will be glad to know that Dr. Morgan is now in England and free to take missions.

Rev. H. H. Pullen, pastor of Crouch-hill Baptist Church, last Sunday morning intimated his intention of withdrawing from the Baptist Union in consequence of recent events.

Mr. James Monro, C.B., late Chief Commissioner of the Metropolitan Police, now labouring in India, has been visiting Shikarpur, and sends the C.M.S. an encouraging view of its Associated Evangelists whom he saw there.

Mr. Finlay Gibson succeeds Mr. J. L. Stanley as Mr. Frank White's helper at the Talbot Tabernacle. The last report of Mr. White's health is, we are thankful to say, much more satisfactory. He is, however, unable as yet to resume his pastoral labours.

Archdeacon Scott (of Lichfield) devoted his charge, delivered last week, to "Old Testament Criticism." Closing, he said that the Old Testament was their Saviour's One Book. It was his spiritual food through life, it was the witness to Himself to which He appealed, and in which He bade them trust. The speaker pressed with all his power that they should be one with their Divine Lord and Teacher in the utter and absolute acceptance of the Old Testament Scriptures.

Evangelical Education in Italy.

In many Roman Catholic countries, perhaps the most difficult classes to bring under Protestant influence are the daughters of the upper classes. The success of the MacKean-Bentinck Institute in Naples, belonging to the Free Church of Scotland, is, therefore, all the more encouraging. I do not pretend from a brief visit to the place, to have gauged its efficiency, though everything I saw testified to first-class practical management, but rely on the many encomiums passed upon it by residents well able to judge. This institute is a high-class, well-equipped ladies' school, so named after the lady who founded it and bore the larger portion of the expense of its present fine building. There are at present over two hundred girls, of whom only one-quarter are Protestant. The first lesson of the day is from the Bible, and is most carefully treated, while large portions are committed to memory, and the day's work ends with family prayers. It is very gratifying to find the estimation in which the school stands, under the management of Miss Beck, both among the public and in official circles. The last report shows that a debt of £2380 remains to be cleared off, after which it should be perfectly independent, as it meets all ordinary expenses. Rev. T. J. Irvine, 2, Capella Vecchia, Naples, will give any further information which may be desired.

THE LORD'S DAY IN FRANCE.—The postal authorities have granted the wish of 105 towns in France to forego the distribution of letters in the afternoon on Sunday. This is a step towards the complete non-delivery of letters on the Lord's Day which prevails in so many towns of Great Britain.

MRS. HILTON'S CRECHE.—On Monday, Mrs. W. S. Caine opened a three-days' bazaar at the Limehouse Town-hall on behalf of Mrs. Hilton's institutions. Captain Sheffield presided, and it was stated that, owing to the decease of many generous subscribers during the last winter, some special effort was necessary to make up the deficiency.

ROCHESTER Y.M.C.A.—On Monday week the annual meetings of this Association were held. Mr. G. W. Rankin read a report showing vigorous and successful work among "the ten thousand young men of Rochester, Chatham, Strood, and Gillingham." The Archdeacon of Rochester, Mr. George Williams, the Mayor of Rochester, Alderman Belsey, Mr. W. Hind Smith, and others, warmly supported the work, showing what is being done, and urging strongly the exceptional opportunities existing in such united towns.

Notes and Comments.

NEXT week we purpose giving portrait and sketch of Mr. A. H. Baynes, Secretary of the Baptist Missionary Society.

We would again appeal to our generous-hearted readers for contributions to our "Day in the Country" fund. Applications for help are streaming in from London workers among the poor, but as yet we have scarcely any funds in hand. The beautiful weather we are now enjoying accentuates our appeal.

The remedy for the mischief which Satan finds for idle hands to do is work for God. Those who are least tormented by current criticism are those like Nehemiah, who replies to Sanballat, "I am doing a great work, so that I cannot come down. Why should the work cease whilst I leave it and come down to you?" "And they sent unto me four times after this sort; and I answered them after the same manner."

The reported feuds and bloodshed at Uganda, between the Romanists and the Protestants, would be very deplorable if true. But all the news as yet has come from Roman Catholic sources, and there is evident bias in the accounts. Before crediting them we must await confirmation. Dr. Warneck, the German missionary inspector, who has studied the growth of Uganda mission-work, asserts that the French Catholic fathers, and not the English missionaries, have been preaching a gospel of hatred for some time past.

In view of the near election, the Peace Society have issued an address to the British electorate, calling attention to the serious peril to international peace arising from the "bloated armaments" of European nations, and urging the adoption of international arbitration as the only rational and Christian resort in cases of difference. Voters are counselled to press this matter on the attention of candidates, and to return those who favour a pacific policy.

Liverpool will shortly have a permanent Board of Conciliation for the settlement of disputes between employers and employed. For some time back there has been in the city a temporary Board of Arbitration, and sufficient experience has been gained to show the desirability of putting the movement upon a solid and authoritative foundation. This step, it is to be hoped, will lead to the preventing of strikes and the misery consequent upon them, and to the bringing about of less strained relations between masters and men. For some years public opinion has been growing in favour of a Government Department with powers of arbitration in trade disputes; but perhaps it is better that such Boards should be of a local character, with adequate knowledge and local interests.

In The Christian World of last week Rev. C. F. Aked wrote a letter, in which he indignantly repelled Rev. W. Cuff's charge of having made exaggerated statements at the Baptist Union meeting with respect to the fact that Mr. Armstrong had taken in the Purity crusade in Liverpool. He re-asserted his former statements, cited a letter by the editor of The Daily Post, in which the credit of closing many immoral resorts in the city is largely given to Mr. Armstrong, and demanded an apology from Mr. Cuff.

If it were conclusively shown that Mr. Cuff had brought his charge on insufficient data, of course his clear duty would be to tender the required apology. But at present we are unable to see that he has done so. Mr. J. Barnabas Bain, of the Liverpool City Mission, in a letter before us, circumstantially asserts that the question of suppressing immoral houses in Liverpool had been repeatedly before the magistrates, and discussed by them with a view to decided action, some eighteen months before Mr. Armstrong intervened. The original and effective mover in the agitation, says Mr. Bain, was Mr. Thomas Matheson, and not Mr. Armstrong. It is to be hoped that Mr. Armstrong will settle this painful controversy by informing the public what are the real facts of the case.

We are sorry to observe that The Presbyterian, of Philadelphia, has reproduced and commented on certain groundless allegations made in some of the Scotch papers respecting Mr. Moody's attitude towards ministerial college training. It is altogether incorrect to say, as our American contemporary does, that Mr. Moody "lent the weight of his influence to the disparagement of the efficiency of the methods now in vogue to train ministers for the work of the pulpit." What he did was simply to point out that there are scope and need for the auxiliary work of men and women less highly trained. The Presbyterian has been badly served by its correspondent.

The same article contains severe, but quite uncalled-for, reflections on some casual and humorous remarks by Rev. John McNeill. We do not for a moment believe that the writer is well informed when he says that on account of these jesting utterances, Mr. McNeill is "alienating from his work the sympathy and support of his brethren in the ministry." His brethren, in Scotland at least, make all due allowance for his peculiarities of speech, and the reception he had in the Free Assembly last week shows that "sympathy and support" are by no means lacking.

Two movements are referred to in our columns to-day which deserve, and which will assuredly obtain, increasing attention from earnest Christian men and women — the Pleasant Sunday Afternoon, and the Young People's Society of Christian Endeavour.

The practical usefulness of any movement depends, not upon the name by which it is known, but upon the men by whom it is worked. There are institutions which pass by the name of churches which are mischievous or contemptible burlesques of "the Church which is his body, the fulness of Him that filleth all in all."

A man may cry; "Church, Church," at every word,
With no more piety than other people;
A daw's not reckoned a religious bird,
Because he keeps a-cawing from a steeple.

This is equally true of the Y.M.C.A., the P.S.A., the Y.P.S.C.E., and every other organisation upon earth. It is of the greatest consequence, therefore, that their large possibilities for good should be utilised by those whose lives are devoted to the will and service of God.

Mr. Blackham, the originator of the P.S.A., is first and chiefly a believer in prayer. The organisation is a direct outcome of Mr. Moody's work. Mr. Blackham was crowded out of one of the great meetings of three thousand people, and went to a Bible-class of thirty. Why could not other men draw thousands as well as tens? The P.S.A. was God's answer to that question.

Mr. Blackham was asked to inaugurate a P.S.A. in a manufacturing town in the Midlands. When he got up to speak he told his audience they were not ready. He could see by their faces that they had not prayed about it. If they would hold two prayer-meetings a day for a month, and invite him again, he would come. The following is an invitation to prayer issued in Birmingham for three weeks or a month:—

My dear Friend,—I invite you to meet me in the Deacons' Vestry each day during the coming week, for SPECIAL PRAYER, from 1.15 until 1.45 p.m., and from 8.30 until 9 p.m.—Yours sincerely,
J. NICHOLAS KNIGHT, Minister.

Such a prayer-meeting is now being held at Leamington. Out of such a call to prayer has grown the P.S.A. at Liverpool, of which, as a spiritual power in that town, the paper of Mr. Nuttall (p. 16) gives evidence. Our readers are familiar with the excellent work of the P.S.A. at Nottingham, under the wise guidance of Mr. Mellors and others. Kept on its original lines it will be a blessing everywhere. Let spiritual men put their hand to it—not hold aloof and then denounce it because it is taken up and worked solely or chiefly on mere humanitarian lines.

The Second Convention in England of the Christian Endeavour Society, held last week at Chester, was a definite and enthusiastic success. Evidently this importation of American spiritual ingenuity, this institution sent from God, has come to stay. At first our conservative instincts led us to shrink from this and the P.S.A. as only two more of the multiplying unions for doing various parts of the Church's proper work. But truly this is the Church's work, and the P.S.A. and the Y.P.S.C.E. have proved that they are right ways of doing it. Mr. Blackham, whom we met at Chester, gave at the same time testimony to the Y.P.S.C.E. and evidence of his own generous spirit, when he told us that he felt so deeply the importance of winning the young for Christ, and of setting them to work, that he preferred the Christian Endeavour Society before his own.

While God is awakening his people to missionary enterprise, He is preparing a generation to enter into the doors which He has opened to every nation upon earth. This Young People's Society of Christian Endeavour is winning the affection and eliciting the activity of the most earnest and spiritual pastors and people in the churches. It has taken firmer hold of the more stalwart north, but it is spreading southwards also. Its very essence is the pledge or covenant, which is, indeed, nothing else than giving voice to the acknowledgment implied in all Christian profession, that, being bought with a price, we are not our own, and that we yield our members instruments of righteousness unto God.

Dr. Parker treats the Book of Daniel very slightly from a prophetic point of view, but he makes one remark which undesignedly explains the decline of the metals in Nebuchadnezzar's dream from gold to clay. Speaking of the answer of the three youths to the King, Dr. Parker says: "Never was a king talked to before in that tone. This was, so to say, the beginning of the democracy in that time and place." The abuse of the royal prerogative leads surely to its ultimate supersession by democracy. But the formula, now so popular, "Government by the people for the people," shows that we have reached the brittle feet of the image, and that we are in the last days of the Times of the Gentiles. Thank God, not Democracy, the Power of the People, but the Despotism of Love, is the eternal form of government:—

His love is as great as his power,
And neither knows measure nor end.

In the opening of his "Evangelistic Address" on Ezek. xxxiii. 11, Dr. Parker says: "We ought now and then to have from every pulpit an address that is distinctly evangelistic. By an evangelistic address, I mean one that is specifically designed to show men the way of salvation, and to induce them to enter it and prosecute it to the end." After the Revival of 1859 it used to be insisted that every sermon ought to contain such instruction and exhortation; and this, surely, is the true view, considering that, with few exceptions, the great majority in every congregation are confessedly unsaved. It must be very confusing to such, to be, according to usual custom, addressed as saints in the morning and as sinners at night.

Sins of Passion.

Last week witnessed the remarkable phenomenon of a series of strong protests signed by eminent names, and appearing in the Parisian papers. They have been caused by the revelations made in certain recent and notorious cases, which have disclosed dark and terrible phases of adultery and shameless vice, leading on to brutal violence and murder.

It would seem as if a great tragedy were being enacted in that gay and Godless nation, to show to the world of men the inevitable result of refusing the Gospel of Christ. Every attempt was made at the time of the Reformation to introduce the Gospel into France, but success was rendered impossible by the coalition of Church and Court, under the tutelage of Rome. And France has never recovered from the effect of the Revocation of the Edict of Nantes. The great Revolution was the logical outcome of forces which had been at work for previous centuries. And now France has entered on a course which is the harvest of her sowings. It is the old story of the Epistle to the Romans; they did not wish to retain God in their knowledge, wherefore God gave them up to unclean lusts.

True religion involves the purity of the home, the obligation of the marriage-tie, the fit relations between man and woman, the wholesomeness and proprieties of well-ordered society. Loose the bonds of man with God, you dissolve those that bind men to one another. The denial of God inflicts a deadly blow not only on the home, but also on the State, in whose arch the home-life is the keystone. Nor are we disposed to wonder at the immense increase of divorces and of crimes connected with married life, when we learn that marriage is viewed as a civil contract, to be ratified by the civil functionary, apart altogether from a religious ceremony.

Something more, therefore, is required than protests, however forcible. The root of the matter should be dealt with, and the causes of the present outbreak of immorality ascertained. Surely they are not far to seek. As long as the theatres are permitted to perform plays which violate all the rules of good feeling and good taste; as long as novelists, like Zola, are permitted to pour out their obscenities through the public press; as long as newspapers gloat over and publish abroad every small detail of disgraceful crime; as long as art is prostituted to portray the figures of courtezans and nude models—no protests will be effectual to stay the tide which is setting in so strongly towards sins of passion.

And we need to look at home. The way in which our daily press has made capital out of the horrid crimes of Deeming shows how vast is the constituency for which it caters when it provides such garbage. And how can the effect on our thirty-six millions of people be other than disastrous?

The shameless exhibitions of nudity in our picture-galleries; the tone of many of the music-hall songs, which are greedily caught up and repeated by the teeming multitudes; the immense sales and circulation of impure literature; the effect of fulness of bread and abundance of idleness, which exist in our days amid so much straitness and need; the scandals in high life and their publication to the world — all these influences, busily at work around us, are hurrying us on to a like catastrophe.

It becomes earnest men to bestir themselves and stand together, if not for themselves, yet for their children, their country, or their race. All the great races of the past have fallen thus. The dry-rot has first commenced in the home, consequent on the refusal to recognise the Supreme. And when it has once begun, it has led to the ultimate sweeping away of empires, as by a besom of destruction. Let us be as salt to the putrefying carcase, and as lights in the dark world.

A Notable Centenary.

This is a great week for the Baptist Denomination. In three Midland towns, meetings are being held to celebrate the centenary of the Baptist Missionary Society. To that body, by no means the most numerous or wealthiest of the Nonconformist Churches, belongs the imperishable glory of having been the first to initiate the enterprise of modern missions.

A volume has lately been issued, which tells the story of this remarkable movement in a most interesting and picturesque manner. It is entitled, "The Centenary Volume of the Baptist Missionary Society," and is ably edited by one of the secretaries, Rev. J. B. Meyers. Among its contributors are some of the most eminent men in the denomination; and a perusal of its pages indicates at once the fitness in the selection of time and place for the meetings to which we have alluded.

On May 30, 1792, the Northamptonshire Association of Baptist Churches, including representatives of some twenty-four in all, met at Nottingham. The proceedings commenced with an early prayer-meeting at six o'clock, and at ten a public meeting was held, of which the following minute is on record:—"Brother Morris of Clipstone prayed; Brother Sutcliff introduced the work of the day and prayed; Brother Carey preached from Isa. liv. 2, 3. Brother West of Carlton concluded in prayer." That discourse is described as having pressed two things in particular—(1) Expect great things from God; (2) Attempt great things for God. Mr. John Ryland said of it—"If all the people had lifted up their voices and wept, as the children of Israel did at Bochim, I should not have wondered at the effect; it would only have seemed proportionate to the cause, so clearly did he prove our supineness to the cause of God."

This was not a sudden outburst on Carey's part. Love for the heathen had been long simmering in his heart, as he wrought in his shoemaker's shed. It had been kindled there in connection with an appeal, which had come into the hands of John Sutcliff, pastor of the church at Olney, from the pen of Jonathan Edwards, urging Christians to unite "in extraordinary prayer for the revival of religion." In 1789 Carey published his famous "Inquiry into the Obligations of Christians to use Means for the Conversion of the Heathen."

So it was no new thing for him to preach his soul-stirring sermon, and afterwards, when the Association seemed likely to break up without coming to any definite resolution on the theme which possessed him, to seize Andrew Fuller by the arm, saying, "And are you, after all, going again to do nothing?" The result of his exertions was contained in the last resolution passed on that memorable day—"Resolved, that a plan be prepared against the next ministers' meeting at Kettering for forming a Baptist Society for Propagating the Gospel among the Heathen. Brother Carey generously engaged to devote all the profits that may arise from his late publication on this interesting subject to the use of such society. The moderator (Brother Ryland, jun.) closed the Association with prayer."

Kettering played an even more important part in this great series of events. In the book to which we have referred there is an engraving which represents the house there, "plain but substantial," in which the present Society was really formed. A dozen men met in its back parlour, amongst them being Ryland, Sutcliff, Andrew Fuller, Samuel Pearce, and William Carey. A constitution was framed, a treasurer appointed, and £13 2s. 6d. contributed. And thus, like all the greatest works, without blast of trumpet or puff of advertisement, softly as the break of day, or the advent of summer, the mighty army of God's elect set forth to encompass the Jericho of Heathenism, the walls of which even now give signs of decrepitude, and shall ere long, be totally overthrown before their believing and persevering attack.

Leicester, which will also be visited by the Baptists during the present week, is memorable because Carey was pastor of the old meeting-house in Harvey-lane, which, later, was the scene of the brilliant ministry of the most eloquent preacher of the century, Rev. Robert Hall. The chapel still exists, and will be doubtless visited by hundreds, as the source where that nob'e river which has watered so many lands, had its rise.

When the church heard of their pastor's determination to go out to propagate the Gospel among those "idolatrous and superstitious heathens," they were greatly affected by the prospect of losing him. And the following sentence occurs in the minute entered on the church-book: "This is inserted to show his love to his poor, miserable fellow-creatures; in this we concurred with him, though it is at the expense of losing one whom we love as our own souls!"

There, also, the first designation service was held on March 23, 1793. "The forenoon was devoted to prayer. In the afternoon Brother Thomas preached from Ps. xvi. 4, and a public collection was made for the Mission. In the evening Brother Hogg delivered a suitable discourse on the solemn occasion from Acts xxi. 14, and after him Brother Fuller addressed the Missionaries from John xx. 21."

The first Hindu convert, Khrishna Clumch-a-Pal, was not baptized until 1800, but in 1884, fifty years after Carey's death, the native Protestant community in India numbered half-a-million, and every decade of years since has witnessed (so Dr. Pierson tells us) an increase at the rate of 86 per cent.

China, the Cameroons, for ever identified with the name of Rev. A. Saker; the Congo, with its martyr band; the West Indies, where now the churches are entirely self-supporting; the Orissa Mission—to say nothing of the work in Europe—are bright jewels in the crown laid, as the result of one hundred years' devoted toil, at the feet of the Son of God.

We congratulate the Baptists on their record, and hope that their present effort may not only give them the £100,000 for which they plead, but kindle an enthusiasm which shall never be allowed to subside; but shall be continually productive in gifts of men and means.

BIBLE STUDY.

Bible reading is the best and surest antidote and preservative against scepticism about the Bible, if it is carried on at once thoroughly, intelligently, and as before the Lord. Vain without it—worse than vain—will be the most diligent and successful study of the apologetics of the Bible. For the Bible was given to be, not a battle-field, but a field of wheat and pasturage and flowers, and a goldfield also all the while.—Rev. H. C. G. Moule.

CONFIDENCE IN GOD.

Being perplexed, I say,
Lord, make it night;
Night is as day to Thee,
Darkness is light.
I am afraid to touch
Things that involve so much;
My trembling hand may shake,
My skill-less hand may break,
Thine can make no mistake.

The Prison at Philippi.

A WHITSUNTIDE HOMILY.

Our bless'd Redeemer, ere he breathed
His tender, last farewell,
A Guide, a Comforter bequeathed,
With us to dwell.

All things great and enduring need solidity and strength of foundation; and geology reveals to us the mighty forces of heat, and fusion, and pressure that were used in the sub-structure of this earth of ours. Had those great granite ribs of the globe been sentient, we are sure that they would equally have disliked and wondered at the severity of the process. Human nature, however, is sentient, and when the Creator of all things began the construction of the Christian Church, He was thus met by what, to any lower intelligence, would have proved a tremendous problem. "The foundation of the Apostles" and of the early disciples could not be laid without a fierce heat of persecution that would test and consolidate every individual atom into a substratum of immutable strength. No doubtful basis or material could be tolerated here. This building of God was to be amongst "the things which cannot be shaken," but shall "remain" eternally. Would the moral strength of this human "foundation" bear the physical strain?

But the love of the Father and the priestly compassion and covenant of the Son devised an "expedient," and solved the difficulty. "The Comforter, which is the Holy Ghost," was to be sent to the suffering Church, and in the power of his Divine presence the miraculous type of the bush in the desert would have its glorious fulfilment—burning, but not consumed. The Book of Acts shows us this. It is full of "bonds and imprisonment" and martyrdom, but nowhere do we meet with such a glorious record of moral triumph over physical disability. The burning words of Peter's Pentecostal sermon to a scoffing multitude; the calm beauty of Stephen's defence in presence of a murderous crowd; his imitation of Christ in Divine forgiveness of human cruelty—which probably brought the first ray of evangelical light to Saul of Tarsus; and the magnificent career of that illustrious convert to the faith, are all pictured here, and in all are equally seen "the power of the Holy Ghost."

But amongst all the narratives of this wonderful book, perhaps none appeal more forcibly to the interest of the general reader than its prison scenes, three of which are given with such artistic fidelity and vividness in chapters v., xii., xvi. It is of the last of these that we would write to-day. As at Easter we looked into an Asiatic prison, so to-day we would visit a European one, finding alike in each, human cruelty and impotence met by Divine love and resource.

Paul and Silas had been but a few days in Europe, and their coming thither was under the direct guidance of "the Spirit," who is represented in this narrative as exercising definite personal attributes. Objects of fascinating interest must have surrounded a man of Paul's culture, as he came on ground so classic, and occupying the very centre of the world's civilisation. But his soul was permeated by one purpose; to exalt his Master and to "show the way of his salvation;" and in the little open-air prayer-meeting by the riverside he had the great joy of enrolling the first known disciple on the European continent—a typical woman, devout, industrious, gifted, teachable, hospitable—the first, thank God! of a noble army of confessors, who have consecrated all womanly sweetness and influence to the service of Him who has so emancipated and ennobled their sex.

Lydia's conversion and kind entertainment must have been a bright spot in the Philippian ministry; and then, through another woman, possessed by a far different spirit, sharp trial came. Satan is a proficient in the art of simulation; when Christ was incarnate he possessed the bodies of men, only to outwit himself by showing more palpably the bitter fruits of his indwelling. Now that the dispensation of the Spirit had begun, and men were speaking "as He gave them utterance," Satan had commenced a spurious imitation of Divine speech, and under his influence this girl had caused astonishment to the people, and brought great gain to her master by oracular and pythonic communications.

It must have startled the populace to see how quickly the false was ejected by the true at Paul's words; but the god Mammon was not cast out, and fiercely his worshippers resented this failure of their gains. Justice was, indeed, blind in those days, and with scarcely a pretence of trial the two men were unmercifully beaten and committed by savage functionaries to an equally savage gaoler, with no charge concerning the sufferers but that of safe keeping. The man did his worst to secure it. Cruel! cruel! How can human nature fall so low? He might have spared the torture of "the stocks," and the foulness of "the inner prison," to men maimed and bleeding, and in whose whole demeanour even his brutal nature must have recognised the stamp of purity and innocence.

But, though no earthly mercy was shown to these sufferers for Christ's sake, a third went with them into that grim dungeon; even "the Comforter which is the Holy Ghost," and so wonderfully did He fill their souls with his joy, that a burst of praise from those tortured ones broke on the midnight air; and the other prisoners, who were familiar with such different sounds, heard it, and even to their embruted natures the conviction must surely have come, "The Lord is in this place!"

Other tokens of his presence quickly followed: a physical earthquake that performed more noisily and roughly the same kind office for Paul and Silas that "the angel of the Lord" had done for Peter; and then a more wonderful moral earthquake, that snapped the bond of sin on the fettered heart of the gaoler, and gave him the liberty wherewith Christ makes his people free. A marvellous transformation indeed! The callous savagery of the previous evening changed into the tenderness and skill of a nursing sister and the hospitality of a Lydia; and this only an outward sign of the inward and spiritual grace he had received through heartfelt belief in the Lord Jesus Christ, who had been doubly preached to him through the illumined lives of his servants, and by the clear simplicity of their teaching.

This is only the second record we possess of the administration of the rite of Christian baptism in Europe, and in both cases the whole believing household was included. No marble font or imposing ceremonial in either instance, but in both the Holy Spirit's attesting seal of a renewed nature; and as we read the pastoral letter, written eleven years afterwards to the then flourishing church at Philippi, we like to think of the gaoler (we wish we knew his name!) amongst its "bishops and deacons," and his wife and children foremost in that goodly fellowship, concerning whom St. Paul "gave thanks on every remembrance."

This wonder-working Spirit is in our midst to-day; but before He can mightily work through us, He must be more believingly received in us as the Comforter. Is not our testimony for Christ too often powerless because there is so little irradiation of the character and the countenance by this Divine indwelling? The early disciples walked in the comfort of the Holy Ghost. There is no evidence of Christianity to compare with it. To see an afflicted saint bearing a heavy cross, not merely with patience but with joy, tells. "I thought you said your Christianity would give comfort!" was the keen taunt levied against one who was well-nigh fainting in the day of adversity. It did better service than the tenderest sympathy, for it reminded her of the promised Comforter, and she did not seek his help in vain. And let us not make so much ado when the chastening comes. God values granite in the foundation of each individual character as well as in the foundation periods of his church, and it can only be produced by fire; and though the flames of physical martyrdom are extinguished by Christian government, it is no less true to-day than in the days of Paul, that "they who will live godly in Christ Jesus shall suffer persecution." The estrangement and charge of "narrowness" and social ostracism that are provoked by real consistency are not easily borne; and the danger is of letting the suffering work in us a sour moroseness that will do infinite harm to all who know us. Oh, let us this Whitsuntide, with a mighty appropriating faith, claim the Comforter; and if we will but yield ourselves entirely to his indwelling presence, He will give us "songs in the night," and poor prisoners of Satan will hear them, and the Philippian miracle will have a glorious repetition in this nineteenth century.

OUR PRIEST-RIDDEN VILLAGES.

In our wanderings through rural England nothing seems so startling as the contrast between villages where the Gospel has been faithfully preached in church or meeting-house by earnest, godly men, and those in bondage to priestcraft.

One morning, about a month ago, when on a short walking tour, we spent some hours in one of the latter type. More than sixteen years have passed since our first impression was that it was a very godless place.

At varying intervals we have visited it ever since, and at one time a friend had open-air meetings for some weeks on the Lord's day; but when the people began to make him a cup of tea the powers that be told them they would turn them out of house and home.

At two or three houses that morning darkness reigned, but otherwise the hearty sympathy with the truth was very marked, the fact of my being one of the "white pony party" being all the introduction needed, and nearly all knew that.

Men grubbing an old hedge lingered a little to hear of the Lord Jesus, and busy wives listened as I called at their doors to hear the "Come" of Jesus; occasionally with tears responding, "Yes, Lord." "Just as I am, without one plea." Being welcomed into one house, they told me our visits and books had been greatly blessed in the village. An old man had died. They had visited him, and the anxious soul had found peace. Greeting the husband in the next house with, "Jesus the Saviour, my Saviour," he testified, "He is mine." The wife, pointing to a side table, said, "There is father's Bible." This recalled a visit some years ago to the father in question, when we pointed out a glorious invitation of the Lord's in the old brown-boarded book. He was led to accept it, and became an earnest student of God's Word.

About two years ago, when in the village, the daughter told us of his peacefully going home a few months before, and showed us his Bible marked at so many precious promises by the old man. Turning over the leaves we called her attention to one marked, a gracious invitation from the Lord. The seed was sown in good ground, and now I find both husband and wife brought to the Lord by the same old book.

"I am simply trusting Jesus," was the greeting of one wife busy in the garden. Nearly an hour behind time, I joined in the next village two friends for refreshment, and to their inquiries I said: "It seems the parson has their liberties, but in many cases the Lord has their hearts."

The young people, if converted, usually flee from the persecution, but if the old people move, it often means the workhouse. In a similar village the clergyman stopped a cottage meeting, the old lady, a descendant of a noble family, who was dependent on his recommendation for a small pension, being threatened with total stoppage of it if she had it in her house again. She told him she couldn't go to the workhouse, but if he stopped her meeting her heart would be there still. Cannot many this coming summer find out the needy villages, and in the midst of the houses raise the glad sound, so that those who dare not come out may hear the Gospel?

Moses, the Man of God.

HIS DEATH ON PISGAH.

Deut. xxxiv. 5, 6.

The Bible is the Book of Life. Its pages teem with biography; they contain but scant memorials of death. The only death they describe at length is that of Him who in dying slew death. The very minuteness of the description there shows how unique and all-important it was. Men make more of death than of life as a gauge of character. A few pious sentences spoken then will go far to efface the memory of years of inconsistency God makes most of life.

The records of Scripture find little room for dying testimonies, words, or experiences, whilst they abound in stories of the exploits and words of those who have stormed and suffered and wrought in life's arena. This may explain why, contrary to human custom and expectation, the death of the great Lawgiver is described with such brief simplicity. Mrs. Alexander elaborates the story through ten eight-lined stanzas of stately verse; the Bible chronicler dismisses it in two brief texts.

But this simplicity is only equalled by the sublimity of the conception. After such a life it was meet that Moses should have a death and burial unparalleled in the story of mankind, and we do not wonder that poet, painter, and preacher, have found in that lonely death on Pisgah's summit a theme worthy of their noblest powers. We can but cull a few wild flowers as they caress that mountain brow; more we must leave to others.

Moses' death casts a light on sin and death and dispensational truth.

I. Its Bearing on Sin.—We cannot suppose that the sudden outburst of impetuous temper at Meribah, when his spirit was agitated by a fierce whirlwind of wrath, as a storm sweeping down some mountain rent on an inland lake, could remain long unforgiven. As far as the east was from the west, so far had that transgression been removed. But though the remission was complete, yet the result lingered in his life, and shut him out from an experience which should have been the crown of his career.

"The Lord hath put away thy sin," said Nathan to the royal transgressor, but "thy child shall die, and the sword shall not depart out of thy house." The dying thief was pardoned, but he suffered in his body the extreme penalty of his sin. The mistrust which hinders a man from accepting all the benefits of Christ's Ascension is put away, but nothing can compensate him for his loss. Never a word may be spoken about the evil courses that have wrecked the health and fortunes of the Prodigal; but though he sits at his father's board, he can never be in health or vigour or overflowing joy, as he might have been if he had never wandered forth. The remission of sin removes its penal consequences, and if natural ones remain they are transmuted into blessings by the grace of God, which resembles the philosopher's stone in turning common things to gold.

Nor does sin only entail loss and sorrow on the transgressor; it robs mankind of much of the benefit which otherwise had accrued from his life. If it had not been for his want of faith and his passionate behaviour, Moses had led his people across the Jordan, and served them for many an after year. There was no reason why he should have die when he did, or the people been robbed of his consummate wisdom and strength at a time when they needed them most. No evidence of decay had shown itself in his speech, which had just rolled forth in almost unrivalled poetry. No weakness enfeebled his step or dimmed his eye. So far as his natural forces were concerned, he could say of them almost as truly as Caleb did, "I am as strong this day as I was when only forty years had passed over my head."

Let not the ease of pardon ever tempt thee to think lightly of sin, or to imagine that it leaves no traces on soul or life, because it is secure, through penitence and faith, of God's forgiving mercy. One act of mistrustful anger laid Moses, the friend and servant of God, in a desert grave on the frontiers of the Land; what may it not do for thee?

II. Its Bearing on Death.—Its Loneliness. That majestic spirit had ever lifted itself, like some unscaled peak, amid other men. Into its secrets no foot had intruded, no human eye had peered. Alone it wrought and suffered, and met God, and legislated for the people. But its loneliness was never more apparent than when, unattended even by Joshua, he passed up to die amid the solitudes of Nebo. Alone he trod the craggy steep; alone he gazed on the fair landscape; alone he laid down to die.

But in that loneliness there is a foreshadowing of the loneliness through which each of us must pass unless caught up to meet the Lord in the air. In that solemn hour human voices will fade away, beloved forms retire, familiar scenes dim to the sight. Silent and lonely the spirit migrates to learn for itself the great secret. Happy the man who, anticipating the moment, can say: "Alone, yet not alone, my Saviour is with me. He who went this way by Himself is now retreading it at my side."

Each of us is born alone, suffers alone, meets the Angel of the Covenant alone, dies alone, and alone gives in his account to God.

Its Method. We die, as Moses did, by the word of the Lord. It is said in the Hebrew legend that one angel after another sought to take his life in vain. First, there came the one who had been his special instructor, but his courage failed him when he essayed to destroy the fabric on which he had spent so much pains. Then the angel of death was summoned to undertake the task. He eagerly approached him, but when he saw the wondrous lustre of his face shining like the sun, and heard him recite the prodigies of his career, he, too, shrank back abashed.

And when these great angels had given up the work as surpassing their loftiest powers, Moses turned to the Almighty (so the legend runs) and said, "Thou, Lord of the Universe, who wast revealed unto me in the burning bush, remember that thou didst carry me up into thy heaven, where I abode forty days and forty nights; have mercy upon me, and hand me not over into the power of the angel of death."

This, of course, is the picturesque form in which the love and reverence of after generations elaborated these wonderful words, which tell us that Moses died by the word of the Lord. Some still further substituted "kiss" for "word," so that it seemed as if the Almighty had kissed away the soul of his faithful servant, drawing it back to himself in a long, sweet, tender embrace.

Is not this the manner in which all saints die? Their deaths are precious to the Lord, and after the troubled day of life, agitated in its early morning by the trumpet calling to battle; fretted through an overcast noon by the pressure of its responsibilities and cares; lit in the evening by the rays of a stormy sunset, piercing through the cloud drift, the tired spirit sinks down upon the couch, which the hands of God had spread, and He bends over to give it its good-night kiss, as in earliest days the mother had done to the wearied child. That embrace, however, is the threshold, not of a long night of insensibility, but of an awakening in the supernal light of the everlasting morning.

Its Sepulchre. We are told that the Lord buried him in a valley in the land of Moab, in spite of the opposition of the evil one, who contended with the archangel sent to secure that noble deserted shrine. What had the archfiend to do with it? Did he desire to make it vie with the temple of the living God, filching honours which the people would be only too glad to give? We know not; but his purpose was ignominiously frustrated. God cared for the dead body of his child. Not even the king of terrors could make it distasteful to the Father's love. Though in ruins the temple was precious. And so even a band of angels was not permitted to perform the sacred work of interment. We are told that He buried him; as if the Almighty would not delegate the sacred office to any inferior hand. And is it not attributable to the love of God that through the love of friendly hearts the last rites are rendered to the bodies which Christ has purchased?

As we trust God to supply the needs of the body in life, so let us trust Him for its burial in death. He marks where the dust of each of his children mingles with its mother earth. When a grave is opened, his eye rests on it; and though no foot may ever tread its soil, no hand keep it decked with flowers, He never forgets it, and none will be overlooked when the archangel blows his trumpet over land and sea.

It is not necessary, as a recent and most misleading picture would suggest, to believe that the very atoms of dust which composed the bodies of the saints shall be gathered together into the resurrection body. This would involve us in endless impossibilities, because the dust-atoms pass through countless living organisms in their perpetual revolution. Besides, the resurrection body is not natural but spiritual. We must rather, says the Apostle, conceive of the resurrection body as sustaining the same relation to the present one, that the heavy head of corn does to the wheat-ear cast into the ground. Different, yet identical. And is it not strictly according to that analogy to hold that amid the dissolution of this body there is preserved a living germ, which only waits the touch of kindly influences to rise into all the glory of the likeness of the resurrection body of our Lord?

Its Purpose. We are told that the children of Israel wept for Moses thirty days, and if we connect that statement with the fact of the unknown grave, we shall be able to discern the Divine purpose in its concealment. We often underrate the living, and have to wait until they are removed from us to estimate them truly. Our Laureate expressed this thought when, addressing his departed friend, Arthur Hallam, he said—

> So, dearest, now thy brows are cold,
> I see thee as thou art, and know
> Thy likeness to the wise below,
> Thy kindred to the great of old.

Few men have had greater claims on their fellows than Moses. He had sacrificed his high position in Pharaoh's court to bear his people as a nurse through the ailments of their childhood. He had enjoyed unparalleled opportunities of fellowship with God. He had wielded uncommon power: at the bidding of his faith winds had brought meat, rocks had gushed with water springs, the sea had parted and met, the desert-floor had been strewn with food. Is it not more than likely that, if the Lord had not concealed his grave, the valley of Bethpeor would have become a second Mecca, trodden by the feet of pilgrims from all the world? It was best to make such idolatry impossible. The hidden grave forced the people to turn from earth to heaven.

Is not this God's policy with us? When Lazarus is dead, the sisters send for Jesus. When the gourd is blasted, the pilgrim in the weary land turns to the shadow of the great Rock. When no place is found for the sole of her foot, the dove makes for the window of the ark. When the supply fails from the rock-cisterns, we are driven to the stream which flows from the throne of God. This is why your home is desolate, and your heart bereaved. It is for this that he who was to you what Moses was to the people has been removed.

For e'en the cloud
That spreads above, and veiled love,
Itself is love.

Its Vision. From the spot on which he stood, without any extraordinary gift of vision, his eye could range over an almost unequalled panorama. At his feet, the far-away tents of Israel; to the North, the rich pasture-lands of Gilead and Bashan, bounded by the desert haze on the one hand, and on the other by the Jordan valley, from the blue waters of the Lake of Galilee to the dark gorge of the Dead Sea. And beyond the river he could sweep over the fair Land of Promise, from the snow-capped summits of Hermon and Lebanon to the uplands of Ephraim and Manasseh, with the infinite variety of cities perched on their pinnacles of rock, of cornfields and pasture lands, of oil, olives, figs, vines, and pomegranates. Immediately before him, looking West, was Jericho, in its green setting of palm-trees, connected by the steep defile with Jerusalem, not far from which Bethlehem, on the ridge of the hills, gleamed as a jewel.

So to dying men still comes the vision of the goodly land beyond the Jordan. It is not far away, only just across the river. On fair days of vision, when some strong wind parts the veils of mist and smoke that too often dominate our spiritual atmosphere, it is clearly visible. But the vision is most often reserved for those who are waiting on the confines of the land ready for the signal to enter. They tell us that on that borderland they hear voices, and discern visions of beauty and splendour, of which heart had not conceived. Dr. Payson said, shortly before he died, "When I read Bunyan's description of the Land of Beulah, I doubted if there were such a place; but my experience has convinced me of it, and it infinitely transcends all my previous conceptions. The Celestial City is full in my view. Its glories have been upon me, its breezes fan me, its odours are wafted to me, its sounds strike upon my ears, and its spirit is breathed into my heart. Nothing separates me from it but the river of death, which now appears but as a rill that may be crossed at a step." May God grant us the blessedness of dying on the hill-top with that vision in our gaze, but if it be not so, the way to it is as near from the lowland valleys that lie at the foot of the Mount of Vision.

III.—The Bearing on Dispensational Truth. The Law came by Moses, and Moses stands on the plains of history as the embodiment, as he was also the vehicle, of the moral law, whether given from Sinai or written on the fleshy tablets of the human heart

It was in perfect keeping with this conception that there was no decay in his natural vigour. His eye was as a falcon's, his step lithe and elastic, his bearing erect. He did not die of disease, or amid the decrepitude of old age; "he was not, because God took him." Time had only made him venerable, but not weak. And thus he represents God's holy law, which cannot grow outworn or weak, but always abides in its pristine and perfect strength.

And yet Moses could not bring the people into the land of Canaan, of Promise and of Rest. This was, in the first place, because of his impetuous outbreak at Meribah; but it was also, and in a deeper sense, due to the necessity of maintaining the symmetry of the type. The Law cannot give rest. Doing cannot inherit the Promises; Joshua must replace Moses; the Gospel take the place of Law; and Faith supersede a mere legal obedience. "We which have believed do enter into rest."

Of that rest it is not possible to speak here. Canaan does not primarily represent the rest which awaits us on the other side of death, where the fret and chafe of life are over, but the rest which may be entered here and now, in which the soul is set free from the tyranny of self and corruption, and abides in the peace of God which passes all understanding. Then life becomes one blessed succession of trustful obedience to the will of God; then, too, we are satisfied with the abundant wealth stored up for us in God, and He makes us drink of the river of his pleasure. This is the goodly Land of promise, which can only be seen from afar by those who know nothing beyond what Moses can teach them; but to be entered by those who follow the Ark through the river of death to self on to resurrection ground.

Lights and Shadows of Mission Work.

No. II.

"Father, how grey you are getting," said my wife, the other day. Remembering a time-worn "phiz," seen in the glass the last time I had shaved, I was forced to plead guilty to the grave indictment. But I was not grey when I conducted the S—— mission. It was one of my first. I went to it with all the enthusiasm, and perhaps with some of the vanity, that is supposed to be among the special belongings of a young curate.

I reached S—— on the Monday afternoon, and, after calling at "St. G——'s" vicarage, to leave my luggage, I went straight to the church, and preached from the words, "Son, give me thy heart." Either eleven or thirteen people followed me into the vestry at the close of my address, professing to be anxious for salvation. When these had gone away I learnt for the first time from the vicar that I was to have a fellow-missioner. It appeared that he had pressed this gentleman to take the mission, and had met with a refusal; but when, through my vicar, he had asked me, and I had consented to come, the other friend had found himself in a position to accept the invitation, and had retracted his refusal. Of course a few lines to me and I might have made new arrangements, but these never came, and I felt that we had "breakers ahead" from the beginning of our work.

We had marvellous blessing the first night. My fellow-helper preached, and I gave an after-address. Numbers of the church-workers, many of them fashionable young ladies, professed conversion.

All would have gone well had it not been for a little jar at the after-meeting that arose from the organ being played while we were speaking to anxious souls. It seemed that my co-worker had asked the organist to give us a little soft music, and doubtless with the best of intentions. I had known nothing of this, and, having been more or less of a musician from my earliest childhood, I found it impossible to speak to those by whose side I was kneeling while the strains of that voluntary were thrilling through my brain. I asked for silence, and I daresay, as my friend was ignorant of my reason for asking it, he thought I was interfering with his freedom of action.

The next morning my vanity was keenly wounded, and my other feelings more or less hurt by learning that all the hymns were to be chosen by the other—that he was to have all the morning addresses, and half those of the evening. "Why?" I asked myself. We were about the same age, and my pride, taking fire, informed me that I was to "knuckle down" to him on the ground that he was an incumbent and I but a curate. The words of St. Paul came into my mind, "I endure all things for the elect's sake," so I bit my lips and said nothing, but another humiliation was to follow.

According to the arrangement made, the last Sunday night of the mission was falling to my lot, and maybe I felt rather elated at the thought. I knew the church would be packed to the doors; and would it not be grand to have the privilege of addressing the hundreds who were coming to fill those aisles and galleries? Alas, for my expectation! As my friend was to have so many of the "mornings" it would be wrong to deprive me of them all, and therefore, just for a change, it might be well to give me the Sunday morning and let him take the night. My special text hardly sufficed to keep down my temper; nevertheless it did, and I became rather proud of my humility.

The last straw had not been placed on the camel's back, though it was in readiness for its place with the others. It was either on the Wednesday or Thursday morning, the Vicar came into my room with the proposal that I would leave the church entirely to my companion, and take services at a mission-room in another part of the parish. The idea was mooted with a number of kindly, and even flattering words. I was further promised the company and help of a well-known Christian banker; but no, I could hold in no longer. "I have been shifted about, sir," said I, "as much as ever was Jacob, by Laban, yet never a murmur has escaped my lips. Had you asked me to come to a mission-room, or even for the open-air mission, I would have come right gladly; but I was invited to take your mission, and you know it. Five more minutes, and I am on my way back home."

The good old man was much distressed, and fetched his wife to reason with me, in vain. I hastily packed a knapsack I had with me, and, refusing an offered cab, went off to the railway station. On my way, I met some of the young converts, who inquired the reason of my departure. I gave no answer, but a rumour afterwards got abroad, and even into the local papers, that my wife had been taken seriously ill. Not happening to be married at the time, this was scarcely the truth, though, perhaps, it was quite as well for the remaining part of the mission that people were left in ignorance of the cause that had cut short my sojourn among them.

Of course, I expected sympathy from my vicar. Maybe, he gave it me in his heart. If he did, I got little of it from his tongue. "Ah, L——," said he, "your pride has lost you a fine opportunity for service. If you could have humbled yourself that other little bit, God would have used you more than He has ever done yet." This was worse than all, and yet I felt he was right The zeal that had seemed to be consuming me, had been weighed in the balances and found wanting. I had unconsciously exalted myself to be abased. Had I humbled myself, I should have been exalted.

I have never seen my fellow-missioner since. Should we ever meet again, I am persuaded it would be as friends. Nearly twenty years of experience have been added to our lives, and brought both of us, I trust, more into the Master's image; we might possibly take another mission together, each esteeming the other better than himself, without a single jar.

The "Darkest England" Scheme.

The following Letter has been issued on behalf of the Darkest England Social Scheme:—

London, May, 1892.

From personal witness, or credible report, of what General Booth has done with the funds entrusted to him for the Social Scheme which he laid before the Country eighteen months ago, we think that it would be a serious evil if the great task which he has undertaken should be crippled by lack of help during the next few years. We therefore venture to recommend his work to the generous support of all who feel the necessity for some serious and concentrated effort to grapple with the needs of the most wretched and destitute, who have so long been the despair alike of our legislation and our philanthropy.

MEXICO.—Mr. W. H. Stanger writes from Tehuacan, Puebla:—"On April 2 I went on board the Zaragoza, and met with a very kind reception from Captain Carey Brenton. I believe that his testimony by life and lip must sooner or later be owned by God to the blessing of some of the few English and the many Mexicans on board. Having our lantern with me, I exhibited in the men's mess-room, and was much helped in giving out the Gospel in English and Spanish, having the best attention all through and many thanks at the end. We are sending a Testament and Gospel pamphlet to the station-masters of Mexico. These are, as a rule, men of intelligence, who have lost a good deal of their fanaticism, and we may look for good results."

Christianity and Pleasure.

BY REV. J. P. GLEDSTONE.

A valuable paper read at the recent meeting of the Congregational Union was that by Rev. Principal Vaughan Pryce on "Christianity and Pleasure." His warning note has not come at all too soon, and cannot be too seriously pondered. He did not confine himself to those palpable and vulgar aspects of pleasure which strike even the most careless, but rather directed attention to certain subtle tendencies of the pleasure-loving spirit in the Church's worship and service. Following a paper such as Mr. Harrison's on Money, he might have given some attention to the connection there is between the rush and strain of business life in London and the craving for amusement and relaxation in the evening, and have shown that, apart from sinful pleasures, there is dreadful deterioration caused by the absorption of time and strength in pleasures which in themselves are harmless enough. He might also have reminded his audience that London is the great centre of amusement for the English-speaking race; that an army of men and women live by devising and making pleasure, some of it pure, some impure; and that there is a strong temptation for Christians to go thoughtlessly with the tide. "Have you seen this, or been to that?" are questions which they ought to be able to answer in the negative without feeling that they are benighted and belated individuals. Mr. Pryce, however, passed on to examine perhaps more dangerous phases of our modern church life, and dealt with that craving for gratification in religious services which is so manifest everywhere. "If," he said, "we analyse our feeling in relation to public worship, what is it that moves us most, and most deeply? Is it this high sense of public and gracious service? Or is it a subtle yet potent desire to get what pleases us what yields us some pleasure in the engagement?"

That it is a delightful thing thus to forget self in common worship goes without saying; but it does not follow that we may substitute as a motive the pleasure we shall surely derive for the grand ideal we ought to fulfil in worship; and if we do, the atmosphere about us will be charged with impurity. If we say that everything must minister to pleasurable feeling, even in the house of God, is it quite certain that the pleasure will be that of holy service and loving generous fellowship?

If, again, our children are brought up to regard the house of God as a place where they must needs find gratification, where they must be pleased, are we not ministering, in a subtle but real way, to the love of pleasure which we so often deplore when it works otherwise than we approve? Seeking God and finding God—these yield unspeakable delight; but we do not pursue them because of the pleasure, but because of the loftiness and excellence involved. We should not seek pleasure when we should be seeking God."

The question here raised is difficult, but vital. Vital because it touches the religious habits of thousands who travel miles on a Sunday, at the cost of Sunday rest to cabmen, busmen, and other public servants, in order to hear a favourite preacher; and because it also bears upon the motive of public worship. The demand for a "bright and attractive" service is not necessarily a demand for more spiritual power in the service and for closer fellowship with God. It is frequently made by persons who are not recognised as examples of devoutness or consecration; and one wonders how they would have regarded the prayer-meeting in "the upper room," the preaching at Pentecost, or the teaching of our Lord on the Mount or by the seaside. The cry of others, again, is for an energy that shall penetrate the conscience and stir the heart and surely that is what we need, rather than what is meant by brightness and attractiveness, for, having that, a service cannot be dull and heavy.

The question is also undoubtedly difficult, because we do need the best of everything in the worship of God—the best preaching, the best singing, the best order and form of service; but the danger here is that we may be better pleased with the painted and glazed earthen vessel than with the heavenly treasure it contains. "The introduction of art into religion ends, not in art becoming religious, but in religion becoming an art." If dulness and baldness have kept some from public worship, beauty and melody have deluded quite as many into the false idea that æsthetic pleasure is the same as rejoicing in the Lord. The singing which is acceptable to God is that which breaks forth from a thankful heart, it may be in lovely strains or in quavering tones; let us have the melody, but let us not refuse the "joyful noise"; and let us in no case fall into the mistake that a "well-rendered service" is the same as "the sacrifice of praise." With our mixed congregations it is confessedly difficult to restrain the clamour for gratifying the flesh at the cost of the spirit, but there cannot be a doubt that if the motive of pleasure in worship becomes predominant, religious efficiency will perish, and the hungry souls of men will gather together in ugly rooms, and listen to rude singing and vulgar preaching, because they find truth, power, love, and salvation among "unlearned and ignorant men." The supreme power of worship is Christ, realised in hymn and prayer, and lesson and sermon; and if we have Him we shall never be without a congregation, though it may not be composed of those who affect superior tastes and ways.

Mr. Pryce had the courage to say that he doubted if we do well to include amusements in the curriculum of the Church's work, his personal persuasion being that the Church herself has ministered more than enough to the love of pleasure in the men o to-day. While contending as earnestly as he for the pre-eminent spirituality of the work of Christ's Church, we cannot overlook the fact that the Church has had many things to do "for the present necessity" which do not properly belong to her; her missionaries have been mechanics and traders; her members have been teachers of the three R's; her ministers have been authors and scholars; and within certain limits this utilisation of secular things has been helpful. It may apply to amusements for the time being. A cricket club managed by a sympathetic minister is better than one which meets at the public-house. The Church may sanctify and elevate all life by keeping it beneath her sheltering care, as a wise mother makes home too bright and happy for her children to seek their pleasures beyond its door in dangerous places.

ROME UNCHANGED.—Rev. A. Meille, of Florence, writes in the May issue of A Voice from Italy:—"Bonghi's 'Life of Christ' has been put into the Index Expurgatorius, that is to say, has been condemned as heterodox by the Inquisition, and the faithful are prohibited from reading it. Surely Sig. Bonghi will be very much surprised at this, for his 'Life of Christ' fully admits the Divine origin, the miracles, the supernatural teaching, the atoning death, and the Resurrection of the Lord. We Protestants think that he went even beyond what the Gospel teaches, by admitting as proved traditions dear to Roman Catholics, and translations that scarcely agree with the proper meaning of the sacred text. Most probably what drew on his book the thunderbolts of the Vatican is to be found in the few political allusions here and there to the temporal power, or to the hierarchy. It is, however, a strange and sad fact that the so-called 'Vicar of Christ,' after doing his best some years ago to prevent the French people from reading the Gospels in the popular Roman Catholic translation of Lasserre, should now forbid the Italians to read the simple and unadorned account of the life and teaching of the Lord by, perhaps, the greatest Italian writer living."

Italian Prisons.

BY CHAS. COOK.

Many of the large cities of Italy possess gaols which compare favourably with our own, but there are many which are very old and dirty, and are injuring the lives of those who are therein confined. After leaving San Remo we visited Genoa, and on inspecting the prison there found it, if possible, worse than the one we had last seen. Numbers of men confined together, without work to do, without books to read, and with very indifferent food to eat, and, what was worse, poisoned air to breathe continually. I am within the truth when I say that the walls of the kitchen, where the food was being prepared, were dirtier than the walls of our coal-cellar in England. Depressed and dejected as the prisoners were, they were delighted at the offer of our books, and profuse in their thanks as we ministered also to their temporal necessities. Unlike England, most Continental gaol systems permit of the prisoners buying certain articles of food, and, considering the poor provision the authorities make, it is a great mercy that the men are thus privileged. In calling attention to the dirty and unhealthy state of the prison I had some hope that some reform might be introduced.

A few days later found us in Turin. In the prison here was a man whom I had come from England to see—an English subject, who had been sentenced to seven and a-half years, and who, having served five years, had been promised his release by the Minister of Justice; but the Ministry had dissolved, and the new Minister knew nothing of the case.

He is sixty-three years old, has given evidence of true conversion to God since his imprisonment, and had been promised his release some months before. His partner in business, an Arabian, was acquitted, and, it is now believed, was the guiltier of the two.

On visiting him we found him very poorly; and the official who conducted us round the gaol said, "If the authorities do not soon deliver that poor gentleman, God will." A petition will be sent in speedily praying for his release; meanwhile, will the Lord's people remember him when before the "Throne of Grace"? We were privileged to supply him with a little money, and had the extreme joy of leaving behind in this particular prison six hundred copies of the Word of God in the shape of New Testaments and Gospels.

The gaol itself, not being on the "Association" principle, was cleaner in every respect than the one we had previously seen.

I am hoping, besides supplying most of the other prisons of Italy with New Testaments, to visit that country again in order to help towards cleansing and purifying the many pestilential gaols scattered over the whole country.

I am thankful to report that since I returned home, I have received a letter stating that "The authorities have now resolved to pull down the old prison at Genoa, by reason of its unsanitary condition, and to erect a new one in its place."

A Note of Gratitude.

It has been my privilege to peruse your issue of April 7, and I must say that I am highly pleased with the sweet spiritual tone of The Christian. In this country, midway between the two great oceans, and far away from you, we are endeavouring to bring the people to Christ. This is called the land of plenty, the asylum of the oppressed, and the home of temperance, yet the name of Jehovah fails to be sweet to many.

My window is to-day open towards the mother country, and as I write my heart goes up in gratitude that my God is your God, that your Saviour is my Saviour too. In all England, in all America, in all the world, let the name of Immanuel be lifted high that vice, tyranny, delusion, manisms, may become buried beneath the scope of all ruin, and that the light of the Gospel may beam from every hearth stone, from pole to pole, from sea to sea.

REV. G. WHELPTON writes from Havre that a former Roman Catholic priest, converted at Havre last year, has been going on well, and is now leaving for Bordeaux to work as an evangelist in the French Mission. Mr. Whelpton asks us to note that the new chapel described in our issue for May 19 is principally for French work, although English work will also be carried on.

The Sacred City of Idolatry.

Five miles from Faizabād lies the ancient city of Ajūdhya, or rather, what remains of it, for at one period it seems to have stretched for a great distance along the course of the river, and to have covered the ground where Faizabād now stands; in fact, the whole district was then called Ajūdhya, or

"THE UNCONQUERABLE."

Ajūdhya is to the Hindoos what Mecca is to the Mohammedans, Bethlehem to Christians. Here their demi-god, Ram Chandr, was born, and here is the scene of their great epic poem, the "Rámazān," the story of Ram and his brethren, and their rescue of Sita, Ram's wife, from the King of Ceylon; when, as the story goes, Hanumán, the Monkey-god, came to their assistance, and the monkeys made a bridge across to the island by linking each other together by their tails, and thus enabling Ram and his followers to get over the water. Legends and fables such as these are connected with innumerable shrines and temples of the city.

Is it any wonder that, soon after the missionary ladies settled down at Faizabād, they longed to begin work at such a place as Ajūdhya, a city wholly given over to idols? For a long time no opportunity beyond an occasional visit presented itself; then came a request for a girls' school; but so prejudiced were the people that no house could be obtained in which to hold it, and for a long time an old shed answered the purpose. At length a piece of ground belonging to Government came into the market. Miss Fallon, the Zenana missionary at Faizabād, applied for the lease, and wrote home to Helping Hands for the money to build a schoolhouse.

In due time the amount (£200) was collected, and now one has the pleasure of seeing among the crowd of ruined shrines and mosques and temples a neat, white, Christian building, the earnest, may we not believe, of the time when those false and foolish religions shall be superceded by the true faith.

This building, it was hoped, would be the centre of missionary work in Ajūdhya, and so it has proved. Out of school-hours and on Sundays it has been used for meetings and services amongst the small band of native Christians living there, and in various other ways.

Another outcome is the book-shop. This is a small shop in one of the principal thoroughfares, the rent and expenses being provided by our Helping Hands, and it has proved a most valuable addition to the work. Not only are the Scriptures and tracts sold there, but, being on a raised platform, it is admirably adapted for preaching at the great Mēlas and festivals continually being held at Ajūdhya.

The need of medical aid to the women has been a long-felt want. There is not even a Government dispensary in the city, the nearest one being at Faizabād. After waiting some time, the services of a Christian girl, who had just finished her medical training at Agra, were secured; and in October, 1891, a small dispensary for women was opened close to the school-house.

The foregoing account was written in December, 1891, by Miss Beynon, who is hon. secretary, and who is out there herself now, and working with Miss Fallon, at Faizabād and Ajūdhya. A specimen of the work to be done is given in Miss Fallon's own words:—

We were having a little preaching at one book shop in Ajūdhya, on the 28th November. Several of us met there, and while the native catechists preached in turn, we women sang bhājans (native hymns). I had my concertina, which proved an extra attraction. The audience was a large one, as crowds of pilgrims were flocking in from all parts of the country for the great half-yearly méla (religious festival). Among the crowd I soon espied a wild-looking, bright-eyed girl, her forehead besmeared with sandal wood, very little in the way of clothing, beads in her hands, her hair in a loose knot on the top of her head, and looking every inch a Sádhú (Hindu devotee).

One of my teachers whispered to me, "That is the girl who came to our school the other day, and said she wanted to learn to read." Of course, my interest was aroused, and at a sign from me, the girl jumped up to where we were sitting, as nimbly as a deer, and smiling all over, sat down at my feet. I asked her if she really wanted to learn to read? "Oh, yes!" she said, her eyes flashing at the very thought.

By this time the eyes of the crowd were upon her, so I told her to go among the people again, and when our meeting was over she could come with me to the school, where I was staying for a few days. She stood and listened quite quietly for about three-quarters of an hour, and as soon as I left, joined me.

I felt quite strange, walking along with this wild girl, and was conscious of many a Hindu eye upon me. She talked and laughed, and promised to tell me all her story when we got to the house.

It was the strangest tale I have ever heard. She had been a Sádhú for ten years, and was now eighteen. She knew no other life, and had very faint recollections about her early home and parents. Only this she remembered, that her father and mother had both died in one day of cholera, leaving her, with money and jewels and houses, in her grandmother's care. This old lady, apparently, sold most of the property, and soon after, the child was induced by an old woman to leave her home and become a Sádhú.

Her father was a well-to-do Brahmin in Government employ, and had lived in Cawnpore. I asked her if she had never been married. "No," she said, but I noticed a little hesitation about her manner, and on questioning her more closely she said that she had been betrothed to a young Brahmin. That about four months ago he had come across her, and was now very anxious to marry her. He had even followed her to Ajúdhya, and pressed his suit daily. "But I am never going to marry," she said. "Have I not given up the world? Am I not looking for God? Is all I have done and suffered to be given up for a man? No! If I am to be in the world now I had much better never have left my home. I have vowed to be God's always, and I can never give up this life." I tried to point out to her the true way of finding God, through Him who is The Way; and then I sang a bhājan to her, and read a little from the Hindi New Testament. She listened most eagerly, and then said, "I could go on listening to such words for ever. You are loving. I should like to stay with you always." I told her I would gladly receive her if she liked to come, and I should teach her to read, and then she could find out all about God and the salvation He had provided.

It was getting quite dark by this time, and I said she had better go back now to where she was staying. This was a sort of convent or monastery, for both sexes lived there. Seeing this young girl starting off alone, and knowing what a wicked city Ajūdhya is, I said, "Are you not afraid of going about alone?" "Of what?" she laughingly asked. "Oh!" I said, "you are a young girl, and there are so many bad people about; they might do you some harm." She drew herself up and said, "My Gūru (religious teacher) said to me, 'Child! sin can never touch you unless it is in your heart.' Why should I fear?" and off she ran.

This gives a picture of the work at Adjūdhya, which is now so much increasing that there is great need of enlargement. A suitable building is available, and can be bought now for £120. It is to purchase this for a dispensary-hospital that this appeal is now made. The work can be supported at the cost of thirty pounds per annum. This is guaranteed by Lady Herbert Edwardes, and the work has begun. About fifty pounds towards the £120 has been collected at Brighton, and the remainder is urgently needed to complete the purchase of the house. The need is evident, and the opportunity is great! Will some readers of The Christian be interested, that the work may not be delayed? The address of Lady Edwardes is 21, Palmiera-mansions, Brighton.

OPEN-AIR MISSION.—Licut-Colonel R. Phayre has accepted the office of Honorary Secretary of the Open-Air Mission, in the place of Mr. John MacGregor, who retired some time since on account of failing health. Mr. Frank Cockrem, who had been engaged in the office of the Mission with the late Mr. Gawin Kirkham for more than seven years, has been appointed assistant secretary. Thus the vacancy created by the late secretary's lamented death has been filled.

ROSSLYN REST.—On May 24, the "Weary Toilers" Rest, Rose Valley, Brentwood, was formally opened; and the first eight "Weary Toilers" went for their much-needed rest on Tuesday week. The house is most comfortably and prettily furnished throughout, and there is a nice garden. Blanche, Countess of Rosslyn, has started this Rest, and provides the rent, matron, servants &c.; funds are therefore only required for the food and travelling expenses of the inmates. Miss Lily Benn, 38, St. Peter's-road, Mile-end, London, E., is Hon. Sec.

REV. JOHN McNEILL'S MISSION.

Last Friday an interesting gathering was held in Dundee of those who had been "brought in" during the fortnight's campaign in that city. The Mission was said to be the most striking one since 1860. Not only were many Christians quickened, but over two hundred of those who professed conversion applied for cards of admission to the tea-meeting provided by the committee.

The meeting was held in the Y.M.C.A. rooms, and was presided over by Rev. Wm. Houston, in whose Steeple Church many of the services were held. Among the speakers were the Chairman, Revs. Messrs. Clark, Cox, and Inch, Ex-provost Moncur, Mr. W. M. Oatts (Y.M.C.A., Glasgow), and Mr. James Smith (Dundee). During the evening the Chairman called upon several of the friends to give testimony. Nearly thirty responded. It was interesting to notice that almost every one had a different story to tell, and the addresses that had been blessed had extended all over the Mission. The great majority of those who spoke were young people, and although they did not say much, they showed by their bright, happy faces that they "felt like singing all the time."

As in many other places visited by Mr. McNeill, so in Dundee the blessing reached several shops and factories, and spread among the employés. There were many in the same places of business who gave testimony. Then, again, many who had been church members and Sabbath-school teachers told of their conversion during the Mission. One elderly man testified to blessing received from the address on the "Good Shepherd," and what touched him was what the preacher said about the closing verse of the 23rd Psalm: "Goodness and mercy shall follow thee." Mr. McNeill had used the simile of the shepherd's two dogs following, and leading right up to the very gates of heaven, and "then returning to do the same for your children." It was this last thought that touched the father's heart. There were many present who had decided to trust the Saviour while the Gospel was being preached.

Mr. McNeill's prospective arrangements for June are as under:—

May 29 to 31	...	...	Stranraer.
June 1 to 3	...	...	Newton Stewart.
,, 8 to 10	...	...	Kirkcudbright.
,, 12 to 14	...	...	Castle Douglas.
,, 15 to 17	...	...	Annan.
,, 19 to 21	...	...	Lockerbie.
,, 22 to 24	...	...	Ecclefechan.
,, 26 to 28	...	...	Lochmaben.

Mr. McNeill will accompany Mr Moody to the great camp meetings in Fenaghy, Ireland, on July 6 and 7.

YOUNG WOMEN IN HAMBURG.

Several associates of the Y.W.C.A. wished to have a connecting link at Hamburg, and have succeeded in finding a lady who is willing to extend her work. Fraulein Saltzkorn, 84, 86, Valentinskamp, Hamburg, Germany, has been engaged in home mission work—especially among young girls—for many years; she is, therefore, well-known at Hamburg, and her connections reach beyond. Agreeable to the desire of many Christians, she has established a small home, where she could accommodate young girls; those in search of a situation would find in her a lady willing to exert herself in their behalf.

Fraulein Saltzkorn would open her own home to a few ladies travelling alone and wishing to spend some time at Hamburg, and provide board and lodging for them. She also would meet them or any young girl at the station or steamers, if she has previous notice given.

It would be most desirable to have a regular locality for the Y.W.C.A. at Hamburg, a place where so many English congregate, and girls standing alone are exposed to great danger. Would any of the English associates help to secure a locality for that purpose?

DEACONESSES' INSTITUTE, TOTTENHAM.—In addition to the facts noted in our brief report last week, we may state that during the last year over sixteen thousand have come under direct Gospel teaching, and not a few of these have decided for Christ, and many more have changed their mode of life. One of the sisters addresses from six hundred to seven hundred every Sunday. There is also Gospel preaching every Sunday evening in the Hospital Hall, where hundreds hear the Word of God in the course of the year.

Y. P. S. C. E. Convention.

A series of successful gatherings, unique in interest and rich in spiritual influence, were held in Pepper-street Chapel, Chester, on Tuesday and Wednesday last week in connection with the second annual Convention of the Young People's Society of Christian Endeavour. The movement, which may now be considered as having taken firm root in England, is spreading with great rapidity. Only about fifty representatives attended the first Convention held at Crewe in May last year; there are now close upon three hundred enrolled societies, about two hundred delegates being present at this year's Convention. Nothing was wanting on the part of the Chester friends to make the visit of their guests as enjoyable as possible.

Mr. I. D. Sankey had promised to sing at each of the gatherings of the Convention, and long before the time for the commencement of the first public meeting on Tuesday evening the large chapel was crowded to excess. Mr. R. C. Morgan, who presided, said there were many things, social, political, and religious, which at the present time were calculated to cause anxiety to Christian people. On the other hand, there were many helpful and hopeful signs of promise for the future. The Christian Endeavour Society was doing a great work. Its aim is to raise up from amongst the young those who will be missionaries of the Cross, not only to the neglected in our own land, but to the heathen abroad. He did not see why every person in the world should not hear the Gospel message within this generation.

Four of the Presidents of the Chester Endeavour Societies then addressed the meeting—Rev. John Williams (Presbyterian) on "Our Principles"; Rev. F. Barnes (Congregational) on "Our Methods"; Rev. J. W. Clarke (Congregational) on "Our Aims," and Rev. J. B. Morgan (Baptist) on "Our Achievements." Before singing his first hymn, "Throw out the life line," Mr. Sankey expressed his faith in the Christian Endeavour movement. A feeling of confidence in it was spreading amongst the ministers and in the churches of the United States, founded upon the great principle that young people should have something special to do in the Church of God. Many of these young people were throwing out the life line to the perishing around them.

On Wednesday morning the Endeavourers were early astir, from 250 to 300 being present at the prayer-meeting at 7.30. Mr. E. J. Baillie presided, and directed the devotions of the assembly. Dividing the subjects of prayer into four divisions, with a view to giving point to the petitions, he asked that supplications might be made for the advancement of Christ's Kingdom and the spread of the Gospel throughout the world, and gradually narrowed the scope of the pleadings until they were focussed upon the day's gatherings and the outpouring of the Spirit desired upon every member of the Convention.

The morning session was under the presidency of Rev. W. Bainbridge, pastor of the Pepper-street Church, who had been appointed on behalf of the Chester societies to deliver the address of welcome to the delegates. Mr. Sankey sang "Some time we'll understand" in a most effective manner. Mr. Bainbridge's "Address of Welcome" was a model of hearty Christian greeting to the representatives of the Endeavour Societies from all parts of England to the "fair, rare old city of Chester." Several societies sent greetings, which were read. The ringing cheers of the audience followed the reading of a cablegram from Dr. Clark, of Boston: "Heartiest greetings from American Endeavourers; cause advancing gloriously.—Isaiah xliii. 5 and 6." Later in the day a telegram was received—"Sixty Glasgow Endeavourers send greetings. Scotland awakening"—to which a reply was wired: "Thanks for greeting. May the sixty soon become six hundred."

The relationships of the Endeavour Society (1) to the Pastor, (2) to the Sunday-school, (3) to Mission Work, were ably dealt with in papers read respectively by Rev. J. Edwards (Colwyn Bay), Rev. T. Townsend (Shrewsbury), and Rev. F. W. H. Guttridge (Manchester). These were followed by an interesting discussion in which many of the delegates took part, notably Mr. J. Blackham, of the P.S.A. Movement, Mrs. Banks (Keswick), and Mr. Hunter (Waterloo), who said that the Society he represented had already sent out one missionary to India, and another had offered himself. He suggested that during the coming year each of the three hundred Christian Endeavour Societies in the country should endeavour to send out at least one missionary from their midst.

A second Conference and discussion was held in the afternoon, over which Mr. C. Waters (S.S.U.) presided. Brief but really practical and able papers were read on Endeavour Committees at work.—Mr. Smale (Ashton) dealt with the Lookout Committee, "How we may increase the interest in our Society;" Mr. Morris (Marple) on the Prayer Meeting Committee, "Soul-winning and the Deepening of the Spiritual Life"; Mr. E. A. Humphreys (Chester), on the Social Committee, "The Principal Objects of Endeavour Socials"; and Mr. R. C. Heaton Drabble (Sheffield), on "The Missionary Sunday-school and Temperance Committees at Work."

At this meeting important resolutions were passed—(1) adopting as the principles of the British Section of C.E. Societies those reaffirmed at the Minneapolis Convention in July last; (2) in respect to Temperance Legislation, the Opium Traffic, and the Sunday Closing of Public Houses; and (3) the great and urgent needs of the foreign mission field in regard to men and funds. This latter subject was kept well to the front at all the meetings of the Convention. It was also resolved that the next Convention (1893) should be held at Bradford.

THE PUBLIC MEETING

in the evening was one long to be remembered. Mr. F. F. Belsey, Mayor of Rochester, presided, and expressed, on behalf of the Council of the Sunday-School Union, the warm interest felt by his committee in the Endeavour movement. Rev. M. Stanley (Birkenhead) said he was first drawn to the Society because it took the Scriptures as its basis. In the course of an eloquent address he insisted, with great force, upon the importance of Scripture knowledge for the young. Rev. J. E. Newell, of Samoa, stirred the deepest feelings of emotion and sympathy with missionary work by his pathetic record of the Christian heroism which had marked the lives of some of his fellow-labourers on the mission field. Rev. J. Howard James (Nottingham), taking as the subject of his address the Hebrew custom of nailing the ear of the slave to the door-post on his expression of willingness to remain in the service of his master, pleaded for deeper consecration to Christ.

An overflow meeting was held in the Newgate-street Presbyterian Church, at which Mr. Blackham presided, and which was addressed by the some speakers as the one at Pepper-street. Mr. Sankey sang at both places.

The crowning gathering of all was the consecration meeting, conducted with much spiritual insight by Rev. John Williams. It had been arranged that the various societies from each town should unitedly respond to the roll-call, and many of the answers given were exceedingly helpful and inspiring to the rest of the brethren. Liverpool was named by the Secretary, and at once about thirty representatives from that town rose, and impressively sang the first verse of "Down in the valley with my Saviour I would go." Others responded by quotations from well-known hymns or passages of Scripture. When Chester was called, the whole choir, which was formed of the local societies, responded by singing the last verse of Miss Havergal's consecration hymn, "Take my love, my Lord, I pour," &c. "Let America respond," said Mr. Williams, taking Mr. Sankey by the hand. The singer rose, and pointing to the national flags, said, "I have been looking at those beautiful emblems of our nationality, and hoping that they might draw a little nearer. I am trusting that this new institution will grow in England and form another tie, binding together the two nations, which politicians shall not be able to break."

The effect was thrilling in the extreme when Mr. Williams requested that all should respond "Amen" to what he said. "On his head be the crown." "Amen," repeated the hundreds present. "On his shoulders the government." Again a loud "Amen" burst from all lips. "In his hand the sceptre." "Amen" was again the emphatic and unanimous response. Then quietly and reverently, while all joined hands, the Mizpah benediction, "The Lord watch between me and thee when we are absent one from another," was unitedly repeated, and the last of what has certainly been the most remarkable series of meetings held in Chester for many years was brought to a close.

E. P.

SOUTHSEA CONFERENCE.

The meetings in connection with the eleventh annual Southsea Conference extended from Monday evening last week to Friday evening.

The first meeting of the conference proper was on the Tuesday forenoon. Rev. F. Baldey presided, and addresses were given by Rev. E. N. Thwaites and Rev. Lindsey Young on "The Word of God: Its Plenary Inspiration." These addresses were powerful and convincing. At the evening meeting addresses were given by Rev. Walter Brown and Rev. David Baron on "The Spirit of God: His Personality and Presence."

On Wednesday forenoon, after a short address by Mr. Baldey, addresses were given by Rev. H. C. Sturdy and Rev. A. Halliday, on "The Word of God: Its Indisputable Authority." In the evening the subject was: "The Holy Spirit," "Witnessing to and Glorifying Christ," and the speakers were Rev. G. C. Williamson, Rev. W. Haslam, and Rev. J. J. Luce.

On Thursday forenoon addresses were given by Rev. J. Luce, Rev. W. Haslam, and Rev. W. Fuller Gooch, on "The Word of God: Its Marvellous Fulness and Ineffable Preciousness." Earnest prayer followed that all might more fully realise its preciousness. Clear and impressive addresses were given in the evening by Rev. Dr. Bullinger; and Rev. W. Fuller Gooch on "The Holy Spirit: His Relation to the Word and the Church."

On Friday morning there was a praise and prayer meeting, when short exhortations were given by Rev. G. C. Williamson and Rev. J. J. Luce. At 10.30 a.m. the praise meeting was continued. Short addresses were given by Messrs. Fuller Gooch and Haslam on the duty of rendering praise. Testimonies were given by several present as to God's love and faithfulness, and the blessing they had received. In the afternoon the large room was filled to hear an earnest address from Mrs. Evered Poole.

The early prayer meetings were seasons of holy calm and spiritual refreshment. As usual, the after dinner half-hour was a very interesting and profitable interval, when many friends spoke from personal experience of God's faithfulness. Bible readings on two of the afternoons were conducted by Mr. W. R. Lane and Rev. D. Baron. There were also afternoon gatherings, when a number of workers gave reports as to Christian work under their charge. A missionary meeting was held on Thursday afternoon. The communion of Christian believers was a marked feature in the conference.

The subjects chosen for consideration were of special importance and interest in view of present-day discussions, and modern tendencies to broad thought, and it was evident that their treatment by the different speakers awakened peculiar earnestness and concern on the part of many hearers. Both upon the inspiration of the Scriptures, and the essential need for the direct and personal agency of the Holy Ghost in order to spiritual discernment and power, the speakers gave no uncertain sound, and the witness borne to these great truths was manifestly owned of God for quickening and confirming the faith of his people. This fact was amply proved by the numerous testimonies borne at the praise meeting on the last day of the Conference.

While attention was largely concentrated on doctrinal points such as those referred to, scope was afforded for setting forth the claims of practical endeavours to further the Gospel of Christ. Not only at the special meeting on Thursday for missionary intelligence concerning various foreign fields, but at the social gatherings between the meetings each day prominence was given to such branches of Christian work at home and abroad as are being most owned of God for the salvation of souls. Nor was direct effort for the conversion of sinners lost sight of, for an evangelistic service conducted by Mr. Haslam in the Conference Room on Friday evening fitly brought to a close a series of assemblies marked by much real spiritual fervour and blessing.

St. Olave's Infirmary, Rotherhithe (now that the new wing is opened, next to the largest poor-law hospital in the metropolis), contains 620 beds, but in the whole building there are no texts of Scripture or pictures for the eye to rest upon. Can any readers help in this way? Rev. G. D. Wyatt, The Rectory, Bermondsey, S.E.

News Notes.

A branch of the Society of Christian Endeavour has been organised in a boys' school at Teheran, Persia.

There was a striking Anti-Jewish demonstration in Paris last week, attended by about a thousand students.

The next Decennial Missionary Conference in India will be held at Bombay, at the close of this year.

During this week Mr. Josiah Nix and a band of helpers, numbering about a hundred, are at work on Epsom Downs, among the racecourse frequenters.

As Bishop Wm. Taylor, of Africa, is over seventy years of age, there is talk of electing another bishop for Africa to relieve him of part of his work.

A Salvationist blacksmith, Mr. John Margrie, was recently elected a member of the Chelsea Vestry, ousting a representative of the brewing interest.

There is said to be an alarming increase in the consumption of opium in California. During the last eight years the United States has received five million dollars revenue from the drug imported into San Francisco alone.

Dr. A. T. Pierson has postponed his departure for America till after June 22, on which day the annual festival of the Stockwell Orphanage will be held. Mr. Thomas Spurgeon is expected to arrive from Auckland in time to participate in the memorial services then to be held.

On the last outward voyage of The City of New York, a lecture on "African Missions" was given in the saloon by Rev. C. E. Ingham, of the American Baptist Mission. This is an excellent innovation, and we hope the example will be widely followed.

A revival is in progress in Antananarivo, the capital of Madagascar. The missionaries of the London Society write with great joy of the work which began early in May. The meetings are attended by young men and women, many of them connected with the higher schools.

Fears are entertained that the Fijian race is dying out, and a Royal Commission of Inquiry is urged. The death of Rev. James Calvert, Wesleyan missionary, leaves only two survivors of the pioneers who effected the Christianisation of Fiji—Rev. John Watsford, of Victoria, and Rev. William Moore, of New South Wales.

Rev. J. Batchellor, the one missionary among the Ainus, has been lecturing in the large cities of Japan on that dying-out race. He states that the most recent statistics place the number of these aborigines at less than seventeen thousand, and they are rapidly succumbing to drink, disease, inter-village strife and Japanese aggression.

The great State lottery of Louisiana, that infamous combination of wealth and wickedness, will soon be a thing of the past. Great credit, says The Record of Christian Work, is due to those who have fought this corrupting corporation through the past two years, often under most discouraging circumstances.

Readers of Mr. Spurgeon's sermons will be glad to know that the publishers have, at least, eight hundred discourses that have not yet been published, so that the weekly issue can be continued for sixteen years longer. Each sermon is now accompanied by an exposition given by the preacher.

The Nonconformist churches in Leeds are about to undertake a house-to-house visitation with the view of ascertaining, so far as that city is concerned, what truth there is in the common belief that the churches have lost hold of the masses of the people. A recent similar visitation in Bradford was attended with gratifying results.

A Roman Catholic Church, originally built for, and used by the Hussites, has been ceded by the Town Council of Laun, in Bohemia, for the use of the Protestant congregation gathered in that town. The event is, we believe, an unique one in the modern history of Austria, and is a proof that true notions of religious liberty are spreading in that empire.

The police in Birmingham are taking energetic measures to deal with the betting men who create a nuisance in the streets there. Four offenders were recently proceeded against under the Vagrancy Act, and one of the defendants was ordered to pay a fine of £20 and costs. The magistrate intimated that in future offenders would be sent to gaol for three months.

Five years have passed since the Students' Volunteer Missionary Movement started in America, and in connection with it almost 6000 have pledged themselves to the foreign field, if the way of entrance shall be opened. Of this number about 30 per cent. are young women. Not far from 350 have already entered upon their work, while some five hundred are yet in theological schools, 125 in medical schools, and a far larger number in various colleges.

The Scottish Assemblies.

HOME MISSIONS.

One of the most interesting sessions of the Free General Assembly was that in which the report on the state of religion and morals came up for consideration. Rev. John Burnett, of Glasgow, in submitting the report, said the Committee recommended a continuance of the system of visitation in the different Presbyteries, by ministers and elders of experience. Such visitation should be conducted with a view to encouraging ministers and people, to the stimulating of spiritual life, and to the furthering of aggressive work among the masses. After a reference to the hindrances caused by Sunday pleasuring and Saturday games, Mr. Burnett alluded with great cordiality to the recent visit through Scotland of Mr. Moody and Mr. Sankey, and to the evangelistic work of Rev. John McNeill. The reports from the various Synods within whose bounds the evangelists had laboured all bore grateful testimony to the earnest nature of the work done and to the interest awakened.

A discussion followed, chiefly in the way of supplementary report. Rev. Lewis Davidson, of Edinburgh, backed up the recommendations of the committee, and urged the churches to cherish higher social ideals. He spoke of the good accomplished by the American visitors, and also of the zeal of Mr. McNeill in "slaying the Goliaths and pillorying the Pharisees." Evangelistic work, he added, was sometimes weakened by Christian men contending over small points of difference; let them address themselves to the task of removing actual evils that were cutting into the hearts and lives of the people. Mr. J. Campbell White thought if they were doing more as a church for foreign missions they would have greater prosperity at home. He feared that the evangelistic spirit was hindered by an apparent tampering with the authority of the Word of God. Rev. J. J. Mackay, of Trinity Church, Glasgow, who was one of Mr. Moody's efficient helpers during a part of the Scotch campaign, told of the movement in the Highlands, and urged that the churches should do more in the way of evangelism. The Church ought to lay hold on a dozen or so of its best ministers and set them free for this work for six months. Rev. G. H. C. Macgregor, of Aberdeen, pleaded for a greater infusion of the evangelistic spirit in ordinary preaching. Mr. C. J. Guthrie urged that everybody should be set to work in some department of service. Rev. James Wells, of Glasgow, having counselled less criticism of visiting deputies, and more evangelism in the weekly pulpit, an address followed from Rev. John McNeill, who was very warmly received. He magnified his new office as an evangelist; pleaded that conversion and the work of the after-meeting generally should be kept to the front; called for more courage in dealing with the drink question; and condemned the excessive devotion to Saturday afternoon athletics.

"The Religious Condition of the People" was the subject of a report submitted to the Established Assembly by Dr. Marshall Lang. He said that their investigations connected with rural life showed many things tending to moral degradation. There were the evils of the bothy system and of hiring fairs. In the cities, there were the drink temptations and the bad housing of the poor. More friendly visitation is needed. What the people want is shepherding. In the subsequent discussion reference was made to the complication of the problem by the influx of population from country to town.

FOREIGN MISSIONS.

A great part of a day last week was given to this important topic in the Free Assembly. After an interesting report, submitted by Professor Lindsay on behalf of the Foreign Missions Committee, dealing largely with India and South Africa, an address was given by Dr. Pentecost on his recent experiences in India. He spoke in terms of high admiration of the devotion of the missionaries he had met there. He believed that India was the key to the position in the heathen world, and he expressed himself as more than surprised at the rapid progress the Gospel of Christ is making in that country. He urged the necessity of greatly increasing the working forces there.

At a subsequent meeting the same day it was stated that Mr. Campbell White has given £2000 towards placing some of the young volunteers in the mission field. Dr. Laws, of Livingstonia, described the gratifying progress of the work under his care; as also Dr. Stewart, of Lovedale. Four of the student volunteer missionaries addressed the Assembly, and three others were presented for dedication to work in Africa, India, and Arabia.

At a missionary breakfast, in connection with the Jewish, Continental, and Colonial Missions of the Free Church, interesting reports were submitted.

The most exciting discussions of the Free Assembly were those relating to the election of a Hebrew professor in Glasgow College and to the passing of the Declaratory Act, which modifies the form of subscription to the Confession of Faith. By a large majority Rev. G. A. Smith, of Aberdeen, was elected to the vacant Glasgow professoriate, the other candidate being Professor Harper, of Melbourne. The Declaratory Act was also passed by an immense majority of votes.

THE C.O.S. AND DR. BARNARDO.

The Charity Organisation Society will not be suspected of undue partiality towards any part of Dr. Barnardo's work, which, ever since the proceedings of 1877, known as the Barnardo Arbitration, they have seemed to be unable to refer to with any degree of favour. We begin, however, to hope that there are signs of a better state of mind, and that the solid and useful results which have followed the work of Dr. Barnardo's Homes at home and abroad are constraining even opposers to express appreciation of such successful labours. From the latest report of the Charity Organisation Society we learn that two gentlemen, Mr. Gage-Gardiner and Captain Gretton, were sent out by that Society to inspect and report upon the work of adult and juvenile emigration generally throughout Canada. In making their report we find the following lines relating to Dr. Barnardo's work:—

"Mr. Gage-Gardiner's attention was more particularly directed to the results of the emigration of young boys and girls. Of Dr. Barnardo's arrangements and success in dealing with boys he speaks highly. He says: 'Dr. Barnardo appears, as I gathered by many inquiries, to have created a very good impression by his work, and his agent is conspicuous for vigilance and sagacity....

"'Perhaps the most remarkable development of Dr. Barnardo's work at present is a farm of eight thousand acres in Manitoba, two hundred miles north-west of Winnipeg, with probably five hundred acres under cultivation. Here there is accommodation for seventy-five boys, between the ages of eighteen and twenty-two. They have almost all of them been sent out direct from this country, and a rougher and more unpromising set in appearance I never saw. But, with three paid adults, they do all the work of the farm, where, among other objects of interest, are a large stock of cattle, a creamery, and twenty-five acres of productive kitchen garden. These lads are left on the farm for about twelve or eighteen months. Then they are drafted off as labourers to other farms, and the demand for them is much greater than the supply....So long as the services of the present highly-skilled and most efficient manager are retained, I am certain that this farm affords a very good opening for the rough and poor class of lads with whom in London it is often extremely difficult to deal.' In this view Captain Gretton concurs."

GREAT GEORGE-STREET CHAPEL, LIVERPOOL.

PLEASANT SUNDAY AFTERNOON BROTHERHOOD.

RETROSPECTIVE.

WE have completed the first six months of our history as a Brotherhood. Our hearts are too full to say all we think and feel about the work already accomplished. "The Lord hath done great things for us: whereof we are glad." The service we are permitted to render the men and women of Liverpool is taking the form of practical Christianity. Our various auxiliary societies are creating and fostering habits of temperance and thrift. Our Sunday Afternoon Service is proving to be as profitable as it is pleasant. The following testimonies will rejoice the hearts of the members, and greatly cheer the workers:—A District Nurse says that many homes in a certain locality with which she is familiar are quite changed in their character as the direct result of our P.S.A. Services, and that the wives in these homes cannot speak too gratefully of the transforming influence it has had upon their husbands.

A District Visitor, speaking of another locality, writes:—"It is such a comfort to see the sympathy some of the husbands are giving to their wives. They stay at home on the Monday evenings instead of going to the public house, and they take care of the home and the children. It is new life to some of them."

One of our workers was riding on an omnibus, and, being recognised by the man sitting next to him, was addressed thus: "Splendid movement this P.S.A., isn't it, sir?" "Yes." "Ah! nobody really knows what good it is doing, sir. I speak from personal experience. I used to be off work, sometimes a day, or even two days a week, losing that much pay, and also spending not less than five shillings a week in drink. Eight Sundays ago I went to the afternoon service, and since that time I have only missed one afternoon's work, and I haven't touched a drop of liquor. I have been to every service since, and I look forward all the week to 'next Sunday.' My home is a comfortable one now, sir, and I have money to spare and to put by. My wife, too, has joined the Women's Sisterhood. I only wish that more of us would join. I know dozens of cases similar to, and worse than, my own, where a complete change has come about as a result of the P.S.A. movement. There is a working tailor who used to be an awful drunkard, and who, having got rid of all his 'sticks,' had to sit working on an old box. That man now, sir, never drinks, and is rapidly getting his place decently furnished."

Three months ago another of our members was the terror of his home through his fondness for drink. When he joined he signed the pledge and has kept it ever since, and a member of his family, as she was relating this to a friend, added, "Our home now is just like heaven." Another home, ravaged by drink and torn with domestic dissension, husband and wife living apart, is now a happy and united home, as the direct result of the services. A man, who had not been teetotal for more than a week or two at a time for nineteen years, has not only become a staunch abstainer, but has lost the very desire for drink. Several men who joined before Christmas, who regularly spent ten shillings weekly in drink, never touch liquor now, and they come to the service attired like gentlemen, self-respecting and respected by all who know them. From one street alone some twelve men come regularly to the service, all of whom were frequenters of the public-house.

One man, a non-chapel-goer, found his way to the service, and explained his presence to one of the workers thus:—"My wife was here on Monday and she thought I had better come to-day. Besides, I haven't a mate to go with now. All my mates come here every Sunday afternoon." He came back to the evening service, brought his wife with him, and they now attend every Sunday.

A P.S.A. member who had not attended a place of worship for fifteen years, said to one of our friends: "It is quite an understood thing at our house now, that if dinner is not ready in time on a Sunday afternoon, I'm off." Another, a stranger to religious services, at once joined our membership, and full of his new found happiness, said to a friend of his: "Have you ever been to the P.S.A. at Great George-street?" "No; what is it?" "Nay, it's that grand I cannot tell you; you must come next Sunday. I wouldn't miss for anything."

A 'bus conductor said to one of our officers: "I go every Sunday; it is just beautiful. I bring my grandfather with me, and he says all the fault he has to find with it is that the service is too short. I am going to bring my driver next Sunday."

One of our most constant attenders had not been to a place of worship for more than thirty years except at a funeral. After one of the services a man said to one of the stewards as he passed out: "I have not been in a place of worship for eight years. I thought this kind of thing was played out. I am coming back again." Other instances could be given if space permitted.

Young men, married and unmarried, who had drifted entirely away from religious influence, come with clock-work regularity, and some who had been active opponents of Christianity are now among our warmest supporters.

We cannot too earnestly thank our God for what He has done. His presence is felt at all the services. His Spirit seems to arrest the men as soon as they cross the threshold of the chapel, operate upon mind and heart as the service proceeds, create a sudden distate for their old evil habits and indulgences, awaken aspirations after a better life, draw them towards Christ and his saving power, and impart strength there and then to forsake the old life, and turn their faces towards God and heaven. "It is the Lord's doing, and it is marvellous in our eyes."

AN AFRICAN "BOCHIM."

IN a letter dated March 2 to the Secretary of the Young Men's Foreign Mission Society, in connection with the Birmingham Y.M.C.A., Rev. S. Aitchison, Ikwezi Lamaci, Harding, Alfred County, Natal, writes:—

On last Lord's Day afternoon it was our joy to receive eight converts from the heathen into church-fellowship. On the Sunday, at my wife's morning meeting, and throughout the day, the place was a "Bochim," because of the great and general weeping for sin. This was a day to be held in remembrance. I will not attempt to describe it, but imagine our joy at seeing eight redeemed from heathen darkness, each standing up before a large gathering of their own people (still in the darkness which these have left), bearing testimony to Jesus, who gave Himself for them, and expressing an earnest desire to be received as members. They had been a long time receiving instruction with a view to this. There were some others who would gladly have joined these in bearing similar testimony, but we think they had better wait for a time. May the Lord give them joy and courage.

STRIVING AND SEEKING.—Observe, there is a material difference between one that only seeks to enter in and one that strives to enter in. It is said, "Strive to enter in at the strait gate; for many shall seek and not be able." Here striving is distinguished from seeking. Do not be a listless, uncertain seeker; but strive determinately, constantly, earnestly. Be like the merchant, whose head and heart are always on his merchandise. He watches wind and weather; seizes every favourable turn in business. He is all energy, all pursuit, nothing can divert him from his point. They that thus strive to enter in at the strait gate, taking God's way and help, shall never fail.—Cecil.

THE THEATRICAL MISSION, hearing that a party of stage children had been deserted and left destitute by their manager in Airdrie, N.B., wired to the police and secured the return of the children to London, fares being paid by the committee of the Mission, and twelve girls reached St. Pancras at eight, Thursday morning, where they were met by two of the lady workers and Rev. Courthope Todd. Faint and exhausted, they were dispatched to the Mission Institute, where justice was done to a substantial breakfast. Thus, these young people have been saved from distress and possible ruin. All attended the evangelistic reunion at Macready House, Covent-garden, on Friday.

LOWESTOFT Y.W.C.A.—This Association has increased greatly since it was founded in 1885. The membership of thirty has now reached nearly three hundred; hence the present small house is totally inadequate, and a schoolroom has to be hired during the winter session, thus dividing the work. After ineffectual attempts to procure a larger house, the committee have decided upon building a home and institute, the cost of which will not exceed £1500. The home has already been of great benefit to young women, who have come to the town for rest and sea-air. A much larger number could be benefited with the increased accommodation the new premises would afford. The secretary is Miss E. R. Maconochie, 49, High-street, Lowestoft.

AFTER FOUR YEARS.

MANY, hearing of the blessing God is pleased to grant in connection with the work of the St. Giles's Christian Mission amongst discharged prisoners, may be inclined to ask, Do these stand? Do these men continue to lead God-fearing and honest lives? The answer is emphatically, They do. Doubtless, there are some disappointments, but, in the majority of instances, the men and boys continue leading new and changed lives. One good instance has just come before us in the following letter to Mr. Wheatley, written, it will be observed, not boastfully, but merely by way of plea for another fallen one:—"Nearly four years ago I was a prisoner for one month in Holloway Gaol, having embezzled £9 from my employer. During all that month the only kind, good word I had spoken to me was from you. I had early professed to love God, and had given my heart to Him, but had wandered far away, becoming a miserable backslider, and at last got so far as to take my master's money. Alone in my cell with God, your kind words broke me down, and I sought and found pardon through a Saviour's precious blood. I got, in answer to prayer, a situation, in which I have been two years, as messenger, and by God's keeping, not mine own, I have kept the pledge I took at your breakfast, and I try and tell others of the Saviour's love, and help them to get away from the drink. I want to ask you if you would be kind enough to see a young man who was sent from Southwark Police-court on the 11th of this month for twenty-one days for stealing a coat in Lambeth-walk. This is his first fall. He is eighteen years old. If you can do anything to rescue him his mother will be thankful. His father is an infidel."

Many such, both new offenders falling into sin and old and well-nigh hopeless ones, are seeking help to escape from the fetters of crime; but the answer made them must depend on the funds, and these are at present in urgent need of replenishment. The Secretary of the Mission feels that to have to refuse for lack of funds sincerely penitent men and boys anxious to lead new lives would be a most serious matter. Communications should be made to the Superintendent, Mr. William Wheatley, 29, Brooke-street, Holborn, W.C.

A POSTMEN'S HOME.

LAST week a meeting, presided over by Mr. T. A. Denny, was held, on the occasion of the opening of a Home in connection with the Institute for Post Office employés of the West and Paddington district. Addresses were given by Rev. E. W. Moore and Mr. E. J. Kennedy, who spoke of the good work, moral and spiritual, which is being carried on.

Miss M. D. Atthill, hon. secretary, said a few words showing the need of an institute of the kind, to help and influence for good the large number of young men and lads, on whose faithful and punctual performance of their laborious duties so much of our comfort depends. She pointed out the special claim they have on the sympathy of those living in the West district. Many have given their hearts to the Lord, and others, already Christians, have been strengthened in their spiritual life, and have come out brightly as brave soldiers of Christ.

THE FRUIT OF THE SPIRIT.

COME, Holy Spirit, heavenly dove,
And rule our lives with sacred love.

Our ransomed powers for God employ,
And let our lives abound in joy.

Cause strife, and sin, and woe to cease,
And send us, Lord, thy gift of peace.

When sinful wiles our hearts ensnare,
Long suffering grant the Cross to bear.

When vanity and pride elate,
Thy gentleness shall make us great.

And all who far from evil flee,
Thy goodness maketh liker Thee.

Whene'er our wandering spirits roam,
Thy faithfulness shall lead us home.

When anger renders blow for blow,
Thy meekness sweet shall keep us low.

When passion's storms would friendship rend,
Strong self-control thy loved ones send.

SANTAL CHILDREN.

BY REV. E. B. STILES.

THE Santals are one of the tribes that the country belonged to originally, but who have been driven back into the wilds that they now occupy, by more powerful peoples, just as the Indians of North America have been driven back by the whites.

Santal children, like their parents, are very black, much blacker than the Bengalis or Mussulmans that live near them. As a rule, their parents are very poor, so that they live on the very plainest of food, mostly boiled rice, with a little salt, or, if a little more fortunate, with a little curry made of some vegetable. These children are anything but idle. About the first work they begin to do is to take care of their younger brothers and sisters. When we go to one of their villages to preach, among those who come to hear the cornet or singing, may be seen a number of little tots of from four to eight years of age carrying on their hips other children of from a few months to two or three years old. It is a strange sight till one gets accustomed to it.

From the care of the baby the boys graduate to the care of the flocks and herds. Old men and women, and little boys are the shepherds among the Santals. It is most common to see small boys of eight years tending their fathers' goats, cows, or buffalo. They have to go out early in the morning, watch all day, and bring the flocks in at night. It is the rainy season now, and it rains nearly every day, and some days all day long; but this does not excuse the shepherd from going to the jungle with his flock.

I will try to tell you how he looks as he starts out in the morning. Beginning at the top, he has an umbrella; it is not a silk one, nor even a cotton one. If he is rich enough to pay five cents, he may have one made of closely-woven basketwork mounted on a bamboo stick; but the most common kind is a sort of a cape made of the long leaves of one kind of palm; this goes over the top of the head and down the back, to the knees. To see their backs one might think them a big leaf mounted on a pair of black feet. This is very handy, as it leaves the hands free, and it really makes a good protection. In his hand he carries a stick for driving the flock, which he knows well how to use; he also generally has a little flute, made from a joint of bamboo, with which he whiles away the time. In the cloth about his waist may be seen a large swelling, but it does not require the surgeon's knife to cure it, hunger will do that, for it is simply his lunch of parched rice. Add a pair of wooden sandals, and the Santal shepherd boy's outfit is complete.

I do not think that any English boy would like to exchange places with a Santal boy. I am sure that some of you will begin to wonder if the Santal boy has any play at all. He does, and he enjoys it very much. He likes fishing, and he will go as far and try as hard to make a fish take the grasshopper on his hook as any boy with a white skin. The most common way of catching fish is to dam up a little stream, and then set a trap so that the water of the stream will pass through, leaving the fish behind. He is also fond of hunting, and takes great pleasure in wandering about with his bow and arrows searching for birds.

At various times during the year the Santals have festivals called pârtâs. To these the old and young delight to go. The amusement consists in dancing and singing all night to the noise—I mean music—of very loud-sounding drums. On the whole, the Santal children are bright, happy, rollicking little creatures. The great majority of them do not know how to read, and they are so low down in civilisation that the Bengalis call them gadha—i.e., asses. But this is not their fault, it is rather their misfortune; and where they have opportunities they are fast proving themselves capable of learning as well as the more civilised races. They are not so quick as the Bengali, but they are more persistent, which makes up for the lack of quickness. It has been but a few years since schools were established for them, but a great deal is being done now. I have fifty schools containing them with nearly fifteen hundred scholars. They seem eager to learn, and they are a very hopeful class, because they are not bound by caste as the Hindus are, to prevent them from becoming Christians. Many are becoming Christians, and those who are working among them are expecting large ingatherings at no distant day.—New York Independent.

THE STORY OF A DWARF.

COME, children, gather round my knees,
And hear a tale from o'er the seas;
A story from the land of Spain,
Away across the rolling main,
Where noble men and noble dames
Died cruel deaths amid the flames;
And in their ranks, hunchbacked and small,
A dwarf, deformed, was first of all.

When Mary was of England Queen,
Oft-times the piled-up fires were seen
Throughout this land, their ruddy glow
Gleaming amid the drifting snow;
When at the stake, in iron bands,
The martyrs lifted claspéd hands.

So, where her husband Philip reigned,
In gay Madrid, the squares were stained
With blood of those who feared not death,
Confessing Christ with failing breath;
And all the Bibles priests could find
Were burned and scattered on the wind,
Until upon the Spanish ground
The Word of God could not be found.

Far off in Germany there dwelt
A hunchbacked little dwarf, who felt
The Master's love within his heart,
And longed to give to all a part
Of that great joy which filled his life
With rest and peace, and stilled all strife.
Hernandez he was named, a man,
So bent that all the children ran,
Whene'er he passed, to shout and peer.
Yet he was one who knew no fear,
And cared not when or where he went
If on his Master's errands bent.

So, when word reached him that the King
Forbade that any one should bring
A Bible any more to Spain,
Or read one in that land, on pain
Of death or long imprisonment,
He knelt and prayed; and then he went
To Switzerland, and thence he took
A load of copies of the Book.
And in the night he crossed the hill
Above the huts, where hushed and still,

The sentries watched, afraid to sleep
Lest any one should past them creep
To spread the story of the Cross,
Heedless of pain, or death, or loss,
And the small Book should enter there
With pedlar's pack or potter's ware.

A few months passed, and in a gaol
The dwarf was lingering, wan and pale,
For, tempted by a false spy's gold,
Or by the priests, a woman told
How through Seville the dwarf had passed,
And how the Book had been broadcast.
With rack and fire and cruel knife
They tortured him, until his life
Hung by a thread, trembling and weak.
But all in vain, he would not speak,
Though wealth was offered him to say
Who read the Bible day by day.
But, while he suffered in his cell,
A woman was won o'er to tell
The names of those who met by night
Around the Gospel's sacred light.

One Sabbath morn the sunlight sweet
Gleamed over many a crowded street,
For in the square the fires were laid,
And round them priests and troops arrayed,
With those who surged, as in the games,
To see the martyrs in the flames,
Hernandez, dwarf, tied to the stake,
Bade all his comrades courage take:
"For us our Lord his own life gave;
Let us for Him be bold and brave."
And then, afraid to hear his words,
They bound his mouth with cruel cords,
And piled the wood around him higher,
And lit the faggots' curling fire;
And shouted in their sinful bands,
When, shrivelled by the flames, his hands,
Clasped in the short last prayer, unclasped,
To close again when Jesus grasped
His servant, when the woe was done,
And said: "Thou good and faithful one!"

So in Seville Hernandez died,
And in the square, sunlit and wide,
With him eight gentle ladies brave,
Their dying testimony gave,
And, praising God with their last breath,
To glory passed through pain and death.

B.

SWISS WAITING-WOMEN.

THE following account of an interesting preventive work is taken from the Journal Bien Public, Neuchatel:—

During the summer months there is hardly a canton in Switzerland without its cantonal or federal fête, either for rifle-shooting or musical performances, whether singing or instrumental. These festivals always attract a great number of visitors. Large canteens or places of refreshment are erected, and a considerable supply of waiters and waitresses are enlisted towards the laborious work of ministering to the requirements of a large influx of people. Strangers admire the neat attire of the country girls, who add to the picturesque effect of the festivities by their national costumes; but has any one dreamt until this day of the numberless dangers to which these girls are opposed, chosen as they are for their pretty faces and ease of demeanour?

On the occasion of the centenary of the foundation of the city of Berne, the purveyors to the festival having required the services of from three hundred to four hundred waitresses, it was found that 150 of them came from outside, without any relatives or friends in the town who might take them in. But the Bernese Vigilance Committee had foreseen the case, and devised means of providing for these girls a place of shelter, combining all the conditions of moral safety. Within a short distance of the space devoted to the festivities is an Evangelical Seminary, one of the outbuildings of which was arranged as a vast dormitory. The Organising Board of the Festival undertook the expense of installation, and the Government placed ten police agents at the disposal of our Bernese friends, whose function was to escort the young women from the Canteen to the Seminary, and to watch the approaches of the building. These were assisted by four male members of the Temperance Society, who chivalrously devoted themselves to the protection of the young females during the fete.

Wherever festivals are organised during the summer months, it would be well for the local Committees of Vigilance to follow the example set by the Bernese, in providing resting-places for the waitresses. Could not such a praiseworthy example be followed in other countries, and wherever great numbers of waiting-women are required to minister to the needs of any large influx of visitors, such as seaside resorts, local exhibitions, musical festivals, &c., similar efforts be made to secure for them places of safe shelter for the night?

FROM M. COILLARD.

IN a letter to a friend, dated Sefula, December 7, 1891, this devoted French missionary to the Basutos refers pathetically to the death of Mrs. Coillard, and adds:—

"The work has become very difficult. The enemy raises all the dust he can and all kinds of opposition. He trembles for his power, and well he may. Already four of our young men have professed to have found the Saviour; one of them since Mrs. Coillard's departure. We hope the movement may not be stopped, though it is opposed in many ways.

"We have resumed our work. But famine has kept away the bulk of our pupils. We are soon to have the marriage of the King's son, the first Christian marriage in this country.

"Pray for your afflicted brother. The presence of certain friends comforts me not a little. But that of Jesus: how precious and real! One has said, 'It is worth while weeping to have the tears wiped away by his loving hand.'"

Messrs. Moody and Sankey.

VISIT TO LONDON.

On the two previous visits of the American brethren to this country London received a considerable share of their time and labours. The comparative brevity of this third visit has compelled them to relinquish the idea of any extended work in the great metropolis. This will cause disappointment to many, but in the circumstances it is unavoidable. Two districts in London which possess permanent memorials of the last London campaign of the evangelists, are Stratford in the East, and Wandsworth in the South-West, where mission halls were erected as the outcome of the special work engaged in eight years ago. Failing the ability to make any lengthened stay in the metropolis, Mr. Moody and Mr. Sankey agreed to have a few meetings at each of these two places.

WANDSWORTH.

Eight years, saving a month, have passed away since Mr. Moody laid the foundation-stone of Down Lodge Hall, which, through the generosity of Dr. Watney, was then being erected on the spot where the great iron hall was planted, in which the evangelists held their Wandsworth meetings. Since then Down Lodge Hall has been the centre of constant and varied effort among the people of the district, and there have been many sheaves reaped for the heavenly garner in connection with its operations. Most of the local friends who were active in the great mission there are still busy in carrying on the work.

Two days' meetings were arranged for the evangelists at Down Lodge Hall in the end of last week. Mr. Moody arrived in London early in the week, but private matters engrossed his time for a day or two. Mr. Sankey, being engaged at the Chester meetings of the C.E.S., could not be at Wandsworth till Thursday. On Wednesday evening Mr. Moody had a meeting in the hall, when admission was restricted to those connected with the regular mission work there. A large concourse gathered to greet the evangelist, who was heartily welcomed by Rev. Marcus Rainsford, Dr. Watney, Mr. W. M. Seaman, Mr. C. F. Davis, and other friends of bygone days.

Mr. Moody's address took the form of a Bible-reading on the book of Acts, and his words were mainly directed to workers, who were understood to compose the bulk of the audience. The ten great sermons scattered throughout the book were taken up in turn and commented on. The chief point urged by Mr. Moody was that Christian work and testimony, in order to be successful, must be carried out in the power of the Holy Ghost. He drew attention to the repeated instances recorded in the Acts when the Spirit's power was definitely experienced by the Apostles and those among whom they ministered. The need of Divine anointing for service is as great now as it was in those early days. As Pentecost, in Mr. Moody's view, was only a specimen-day, he exhorted the workers to see to it that in all their attempted service for Christ they have the gift of the Spirit that comes in answer to believing and united prayer. On the eve of the Church season of Whitsuntide, the utterance was one that would be specially acceptable to some; while it was a word of deep significance and perennial importance to all.

The Thursday and Friday evening meetings were more strictly on usual evangelistic lines. On Thursday afternoon Mr. Moody spoke on "Prayer," and a remarkably live and real prayer-meeting followed, when many hearts were unburdened at the throne of grace. The hall was very crowded on both evenings. Overflows were held at the Presbyterian Church near by, when Mr. W. R. Lane gave the addresses, and the word was manifestly with power. Mr. Sankey sang at all the meetings on these two days, including the overflows, and his songs were heard with the greatest interest. The new setting of "Rock of Ages" was given, and the grand old hymn was invested with a fresh attractiveness and profit. Some other new songs were given, as well as some that have now become old and fast favourites.

Mr. Moody's expositions and appeals, it need not be said, were marked by all the pathos and intensity and freshness that many of those hearing him remembered so well. His fund of happy homely illustrations served to drive home the statements of Gospel truth and to soften the hearts of the hearers. After-meetings were held on both evenings, and the workers were kept busy for some time. Even during this brief visit there was ample experience of the varied difficulties and hindrances that stand in the way of spiritual decision; but also of the marvellous power that lies in the word and promise of God to meet the needs and moods and cravings of the human spirit.

The work of our American friends was followed up by a short Gospel mission in the hall by Mr. W. R. Lane.

STRATFORD.

The visit of the evangelists to Stratford for the first three days of the present week was the signal for renewed interest in aggressive work. The mission opened on Lord's Day morning by a meeting for workers, beginning at nine o'clock and lasting about an hour. Christian people from the entire region made up the earnest audience which crowded the building. The visitors included a goodly number of evangelists and others visiting the metropolis, and several ministers found it possible to begin their day's labour by showing practical sympathy in the mission. The light and spacious hall occupies a site near the scene of the work of Messrs. Moody and Sankey in the district eight years ago. It was erected in order that evangelistic effort might have a home and centre in a very needy locality among a dense population. Naturally our American friends have all along taken a lively interest in an agency which is the outcome of their own toils; as Mr. Moody said at one of Sunday's meetings, they felt quite at home in the Conference Hall. Mr. Moody laid the foundation stone; now he enjoyed the privilege of using the building for its sacred purpose.

The workers' meeting began well before the appointed hour with a number of stirring melodies. Then Mr. Sankey gave "Throw out the life line." This piece has of late been sung frequently at meetings in Stratford, and all listened with pleasure to Mr. Sankey's powerful and pathetic rendering. The meeting was made up of those who profess to find joy in Christian service, and the song was as stimulating as it was obviously appropriate. Reading 1 Corinthians i. 18—31, Mr. Moody distinguished between foolish preaching and the foolishness of preaching.

The address dealt with God's commission to Moses in regard to the Israelites in Egypt, and was founded on Exodus iii. 10—12. By his renunciation of position and courtly honours in Egypt Moses became a fool from this world's standpoint, and was fit for God's use. At the age of forty he thought himself equal to great things, but now he asks "Who am I?" In the solitude of the desert, keeping sheep, he had become an abomination in the eyes of the Egyptians, but at the same time he had become fitted for God's use. Those who are thus trained and sent forth cannot experience failure. The rod in his hand was an instrument of power; and if God can link his power to a dried-up stick, he can extend it to the weakest of his servants. Moses was not eloquent, but he could deliver his message. Like others he parried with the Divine call, and after complaining that the people would not believe him, said "Send whom thou wilt," which meant "Send any one but me." Is not that the saying of nine-tenths of our church members to-day? Many are weak and cast down because their thoughts are turned upon themselves rather than rising to God and going out in the interest of others. It was when Job began to pray for his friends that his captivity was turned. If we use the talents we have, God will give us more. The meeting was inspiring throughout, the congregation dispersing with praise to God for timely words of stimulus and encouragement.

In the afternoon and evening the building was crowded, and hundreds were turned away. At the evening meeting Mr. Moody read Psalm xxxii., and prayed that the Great Deliverer from the bondage of sin might pass by, so that many might be emancipated into the liberty of the Kingdom of God. The longer I preach, he said, and the more I mingle with men, the more I am convinced that it is downright sin that keeps men from the kingdom of God. They talk of intellectual difficulties and so forth, but they will not face the fact that they must give up their sin. Heaven is a prepared place for a prepared people, and only those who have the heavenly nature can go there. God will have his children break with sin before He receives them. The way to God's favour has been opened by Christ, but repentance is the indispensable condition.

Having shown that to despise God's command and reject his invitation is to go further into sin, Mr. Moody exhorted his hearers to rely upon God's word that those who return with him shall be "abundantly pardoned." Citing the well-known epitaph: "I have sinned, I have repented, I have been forgiven, I shall rise, I shall reign," he firmly but tenderly urged its terms upon all, concluding with an earnest appeal to those who sin in secret as well as those who sin in the sight of men.

Mr. Sankey followed with "The Ninety and Nine," and the choir sang "Why not now?" As in the afternoon, many anxious ones entered the enquiry room, and were there encouraged to cast themselves upon the mercy of God, and direct their steps Zionward.

On the afternoons of Monday and Tuesday meetings were held for women only, and in the evenings for men only. In each case the large building was crowded, and such was the impression made that many attended the after-meetings. It is believed that spiritual blessing attended the converse of earnest Christian workers with many individual inquirers.

HULL.

Some time since a requisition, signed by fifty clergymen and ministers, came from Hull to Messrs. Moody and Sankey, inviting them to conduct a Mission in that town. Until last week a favourable response could not be sent. A large and influential gathering of ministers and laymen met on Saturday afternoon, and after a season of prayer formed themselves into a General Committee. From this an Executive Committee, to carry out details, was appointed; it includes: Rev. John G. Train (Presbyterian, Chairman), Rev. Canon McCormick (Vicar of Hull), Rev. J. F. Simmons (Vicar of Christ Church), Rev. W. Maltby (Wesleyan), Rev. A. E. Abel (Congregationalist), Rev. J. M. Murphy (Baptist), with Rev. J. Wright Moore (of St. Philip's) as Secretary, and two laymen from each denomination. Hengler's Circus, the largest building in the town, has been secured for the Mission, which commences this (Thursday) evening, and will last over the following Sunday.

After leaving Hull, Mr. Moody will probably visit Shrewsbury, another town not previously touched by the evangelists. Mr. Sankey will not be able to take part in these English meetings, as engagements in America call him home.

TENT WORK IN SOUTH DEVON.

Mr. J. C. Rainey writes: It will gladden the hearts of those who have been praying for us to hear how abundantly the Lord has given the Holy Spirit's seal to the preached word. At Ford there was a repetition of the revival of ten years ago; the specially interesting feature in the work being the number of young men under deep conviction, and the reality of their confession of Christ. Leaving Mr. W. H. Dawe to continue the meetings at Ford, I went on to Plympton, where the mission commenced with the additional stimulus of the presence of a number of fervent Christian platelayers, who were here to convert the broad to the narrow gauge on the Great Western Railway system. The men, who hailed from Oxon and Staffordshire, invited us to their huts. We went down at their breakfast hour, and preached to some eighty men that clustered around us, sitting on the line and on the railway embankment; we had a text in their work, and a ready, earnest attention. May God bless the seed sown. Two ladies also traversed the section on Saturday and Sunday, speaking individually to the men and distributing tracts.

The Lord has given us the joy of harvest here. During the latter days our little ante-room tent has been the scene of true seeking after the Saviour. There is a very happy co-operation of believers in the work.

On June 10th we propose, God willing, pitching at Cowley, near Oxford, revisiting the place where the Lord wrought salvation in so many last summer. We would ask much prayer for greater things.

REV. DR. PINDOR,

Pastor of the Evangelical Church of Austria, at Teschen, Silesia.

THE subject of our sketch this week is a pastor of rising influence in Northern Austria. He resides at Teschen, in the heart of the province of Silesia, and recently, on a brief visit to England, described his work at a meeting of the Evangelical Alliance.

Dr. PINDOR is about forty years of age, and a Polish native of Silesia. Humble in origin, he has risen to scholastic distinction, and now labours with sympathetic ardour among the community out of which he has sprung. At the age of eight he began to learn German, a step essential to the Pole who is resolved upon educational advancement. When quite young he began to preach the Gospel both in German and Polish. In order to qualify for effective pastoral work he prosecuted studies at Leipzig, and took the degree of Doctor of Theology.

There are in Silesia about fifty thousand Protestant Poles, and a few thousand Germans. They are descendants of men who held the simple faith of Christ in days when Rome the Persecutrix had her will in Central Europe. In the seventeenth century Christians who did not bow to the Papal shrine were hunted out of Austria, and the forefathers of the Protestants of to-day escaped with their lives, and maintained their evangelical integrity on the forests and caves of the country. The district of Teschen contains fourteen thousand Poles and a few hundred Germans, none of them rich, but gaining a livelihood as small farmers and workmen.

The oldest and nearly the largest evangelical place of worship in the entire empire is situated in the town of Teschen. It holds about six thousand people, and was founded in a time of severe oppression nearly two centuries ago. The history of the building is remarkable. In the summer of 1707 Charles XII. of Sweden passed through Silesia at the head of his soldiery, driving before him his adversary, August II., King of Poland and Elector of Saxony. A poor Protestant farmer determined to use the occasion for the good of his people. Going up to the Swedish king, he fell on his knees, and begged him with many tears to intercede with the Emperor of Austria on behalf of the persecuted Protestants of Silesia. Charles immediately sent a courier to the Court of Vienna, and awaited the answer. This was highly favourable, and the down-trodden remnant was permitted to erect six churches in which to worship. The spacious building at Teschen is one of these; the other five are in the Prussian part of Silesia.

Dr. Pindor and his co-pastors preach the Gospel in the Polish language Sunday after Sunday to an audience of four thousand souls and upwards. During fine weather residents in out-lying villages leave home as early as four o'clock in the morning in order to attend public worship. Then the church is often crowded, as many as six thousand people attending. Dr. Pindor has been settled in Teschen during the past fifteen years, and many thousands look up to him as the exponent of the Evangelical faith. He stands at the head of the list of scholars qualified for the post of Professor of Practical Theology in the Faculty of Vienna; but should the time come for him to be called to that Chair, his flock will not be slow to urge their peculiar spiritual needs as demanding his continuance in the pastoral office.

About ten miles from Teschen is the village of Trzyniec. Here there is a large iron factory, where more than eight hundred Protestant workmen are employed. Some of these, after spending the entire Saturday night toiling in the factory, go to Teschen on Sunday for Divine worship, starting of necessity at a very early hour. When they return home in the afternoon, it is to enter upon the "night shift" of work. When Dr. Pindor visits this village he addresses large congregations, generally from the passage of the school house. A spacious meeting house is sadly required, and towards the fund for its erection the people willingly give one day's wages per month. This represents a considerable sacrifice, for their wages are but small. The owner of the factory, Archduke Albrecht, has built a church for the Roman Catholics at an expenditure of half-a-million gulden—about £40,000. He has done nothing for his Protestant employés, beyond recently promising to give fifteen thousand gulden towards their church. The men themselves have already raised over ten thousand gulden —nearly £1000. A large building is an absolute necessity, and a considerable sum is required before the Archduke's offer can be claimed.

During the days of persecution—nearly two centuries ago—the estates of Protestants were confiscated, and the male descendants of wealthy families are now employed in the Silesian mines. Their living is very simple flesh-meat is rarely eaten, but, as among the Irish peasantry, potatoes are the staple item of food. When, therefore, it is said that the work of the Evangelical Church of Austria is self-supporting, it will be obvious that the Protestants of Teschen are walking in the footsteps of their faithful and indomitable ancestors. Though taxed for the public schools, which are under Roman Catholic management, they maintain their own schools about thirty in number. There is among this section of the Sclavonic race a warmheartedness and hunger for the truth which make the field highly promising as well as interesting. Dr. Pindor himself combines with these qualities much energetic earnestness. Feeling that his people need the sympathy of Christians in other lands, he has learned English, in order to be able to describe their condition and circumstances in the language which is so rapidly commanding the influence of an universal medium of intercourse in the civilised world.

Until 1849 Protestants were only "tolerated" in Austria. Now they enjoy freedom to worship God as they may desire, but, as may be concluded, they experience social disadvantages such as generally affect a minority. In the old days of "toleration" the people endured much that was quite intolerable. Though the ceremonies associated with births, marriages, and deaths might be performed by Protestant pastors, the dues must first be paid to the priests! No one could leave the Church of Rome to become a Protestant without first undergoing a course of instruction by the Papist "shepherd," whose anxiety for the "erring" soul brought out all his ingenuity and zeal. The stipulated term of "instruction" was six weeks, but the priests sometimes resorted to a singular device in order to harass those who were intending to desert the "fold." They would say: "Six weeks are forty-two days; you must come to me forty-two days. Come once every two months." That meant an extension of the "instruction" over a term of years, and doubtless these tactics were successful in tiring out some who would fain have left the Church of Rome.

These things are, happily, of the past, and the people enjoy a large measure of religious liberty. The Protestants are anxious to use it for the glory of God, and we pray, in doing so, they may be enabled to deliver many of their fellow-countrymen from the bondage of Romanism.

The Polish people are greatly indebted to Dr. Pindor for his contributions to literature. In addition to many tracts, he has written a "History of the Christian Church," and translated Merle-D'Aubigné's "History of the Reformation," also the "Imitatio Christi," by à Kempis, and a collection of sermons by Luther. In his own words, these literary exertions have been in the interest of "my Poles." He knows their need, and he exerts himself diligently for their instruction and enlightenment.

Naturally the work we have been describing excites the jealousy of Rome, and Jesuits do their utmost to cripple it. The "faithful" are warned not to read Dr. Pinder's books, and stringent measures are adopted to prevent them from being influenced by Evangelical truth.

We trust this important work will be remembered at the throne of grace, to the end that the labourers may enjoy the divine anointing, and the people be numbered with the true servants of God.

Army Chaplains.

As promised in our last issue, we now give a further instalment of the correspondence that has reached us on the subject of Army Chaplains and their attitude towards Evangelistic work. From considerations of space, we are compelled to omit matter that is not strictly relevant, confining ourselves to statements of fact, for which the writers are willing to vouch.

We may say that among all the letters before us there is not one in defence of the line of action taken by the Chaplain-General and those chaplains who are of the same mind in discouraging and thwarting any effort that is not on their own ritualistic lines. One chaplain writes that though he does not pretend that every chaplain is above criticism, he maintains that as a body they are earnest and whole-hearted workers; and gives extracts from letters sent to him by soldiers, thanking him for the interest he had taken in their spiritual welfare and the good they had received under his ministrations. This, however, has no bearing on the point at issue, as neither we nor any of our correspondents have denied that there are earnest and devoted servants of Christ among the chaplains.

Just on the eve of going to press we have received a communication from Major Poole, written in response to the letters that appeared in our last issue. It contains no new facts, however, except that in his previous letter he wrote not as an official of the Army Scripture Readers' Society, but as an individual interested in the question of Army work.

A member of the Royal Engineers, writing from Curragh Camp, Ireland, says: — As a soldier and member of the Church of England, I state with profound regret that it is a fact that tract distribution has been forbidden in this camp. I go further, and state that visits from a minister of the Church of England or a Scripture Reader are unknown things in this vast place. The soldiers' spiritual welfare is not studied as it should be. It has always been a matter of surprise to me, since I became a soldier, to see so little interest taken in the spiritual welfare of soldiers. We only see our chaplains once a week—viz., at church on Sundays.

A retired Warrant Officer writes: — During more than twenty years' service both at home and abroad, I have known very many of the chaplains, and almost to a man they were of the world, worldly, being regular attendants at all the dances, concerts, and other garrison amusements. Only one or two of them ever held a weekly Bible-class for the men. I have listened to hundreds of sermons preached by them Sunday after Sunday throughout those long years, but there was no Christ in them, no food for a hungry soul. Though I was a regular communicant for many years, I never received half-a-dozen visits from my military pastors, and at the station where my regiment was quartered for more than two years the chaplain did not call on me even once.

A Retired Officer writes:—Some years since, a Christian officer commanding a cavalry regiment started a Scripture Reader to work among the men in the barracks. His work was greatly blessed. The meetings were well attended, and many were converted to God. In consequence of this success, another officer determined to start one in his old regiment. He got the consent of the commanding officer, raised the necessary funds, and applied to the Army Scripture Readers' Society for a fit man. He was informed that the Chaplain-General had issued an order that no more Scripture Readers should be allowed to work in barracks—in fact, stopping all 'outside evangelistic effort.' It is only fair to state that this Scripture Reader had shown himself unsound on the question of baptism; but what I contend is, that this good work should not have been stopped on account of the failure of one man.

I quite agree with Major Poole that the Chaplain-General does well to be 'wisely and discreetly silent' as to the charges made in Truth, as they were proved up to the hilt, and have never been answered. As to his suggestion of asking questions in the House of Commons, he has only to read the evasive answer to Mr. Smith's question on the subject, given in The Christian of May 19, to learn how such questions are usually treated.

Dear Sir,—On seeing Major Poole's letter in your issue of May 19, I at once wrote to him asking one or two straight questions before rushing into print, but up to the present he has taken no notice of my letter....My own experience is that as the chaplains are becoming more ritualistic their antagonism to Christian work which is not strictly on Church lines increases in proportion. I coincide with every word Major Windham has said. I could many a tale unfold, but as I am still in the service, it is evident that I cannot enter into particular cases, as it would amount to bringing charges against officers of another department. I may say, however, that after thirty-six years' service the only assistance or encouragement I ever got from an Army chaplain was when a kind-hearted old bachelor invited me to spend a social evening with him once a week instead of going to mess, when we smoked our pipes, drank whisky-and-water, and wound up by his reading a chapter and a few collects.

I have no doubt there are "bright exceptions"; but, after over thirty years' Christian experience, and knowing scores of Christian officers, I do not know one who has been converted through the instrumentality of an Army chaplain. I only speak of chaplains of the Church of England, to which I belong. F. F. T. Hobbs (Lieut.-Colonel,)
Staff Paymaster, Carlisle.

Sir,—I regret extremely that I must differ from Major Evered Poole as to the antagonism shown to the work of ladies in the Army—I may say both the services. I may not enter upon the disputed question by whom such a spirit is fostered, though I have my ideas. The fact remains that it exists.

When Miss Robinson began her work at Portsmouth, one of the earliest if not the first meeting in connection therewith was held in my house. The Portsmouth papers of that day were full of evil prognostications as to such a movement, and many efforts were put forth to nip it in the bud. What Miss Robinson has done for the soldiers and their families is ample proof of the beneficent and God-honouring nature of the work, and is too well-known to need further remark.

Miss Wright at Dover has been closely treading in Miss Robinson's footsteps. Last November, when I was at Dover, I heard from her that she had been prohibited entering the Military Hospital. A lady had sent her a quantity of beautiful flowers with text-cards attached; she sent them to the Hospital, but they were returned. She then tried to get them taken in by a nursing sister, who succeeded after they were mutilated by the texts being cut off. By whose authority or direction this was done was unknown.

As regards the sister service, to which I have the honour to belong, an anonymous writer in The Times lately referred to Miss Weston's work in the strongest spirit of animosity, urging that the work of ladies was contrary to discipline &c. If the writer had ever listened to Miss Weston, or read her Blue Backs, he would, if he is generous, admit frankly that the whole weight of her influence is on the side of good order and naval discipline.

This seems to me a question which can never be settled either by official correspondence or in the Press; it calls for impartial investigation by competent authorities, and I trust it will not be long before such an investigation takes place.—Yours truly,
Henry D. Grant, Vice Admiral.

FRIENDS' YEARLY MEETING.

Last week we noticed London Yearly Meeting, which was in session as we wrote. It began on Monday, the 16th, by a series of meetings on "Ministry and Oversight." On Wednesday the yearly meeting proper commenced, and proved to be a remarkable time. After attending such annual assemblies for many years, we remember none equal to it in tone and in power. The sustained eloquence, burning earnestness, overflowing hopefulness, and missionary ardour, both in the business meetings and in those on special themes, may be said to mark this year as almost unique, and many a young heart has been cheered and encouraged in holy toil for God and humanity.

The figures for direct mission work, home and foreign, showed about £20,000 subscribed by Friends, besides many thousands more, towards the Russian Famine Fund, and also in addition to the local and educational work sustained in so many meetings. Is it any wonder that Friends are deeply interested in work so liberally supported by them? The tide seems rising year by year, and the hope was expressed that ere long many thousands would be added to our ranks. Much prayer had preceded the Assembly this year that the burning question of the Home Mission work might be wisely settled, and the widely expressed conviction is that the all-controlling Hand held the reins and guided the counsels of the Church to a wise and largely unanimous issue of the discussion.

A Conference in the autumn is to examine our Home Mission operations, consider the subject generally, and report ad interim, or finally, to next Yearly Meeting. The present committee was reappointed for one year, or till such report is produced.

The Missionary Helpers' Union is increasingly useful, and shows growth both in membership and in money, thus encouraging those who lead and support this active institution. The Home Mission Meeting on Tuesday, the 24th, was large and enthusiastic, and clearly indicated where the heart of the Society is on this momentous subject.

At the Friends' Temperance Union Meeting, on Wednesday evening, under the presidency of Arthur Pease, J.P., the addresses, including one by Lady Hope, were brilliant and powerful. It has seldom been our privilege to hear among such speeches anything to equal that delivered by Miss Richardson, of Bessbrook.

On Thursday a well-attended anti-opium meeting was held, and able and telling addresses were given by Miss Guinness, Dr. Maxwell, and others from China and India. Increased zeal must be the outcome. Meetings for deepening the spiritual life, for the young—both men and women—for united prayer every morning, and for "promoting the spread of the Redeemer's kingdom at home and abroad," characterised the yearly meeting throughout.

The concluding meeting on "Ministry and Oversight," on Friday, the 27th, terminated a series of memorable meetings, and Friends were able to return to their homes and work, with thankful hearts and increased confidence in a "prayer-hearing and answering" God and Saviour.

William Hodson.

MR. MEYER IN ROCHDALE.

At the invitation of the Committee of the Y.W.C.A., Rev. F. B. Meyer visited Rochdale last week, and conducted a three days' mission for the deepening of spiritual life. The meetings were most helpful and stimulating. Mr. Meyer's clear and forcible presentation of holiness teaching came as a revelation to very many; while his earnest, tender pleading for a complete surrender of the whole being to the Lord Jesus, awakened in many hearts deep longings for better things. All the evangelical churches of the town were well represented, and the oneness of the Church of Christ in Rochdale was strongly felt.

It is hoped that the movement so happily begun may be continued by means of united services from time to time, and may do much towards increasing and deepening the spiritual life of the town.

A short meeting for young women was held on Wednesday night, and one for young men on Thursday night. Those two meetings will long be remembered by those who were present.

THE MAY MEETINGS.

THE CHINA INLAND MISSION.

Meetings in connection with the twenty-sixth anniversary of this Mission were held on Tuesday week in the Mildmay Conference Hall. Doubtless many felt disappointed at the absence of the honoured founder, Mr. Hudson Taylor, who had been expected home in time for the meetings, but at the last moment telegraphed that he had been compelled to postpone his departure from China until the 9th of May. Mr. George Williams presided in the afternoon, and Mr. Theodore Howard read several portions of Scripture.

Mr. B. Broomhall explained the reason of Mr. Taylor's absence, and stated that a letter had been expected from him to be read at the meeting, but the mail had not come in. This letter would, it was hoped, be printed with the report of the proceedings. As to the missionaries, the number had largely increased during the past year. From England and Scotland thirty-eight fresh missionaries had gone out, from North America eleven, from Australia twenty-one, from the Scandinavian Alliance fifty, and from various parts of Europe thirteen; that is, seventy-one members of the C.I.M. and sixty-two associates, or 133 new missionaries last year; while fifteen have already gone this year. The total number of missionaries now labouring in connection with this Mission is 526 (some, of course, being at home at the moment). The income for the past year, home contributions, was £26,584, being £1800 less than last year; the funds received in America, Australia, China, and elsewhere have, however, largely increased.

Mr. George Williams referred to the riots and persecutions of the past year as the work of the old enemy, who seems to feel his hold in China is being endangered. He (the chairman) rejoiced to believe that altogether nearly one thousand China men and women were, last year, delivered from the power of Satan. As to the future, he believed that God has great purposes in the Y.M.C.A. as a recruiting ground for missionaries.

A letter from the veteran Mr. Reginald Radcliffe was then read.

THE HALF OF CHINA UNTOUCHED.

Rev. A. T. Polhill-Turner, re-calling the utterance of our Lord that when the Gospel shall be preached to all nations, for a witness "then shall the end come," took the word "e-n-d" as encouragement, need, and demand. Having worked since 1886 in North-East Si-chu'en, he had seen much development and many indications of the good hand of the Lord upon the whole work, even in cities where much opposition was at first offered. In illustration of the reality of the conversions, the speaker narrated instances of devotion and endurance, as, for example, during a serious illness of his own, and in many critical times. An aged woman (over eighty), when she heard he was coming home for a season, sent as her last message: "When you go home tell your people to come out to China and tell our young people of Jesus; because I am so old and dull. If I had known when I was young I might help others." Then as to the needs; these are simply overwhelming. The natural religions of Buddhism and Confucianism fail to satisfy man's cravings. The people in a sense unknown in this land are without God, without Christ, and have no hope in this world or the next. But are there not plenty of missionaries now? Plenty? The speaker had visited many, many great and populous cities in which a European missionary had never been seen before, and where the Gospel had never been spoken at all. The half of China is yet untouched to-day. As to the demand. God has entrusted us with the Gospel, and if we declare it not, shall not the blood of the heathen be required at our hand? As our Lord was sent, so has He sent us; but we do not go. We have heard of the call for a thousand new missionaries; while it is now said with truth that thirty thousand could easily be sent if only one was sent and supported by each evangelical congregation.

A MEMBER OF THE CAMBRIDGE PARTY.

Mr. Stanley P. Smith felt the responsibility of speaking on his experience because of the danger on the one hand of overstating things, and on the other of understating facts. After passing reference to the Cambridge Party of 1885 (of which he himself was a prominent member), Mr. Smith narrated swiftly his experiences since. In April, 1886, he began work in Shan-si. By means of a large map he described his pioneering visits to various cities in the provinces, and itinerations here and there with Messrs. Hoste, Bagnall, and others. He made special reference to the baptism at Hung-t'ung in April, 1889, of 216 converts, and told how recently he wrote to Mr. Hoste for particulars of these converts. After the most careful inquiry, it appeared that 50 had backslidden, mostly through opium, seven had been transferred, four were dead, twenty had in various ways been lost sight of, and 135 were still in full communion and leading consistent lives. Reference followed to the conferences in Shan-si, reported in Days of Blessing, to experiences with Mr. C. T. Studd and his brother in a time of serious illness, to settlement at Lu-ch'eng and the opening up of a new work, to his own marriage and then the sad death of his beloved wife, to various trials, disappointments, and hindrances, and to the abounding and abiding grace of God, who had been the faithful helper right through. We want, said Mr. Smith, praying, giving, and sympathy, but we want also many helpers to come out in pity over these great cities which, being without God, without Christ, without hope, cannot have these without preachers and witnesses.

MISS GUINNESS'S APPEAL.

Miss Guinness, in an address of great power and pathos, said she had in the last four years seen a great advance, nearly three hundred fresh missionaries having come to China, an upgrowth of interest in China, and a deepening hunger and thirst after God and the fulness of the Spirit for life and service. Trials and disappointments have but led the missionaries more deeply into the secret of abiding in God, and thus there has been rest in Him. With regard to the great need, our sister wished she could but bring her hearers into touch with the facts of the case, taking them with her up and down the great rivers, into the crowded cities, into the hearts and homes of the people, the real life of the women, with their joys and sorrows, their opium agonies, and into the mission rooms, classes, and quiet Christian homes. All this could not be done in a few minutes, but it was what Christians at home needed.

As to the immensity of the need, Miss Guinness put it in a fresh light. There are in the eighteen provinces 980 great governing walled cities, centres of literary and social life. For example, in Kansuh there are seventy-two such cities, and seventy of them are without a missionary. In Shen-si there are eighty-six great governing cities, thronged with men, and eighty-four of them have no missionary. In Honan there are 118 such cities, some of them the most important, and one being the most ancient city in China, and 117 of these have no missionary. In Si chu'en there are 140 such cities, and about 130 are without the Gospel. In Hunan and Kwang-si there are 175 such cities, and not one of them has a resident missionary. Some talk of the "Light of Asia," but there is no light there. Anything more dark, dismal, despairing than the faces of the people you never saw. Enter the temples and the shops, or walk the streets, and you are impressed with the utter hopelessness of all around you.

Then think of the accessibility of the people—marvellously so to women. One asked a Hindu, "Which of our missionary methods do you fear most?" "Why," was the reply, "should we give ourselves away by telling you? Still, I may. We do not fear your schools, for we need not send our children; nor your books, for we need not read them; nor your preaching, for we need not listen; but we do fear your women and your doctors, who win their way into hearts and homes."

Another thought in connection with the work in China is the marvellous suitability of the Gospel to their needs. It is so sweet to have such a message to tell them. Here (holding up a necklace, as it seemed, of coloured glass beads) is a Buddhist rosary, on which an old lady rested her salvation for thirty-five years, telling over many, many thousands of prayers. At length she heard of our services, and warned her son not to go near us. Yet she felt she must come and hear what we had to say. When she heard she declared it was just what she had wanted for so many years. Then she said to her son, "Go and hear every night, and come and tell me, for I am old." Now she and her son are most consistent Christians. I have been struck to notice how often it is that the first time people hear the Gospel they are touched—not always, but often. I could give you many such stories. Journeying on the great rivers, we generally at night moored amongst a crowd of other boats. The women would come on board to see us, and we would tell them as simply as we could how Jesus came to save; then they would go away, and oft in the stilly night I have heard them talking it all over; and repeating to themselves the little sentences we had taught them:—"Jesus can forgive sin." "Jesus can give us peace." "Jesus lovingly cares for us all our days." "Jesus will take us to heaven by-and-by." Many of these river-women I expect to meet up yonder. I want to say one thing more: I worked some years in the East-end before I went out to China; but I never met with more love, sympathy, and kindness than I have found from women in the interior of China. No lady, however timid, who is full of the Spirit of Christ, need fear coming to work for Him in China.

THE PROTESTANT ALLIANCE.

Enthusiastic and stirring meetings were held last Wednesday and Thursday in connection with this Alliance for the defence of the Faith and the maintenance of our Protestant liberties.

The Dean of Achonry, who presided on Wednesday morning, rejoiced to support a society having for its object the exposure of the damaging influence of Romanism. As an Irishman, he boldly asserted that it was not the race, the soil, nor the climate of his country that caused the trouble, but the religion, and that he was ready to maintain against all comers. In the north there was prosperity, in the west, where Romanism prevailed, there was distress. Romanism made slaves, Protestantism men. In view of the approaching General Election they must all work to help the cause of the Alliance, for if this country was to flourish and have blessing and prosperity, it must be conducted on Protestant lines.

Addresses on "The General Election" and "Education," were given by Mr. Mark Knowles, Revs. Alexander Roger, and James Neil, Mr. Robert Scott, Pastor F. B. Monti, and others. The Mayor of St. Ives (Mr. J. Wilson) offered to give fifty pounds towards a Protestant electioneering fund, if nineteen others would give a similar amount. Mr. Mark Knowles announced that there was a fund of nearly £500 already in hand, and that £1000 more was required. Mr. R. Scott, Mr. W. H. Peters, Deputy Surgeon-General Partridge, and a lady in the audience each promised fifty pounds.

In the afternoon General Sir Robert Phayre, who presided, briefly referred to the anarchy in the country, and the departure from the simple doctrines of the Scripture caused by the inroads of Popery. He urged them to hold fast to Protestant principles.

The Dean of Achonry, in moving a resolution deploring extension of Romanism, Ritualism, and Rationalism, said Rome was at the bottom of all the evils of Ireland, and it would be a bad day for England if she got hold of this country again. It was not until England became a Protestant country that she was able to face the world. When Queen Mary died, England did not own a foot of land abroad, and when Elizabeth came to the throne England began to prosper, until now our Queen reigned over a dominion on which the sun never sets. He appealed to his hearers to stand by the pure faith, and resist the encroachments of the enemy.

Professor J. Radford Thomson said the inroads of Popery during the last half century had been great, but the influence upon the people had been only slight in proportion to the efforts put forth. The mischief done was more by a betrayal of trust on the part of the clergy of the Church of England than by the Romish priests. What is wanted is more plain preaching.

Mr. C. A. Treyer Hill moved a resolution calling upon the ladies of England to give their aid and help to the Protestant Alliance. Mrs. Arbuthnot, in seconding, read several extracts to show the Romish teaching in connection with the English Church, especially referring to the Kilburn Sisterhood.

Miss Cusack (Nun of Kenmare) said it was a great fact that Rome was making aggressions in England, and soon either England would come under the control of Rome or she must bestir herself and drive Popery back. Protestant honesty is no match for Rome's duplicity.

At the evening meeting General R. F. Copeland Crawford, who presided, said the reason why the society had called them together was because of the dangers which threatened Protestantism. Rev. W. Kennedy Moore, D.D., referred to the political bearing of the question, and called attention to the attempt made to establish diplomatic relations with Rome some few years ago. Rev. W. Sinden was no alarmist. He did not believe Rome would ever again rule England, but it was necessary for men to make a conscience of all they did. There were men in Parliament professing to be Protestant who were not Protestants at heart. Addresses followed by Rev. W. Clark (Scottish deputation), Mrs. O'Gorman Auffray, and Canon O'Connor.

THE GREAT DEMONSTRATION.

Mr. T. A. Denny presided at the public meeting held on Thursday evening, and gave a manly and vigorous address on the Protestant principles. Had we but eighty stalwart, out-and-out men of God and of prayer in the House of Commons the inflow of evil would be stayed. The conflict is, he said, momentous:—Protestantism versus Popery; light versus darkness; liberty versus lawlessness; Christ versus priesthood. The Chairman closed with a telling description of what he had himself in the way of dark confessionals in certain High Churches at Brighton and Kilburn.

Mr. W. Johnston, M.P., devoted his tremendous energy and power to an exposition of the evils of the Bill brought in by Mr. T. O'Brien for the abolition of the safeguards to the Protestant succession to the throne. He deplored the indifference and even hostility of the Press to the Protestant principles of England and the tendency of politicians on both sides the House to parley with Rome.

The Dean of Achonry showed forcefully how Romanism has been trying to win back the power she lost at the Reformation. The land which is under the thumb of Rome is blighted and ruined.

Rev. J. D. Mc Culloch (Scottish deputation) declared that the namby-pamby preaching of the present day is simply paving Rome's way. Those who are grounded in the Word of God are in little danger of being ensnared by Rome; but if the Scriptures be ignored, and the people hear nothing but platitudes and human speculations, they are ready to fall at the first assault.

Mr. B. Nicholson, in a vigorous speech, said that if there was anything more dangerous to this country than Romanism it was Ritualism.

Canon O'Connor followed, in what proved to be the speech of the evening. His leading idea was that he opposed Rome, and demanded that the Protestant succession should be maintained, not because it was a rival religion, but because it was a rival government. The monarch who is a Roman Catholic is a vassal of a foreign prince. He defined Protestantism as—No Pope between the subject and sovereign, no priest between the conscience and Christ. If in this land and people this anti-Christian power gains domination, the course of history will be reversed, and the Dark Ages will be upon us once more.

THE PEACE SOCIETY.

At the annual meeting of this Society it was reported that a year of great activity had just passed, both with reference to platform and press. Over seven thousand requests to clergymen and ministers were sent out by the Society asking for special peace sermons on the Sunday before Christmas, with the result that two thousand such sermons were reported to have been preached. The report went on to notice the various instances in which arbitration had been successfully resorted to. The work of the Peace Society's auxiliaries over all the world was also reviewed.

Sir J. W. Pease, Bart., M.P., who presided, said he had been at first inclined to think the report had been painted in too roseate hues, because of the tremendous amount of time and money spent in war preparation. Yet when he took into consideration the triumph of arbitration that had so lately been celebrated, and when he held in his hand the papers that he had received in the House of Commons, which showed that England and the United States had come to a settlement with regard to the Behring Sea seal dispute, he could not help thinking that progress had been made. When they took into consideration the fact that the standing army was kept doing next to nothing at an enormous expense, it seemed high time that the people should step in and demand that all disputes should be settled in a peaceful manner.

Rev. W. Mottram remarked that a morning journal had poked fun at the Society for its action, and asked if it were improper to read of the victories of Wellington, how could it be proper to read of the victories of Joshua in the Old Testament? He was not aware that the Society had ever condemned the reading about the victories of Wellington, but it preferred subjects of peace. Even in Joshua, however, war was condemned as much as by the Peace Society. If they would refer to Joshua xxii. 12 they would read:—"And when the children of Israel heard of it, the whole congregation of the children of Israel gathered themselves together at Shiloh to go up to war against them." Their blood was up, but, nevertheless, they sent an ambassador in the person of Phineas, the high priest, and met their brethren on the other side of Jordan, and talked it over, receiving satisfactory explanations. The result was that they shook hands over it and rejoiced and praised God, for in the thirty-third verse we read: "And the thing pleased the children of Israel; and the children of Israel blessed God, and did not intend to go up against them in battle to destroy the land wherein the children of Reuben and Gad dwelt." That was the very essence of the Peace Society, that people should meet together and arbitrate, instead of flying to war without consideration as to whether or not there was a better way.

Other speakers were Mr. Hodgson Pratt, the Dean of Winchester, and Rev. Newman Hall.

GEORGE YARD MISSIONS.

Mr. Holland's friends rallied round him well on the evening of Monday week, when the annual meeting was held, the Earl of Harrowby presiding. Much interest was awakened in the presence of a number of motherless girls now being trained at Nonington Hall for domestic service.

Mr. George Holland, that beloved veteran of ragged schools, read an interesting report, which began with a review of the origin and past history of the work, and proceeded to describe the Day Nursery, the Ragged Day Schools, and Industrial Classes of all kinds, the Sunday-schools and Bands of Hope, and various agencies; as also the shelter for children, where, it is stated, "we have sheltered many dear boys and girls during the year. Sometimes in our meetings and schools children are present who would be walking about at night without a dwelling-place; such are admitted. Others are sheltered waiting for admission to a permanent 'Home,' when vacancies occur; or some one is sick at home, so for a short time the children are cared for; or a loved one has died, her poor body lies in the one room where the family must live, eat, drink, and sleep; they are, therefore, constantly reminded that a dear one has passed away; at such times we have sheltered the children. During their stay proper and sufficient food is supplied three times a day; they are clothed, cared for and attended to, until they are given back to their friends, or some good home provided for them.

"The hearts of widows have been made glad, their children have been nourished, and at last returned to their mothers, who have made a home again, and gathered their dear ones around them once more.

"The work among young women and elder girls is one of the most precious and prosperous agencies we have in hand for Christ. The Lord has smiled upon and manifestly owned our labour among our young friends. We remember with gratitude that He has won to Himself many precious souls; their lives speak plainly that they are living out Christ. Our hearts are cheered when we think of this noble band of young Christians; some of them are already working for Jesus. They are working and praying ones, they are blessed in their own souls, and made a blessing to others.

"The numbers in connection with our classes and meetings are still large; a good and lasting work is being done for the temporal and spiritual good of the young people." Details followed of various branches and classes both for young women and young men. Deeply interesting accounts are also given, and the work among the adult poor. We trust this report will be read widely.

The Earl of Harrowby said he remembered that place thirty years ago, when it was in a very different condition to what was the case now. When they thought of what Mr. Holland had done during those thirty-eight years, it was, indeed, a source of constant wonder. The whole of the neighbourhood showed unmistakably the result of the work. What a wonderful work it was! He often wondered what was the real key of Mr. Holland's success under God. Was it that he had been devoted to art, to literature, or anything of that kind? No. The whole of his work was founded on a much more secure foundation than that. Let them remember what it was when he first came to that neighbourhood; the great amount of opposition that he had to overcome, and the misery, degradation, and poverty around him. It was all very well now to rejoice with him in his success, but let them remember the keen struggles of those early days. The great reason for his success had been the fact that he took heart from Holy Scripture. The constant reliance of Mr. Holland on the Bible had given him courage and strength, together with the most tender-hearted sympathy, and that had been the key of his success. They might rest assured that, however great the influence of churches, art, literature, or music; to change the hearts of the great masses of the people, and raise them up to a better life, as had been done there, they must begin, as God had told them to begin, with his own Holy Word. All philanthropic and religious work was built on that one sound foundation—God's Holy Word. There was one talent which Mr. Holland possessed in a marvellous degree. He had not only succeeded in making dark homes happy, and raising the standard of life in one of the poorest of localities, but he had also succeeded in bringing the West of London to the East. People talked very glibly of that now, but who was it who succeeded it bringing people of wealth, leisure, and cultivation to the East-end, to devote their time, wealth, energy, and talents to the raising of those who had lost hope? The pioneers were the late Lord Shaftesbury and Mr. George Holland. He rejoiced at the great and grand work which was being carried on there.

Rev. E. Sanders, Rector of Whitechapel, observed, in the course of a vigorous address, that he was not surprised that no appeal had been made for funds. If God sent people, as He had sent people, to carry on that work, they might rest assured that he would also send the means with which to carry it on. The work carried on there in Whitechapel was eminently God's work, and God would prosper it. He believed that the work of that mission, and the work of the church of which he was the rector, could go, and would go, hand-in-hand, as it was one and the self-same work. There was plenty of work for both the Church and the Mission, and all that they needed was that Christian workers might be sent by the thousand, in order that the teeming mass of Jews and Gentiles inhabiting that neighbourhood might be brought to a knowledge of the truth.

Brief addresses followed by Mr. T. A. Denny, Revs. J. H. Scott, F. J. Hobbins, T. H. Steen, and Messrs. R. J. Curtis, W. H. Seagram, and others.

THE CHRISTIAN EVIDENCE SOCIETY.

The Right Hon. the Lord Chancellor who presided at the annual meeting of this Society, held on Wednesday in last week in Zion College, said that there was in the present day much learned ignorance, and though it was true that the Bible was its own best evidence to the humble, yet it was needful to show how eminently reasonable Christianity was. Such, in past times, had been the work of Butler, Locke, and Magee. Really, modern difficulties were very old, and had been in the early ages of the Church refuted by the keenest intellects. Nowadays, objections were dressed up in the form of a romance, and even spread broad-cast in magazines and reviews, and unwary readers were in danger of being led astray. Hence the need of an association like the Christian Evidence Society. As regarded science, if science and the Bible were both from God they could not disagree. Whatever a novel writer might say, he would say, "Read the Bible, understand the Bible, and the Bible will make you free."

Rev. T. T. Waterman (Secretary) presented a summary of the report, showing what had been done in London, the provinces, and India. It was pointed out that religious controversies are always changing their subject and form, and the society's work during the year had covered a defence of the divine inspiration and authority of the Bible, with lectures on Theosophy, concerning which a great controversy had been raging. The yearly examinations in Christian evidence were still greatly valued, and grants of literature had been largely made by the Society.

Rev. Principal Wace, D.D., in the course of a thoughtful address, maintained that Christian belief did not turn principally on science, but on the great moral conflict between good and evil. What the Chairman had said as to the Bible being its own best evidence was equally true of Christ Himself, and that was why the Church itself must always be the chief and best Evidence Society, for in setting forth Christ it was defending his religion. But the most devoted Christians were by their very labours hindered from deep study, and so a special society was necessary.

For, as there was true learning as well as learned ignorance in opposers, so Christianity had always specially claimed to be reasonable. In the present day criticism was a great battle-field. Some people thought that all the learned critics are against Christianity, but it was by no means so. He concluded by calling attention to the Apostle's words: "Sanctify the Lord God in your hearts, and be ready always to give an answer to every man that asketh you a reason of the hope that is in you, with meekness and fear" (1 Pet. iii. 5), words which seemed to be prophetic of our needs.

Rev. Alex. Mackennal, D.D., felt that great stress should be laid on the importance of declaring as well as defending the truth. He laid still greater stress on Christ being recognised more and more as both the centre of attack and defence. The more scientific the arguments, the more Christ became prominent. He was the great attraction to earnest sceptics, the great inspiration to earnest believers. He told a most interesting story of a French scientist insisting on the wonder of the peasant of Nazareth being the Son of Man. Old evidential books were not out of date, but later ones showed men living forces. The Christian Evidence Society had to present the Christian consciousness as an argument; many an unbeliever was strongly drawn to Christ, but afraid to come without his reason being satisfied; let them then satisfy that man's intellect; although, after all, most were doubtless moved through heart and conscience.

Rev. A. J. Harrison, B.D., briefly referred to recent experiences as Evidential missioner of the Church Parochial Mission Society, stating that he found the clergy and ministers in the provinces really desirous of counsel as to the best way of dealing with unbelief. He thought that every summer there might be such gatherings for enquiry at Oxford and Cambridge, and he declared his conviction that the overwhelming majority of sceptics desired to believe. At Cambridge last winter he saw 120 undergraduates privately; all but one wished sincerely to believe.

The other speakers included Rev. Blomfield Jackson, Mr. Abel Smith, and others.

STRANGERS' FRIEND SOCIETY.

The Annual Meeting of this ancient Society took place on Monday at Exeter Hall. The report stated that the Society's work to-day was fitly described in a newspaper of seventy-two years ago, in which it was then referred to as "exploring the abodes of want and wretchedness in the obscure lanes and alleys of the metropolis, administering temporal relief to those who are perishing and leading them to serious reflection and consideration of the truths of the Bible." The great aim of its 230 voluntary visitors of both sexes is still to raise as many as possible from the condition into which adverse circumstances have brought them. The mere name of the Society, "The Strangers' Friend," is to many a beacon-light in surrounding darkness, and attracts all sorts and conditions of people for advice and guidance. Its offshoots are many; the latest news comes from Honolulu, where a branch has for years flourished. Rev. C. M. Hyde (of the Board of the Hawaiian Evangelical Association) writes of it as being engaged in every form of Christian benevolence. Such branches are planted in many parts of the world, as well as in many of the provincial cities of our own country. The Society, like many other institutions doing valuable work, is crippled from want of funds.

The Chairman, Mr. J. H. Anderson, pointed out that the Society had been doing for over a hundred years what politicians of all shades are now urging every one to do, viz., to care for and regard with every consideration the struggles of the poor for a better existence. Mr. W. C. Collins said this was one of the most Christlike efforts he knew of. He urged all present not to play at slumming, but to go as the messengers of the Lord Jesus and with the Gospel take to the poor, blankets, boots and shoes, and bread and butter. Never button up the pocket because there are so many impostors. Don't forget the respectable poverty about us. Don't be afraid to look into the cupboard of such, though the window and blinds, and table covering may be clean. Let the people see that religion is a practical thing.

Mr. H. Swaffield said a remark in the report in reference to legacies had been an inspiration to himself, and he would not forget the Society in that respect. Mr. Edward Hughes said a poor man living in one of the worst neighbourhoods in the South of London, once remarked to him, "You don't know how much your coming amongst us as the Society's visitors are constantly doing keeps us from evil of a serious kind. He believed if Christians would only do more of such visiting it would be a powerful antidote to the murmuring of certain classes about us at the present time.

HOMES FOR WORKING GIRLS.

The annual meeting in connection with the Homes for Working Girls in London was held on Tuesday, May 24, at Lincoln House, York-place, Baker-street, Mr. John Shrimpton, the honorary director, presiding. He said the society had nine homes, accommodating over five hundred young persons engaged in business houses, and the homes were made so entirely home-like that young girls coming to London as entire strangers at once felt at home in them. Two thousand young women had been in the homes during the past year, and since the first home was opened no less than sixteen thousand had been received, who in a great many cases came to London friendless, and found friends and counsellors in the superintendents, who took the place of mothers to the inmates. During the year the young people had contributed no less than £6400 for their board and lodging, thus showing how they helped themselves. No young person was admitted who was not thoroughly respectable. Employers had come to feel the influence of the homes, and the confidence they had therein was shown by the number of applications for young women and girls from the homes. During the whole time the homes had been open there had never been any epidemic in them. The committee were quite ready to open another home at the West-end if some kind friend would give them a start with £1000.

The meeting then took the form of praise and devotion, in which Rev. H. J. Berguer, Rev. J. Philip Hobson, General Sir R. Phayre, Mr. H. W. Maynard, Dr. Gordon Brodie, Mr. Daniel Wellby, Mr. W. H. Serle-Smith, and others took part.

METROPOLITAN TABERNACLE COLPORTEURS.

The anniversary meeting of the Colportage Association, founded by the late Mr. Spurgeon some twenty-five years ago, was held at the Metropolitan Tabernacle last week. Rev. J. A. Spurgeon, who presided in the afternoon, gave an address to the men on the passage, "The iron did swim." The importance of the work was emphasized, and the men were encouraged to bear up and go forward in God's strength in face of inevitable difficulties and discouragements. When they worked in God's strength and with God's help to rescue lost characters, they made the iron to swim. In the country at large, colporteurs were helping to raise up that which would otherwise sink down.

A number of the colporteurs followed with brief testimonies; for example, Mr. Beet, of Greenwich, gave some interesting experiences he had had in connection with his work, telling of the difficulties he had to encounter in Greenwich as a result of the drinking habits of many of the people there. He emphasized the importance of "hammering away at people till they were persuaded to purchase." Mr. Hodge, of Witton, spoke of a lady belonging to the Church of England who had derived great spiritual blessing from the perusal of Mr. Spurgeon's sermons. Mr. Allon, of Swadlincote, instanced the case of a poor man who, rather than do without some of the literature which he sold, had been willing "to eat his bread without butter." Mr. Harris, of Cardiff, mentioned the interesting fact that in the Rhondda Valley there was scarcely a grocer's shop where there was not a likeness of the late Mr. Spurgeon to be seen. He also stated that his sales during the past year had realised £213. Others of the colporteurs who made statements were Mr. Bridger, of Horsell, Mr. Rhodes, of Borrowbridge (Yorkshire), Mr. Hewitt, of Arundel, and Mr. Macey, of Fairford.

Rev. H. J. Harvey, of Great Totham, Essex, bore strong testimony to the value of colportage work in villages. In some instances the colporteur was the only Christian visitor in a village; and it was found that when the poor people spent something in books they spent less in things more harmful.

In the evening Rev. J. A. Spurgeon, who again presided, said the society was salting the country. Satan had his agents in all the villages, spreading pernicious literature, and what the colporteurs did was to create a relish for good wholesome reading by visiting, preaching the Gospel, and circulating the Scriptures, books, and magazines. He then presented Mr. Spurgeon's work, "The Treasury of David," to Mr. King, who had been twenty-five years a colporteur.

Rev. A. T. Pierson, D.D., followed in a stirring address on salvation as a means to an end—we are saved to serve. He appealed earnestly on behalf of colportage work.

Rev. W. Corden Jones (Secretary) presented the annual report, which began with sorrowful reference to the irreparable loss which the Association had sustained in the removal of its honoured and beloved President. During the past year the sales had reached the highest point since the starting—viz., £11,255 0s. 6d., an increase of £275 17s. 8d. upon the previous year. As there was no endowment of any kind, the extent to which the work could be maintained was absolutely dependent upon the gifts of friends.

THE PENTECOSTAL LEAGUE.

The Pentecostal League, which has its headquarters in Speke Hall, Battersea, is one of the many organised efforts to lead Christian people to recognise the Holy Spirit as the immediate source of Christian life and godliness. Founded by Mr. Reader Harris, it is conducted with much vigour (although some of its adherents come very near perfectionist teaching), and the first annual meeting, held in Exeter Hall, was attended by members from the various branches far and near. The large room was crowded, and ministers and workers of all denominations supported the speakers on the platform.

After prayer by four leaders in the mission, two ladies and two gentlemen, Mr. Reader Harris read 2 Peter i. 1-11, interpolating expository remarks. He insisted upon Christians being and doing what God would have them be and do. We talk about revival—coming to a state of living again. The Word of God revives the believer. How shall we reach the masses? God reaches the masses through his people, and the cause of so much failure in evangelistic effort is that a lot of half-saved people preach to altogether lost sinners. "The heathen shall know that I am the Lord, saith the Lord, when I shall be sanctified in you before their eyes." Let God sanctify us before the heathen, whether they wear a black coat or a black skin. Mr. Harris declared this to be the aim of the Pentecostal Mission, and its object to be the spreading throughout the land a knowledge of full salvation.

Mr. F. W. Crossley, of Manchester, exhorted his hearers to be real in Christian life, and to love one another. These are secured by living near to Christ, and by being indwelt by the Holy Spirit.

Mr. R. F. Horton, of Hampstead, in a stirring address, said the great weakness of the Church lies in this: that so many professing Christians have not experienced that remarkable change of spirit that is produced by the sanctifying influence of the Holy Ghost. He described the unity of the Spirit as of supernatural origin, and not only full of joy, but full of power. The doctrine of holiness has been always a mark of a progressive and victorious Church. Whenever that doctrine has been lost sight of, the Church has been paralysed; whenever it has been recovered, there has been a revival. It is not the Church but the Spirit that saves the world.

Warning his hearers against perfectionist teaching, Mr. Horton said: I would urge upon my brothers and sisters not to attempt to rest this movement upon abstract definitions, but to bear in mind continually that it is above all things a practical, definite, and actual work of the Spirit with which they are concerned. As far as my observation goes in reading the history of the Church, there has never been a period when men have begun to speak of themselves as sinless but almost immediately a terrible reaction has followed. Directly you take your eyes away from the Source of the cleansing power, to look at yourself to see how you are, the danger begins and the heresy will grow. In conclusion Mr. Horton quoted 2 Cor. vi. 16: "Ye are the temple of the living God; as God hath said, I will dwell in them and walk in them; and I will be their God, and they shall be my people." Further, he called attention to the opening verse of the succeeding chapter: "Having therefore these promises, dearly beloved, let us cleanse ourselves from all filthiness of the flesh and spirit, perfecting holiness in the fear of God."

Rev. G. D. Watson, D.D., who was simply described as "of America," followed with a vigorous address on the life of surrendered service. He has evidently given much study to his subject, but the evening was so far advanced that his remarks had to be compressed within a few minutes.

NATIONAL REFUGES FOR DESTITUTE CHILDREN.

On Tuesday week, the forty-ninth annual meeting of these refuges, homes, and training ships for destitute boys and girls was held in Exeter Hall, when a large number of the children were present; also the boys' band from the training ships.

Mr. H. Bristow Wallen, the Secretary, presented a report, from which it appeared that since the starting of these refuges, 12,575 boys and girls have been admitted, and 11,145 placed out in the world to earn their living. This is a good record of one of the pioneers in ragged-school work. The object always kept in view is the rescue from the streets of orphans and neglected children, who are properly educated, some in the various homes in Shaftesbury-avenue, Twickenham, Bisley, Sudbury, and Ealing, and in the training ships Arethusa and Chichester, off Greenhithe. These, by the way, are not reformatory ships, as some people imagine. The homes and ships provide accommodation for one thousand inmates. During the past year 116 have joined the Merchant Service and Royal Navy. The boys in the homes on shore are trained in tailoring, shoemaking, carpentering, gardening, and farming, whilst the girls have to do all the household work in connection with the homes. The school work is under Government inspection. Owing to the expenditure incidental to the many agencies, there is a balance on the wrong side of the account amounting to £4895 12s. This sum is exclusive of £2800 still remaining due on the mortgage upon the new home in Shaftesbury-avenue. These liabilities the committee are most anxious speedily to liquidate. It was felt, the report declared, that the committee had lost a great friend by the death of their late secretary, the founder of the refuges, Mr. W. Williams, who for nearly half a century was secretary, and latterly vice-president.

Lord Herschell, who presided, bore witness in a very forcible address to the great work of the late Mr. Williams, remarking that the refuges, which had now grown to vast proportions, commenced in a small way by their friend enlisting the sympathies of a few personal friends in the work he had at heart. The past year had been one of quiet work and steady progress. The boys and girls who had passed out of the homes were sending constantly to their friends abundant proofs of the value of the training given at the homes.

Warmly sympathetic addresses followed, by the Dean of Norwich, Canon Nisbet, and other friends.

THE TURKISH MISSIONS AID SOCIETY.

The annual meeting of this Society was held in the Council Room, Exeter Hall, on Monday afternoon, Lord Kinnaird presiding. The Report, presented by Rev. J. T. Brown, D.D. (secretary), referred to the deep interest which must ever attach to work in the lands of the Bible. It was shown how the Aid Society was formed to co-operate with the American missionaries who had undertaken the heroic task of evangelising the East. The Report went on to give some brief account of missions at work in Turkey in Europe, Central Turkey, Armenia, Persia, Syria, Palestine, and Egypt, urging that now doors are open to the Gospel as they have never been since the crescent has ruled these lands, and as they may never be again.

Lord Kinnaird spoke on the gratifying increase of interest in missions generally. As to the East specially, the noble work of the American missionaries was worthy of all praise and of the warmest support. Events around us seem to point to the nearing return of the Jews to their own land, and consequently a deep and vital interest attaches to those labourers who are seeking to make known the Gospel among the Eastern peoples.

Rev. Edward White, D.D., said he had been acquainted with the work of the Society since its commencement, and he did not think that in the whole history of missions there has been anything equal to the wonderful work of the American missionaries. Their enterprise and success has been marvellous, and it is a high privilege to be able to assist them as this society does. Passing on, the speaker dwelt on the difficulties peculiar to missions to Moslems, holding that the simple language used by the Apostles should be adhered to, and refined points of doctrine should be avoided. Great stress should also be laid on the humanity and sympathy of Jesus. While looking only for the final triumph when the Lord Himself returns, Dr. White maintained it was our evident duty to spread abroad the Gospel, and thus prepare the way of the King.

Mr. Robert Scott told how his interest in this work had been awakened years ago, and how he watched sympathetically its progress. He had been reading with interest an advance copy of the new report, and several points he had noted as worthy of special emphasis. Amongst these he called attention to the hindrances in the way of the Gospel, and the sad condition of the Eastern churches. After some reference to work in Bulgaria, and the labours of Mr. Krikor Behesnillian and Pastor Jacob, Mr. Scott concluded by warmly commending the work of the Turkish Missions Aid Society.

Rev. J. Lawson Forster could not help feeling that England in one sense is badly fitted for evangelisation, inasmuch as she has been at war with all nations. In a stirring passage towards the close of his address, the speaker showed that Priestcraft and idolatrous symbols and ceremonies must prove valueless amongst Mohammedans. The truth was that were the Apostles to revisit the earth, there was no place where they would feel so strange as in our churches, with their ecclesiastical furnishings and absurd millinery. A few earnest words followed on the privilege of self-denial for the Lord's work.

Brief words were spoken by Rev. James Neil and others.

THE MONTHLY TRACT SOCIETY.

The annual meeting of this Society was held on Tuesday week in the Council-room, Exeter Hall. The report submitted by Mr. J. R. Mackenzie (Secretary) stated that twenty-four new tracts had been issued during the year, that free grants had been sent to help many societies and workers, from whom very encouraging testimony had been received. For instance, an Army Scripture-reader, speaking of tract distribution among militiamen, wrote:—"As one result, the men are most interested and grateful; their conduct was excellent last year, and during the training not a single man was brought before the magistrates. A great deal of swearing and drinking was checked, and the men were not only anxious to receive the tracts, but read them with interest, and commented on the contents." In connection with the work of distribution in foreign fields, it was stated that new doors were constantly opening in all parts of the world, the latest parcel having gone to the Malabar Coast. There were also urgent appeals from Mount Morgan, Queensland. In Spain Mr. Fenn was carrying on the work of posting tracts to the upper classes.

Mr. George Williams, who presided, rejoiced exceedingly that the work was progressing. The influence of no tract could be lost. They could not tell where it went or what it did. They wanted more courage in this matter, for they had many things to cheer them on. They would remember that one of the foremost, most eloquent, and earnest clergymen now at work in London was won to Christ by a tract. Tract distribution was a work that every one could take part in, and he thought they could have no higher privilege than that of scattering the Word of Life far and wide.

The Dean of Achonry said that he had come from that most distressful country, as it was called, Ireland. He was a tract distributor; indeed, he never set out without a bag of tracts, which he distributed to all whom he came across, and he had never had one refused. He always travelled third-class for the sake of speaking to the people. He thought there was every reason for them to be encouraged in their work, for God used tracts like arrows. He was very fond of enclosing tracts in letters, and he had found those issued by that Society admirable for the purpose.

General Sir Robert Phayre cordially endorsed everything that had been said that night, proving the power of tract distribution. He had been a tract distributor for more than forty years. With regard to what had been called the higher criticism it was, he believed, the most absurd thing possible, for it was diametrically opposed to every syllable of the Bible. The Society circulated pure doctrine, and he hoped that the effort contemplated at the Chicago World's Fair would be well supported, for they might be sure that every shade of infidelity would be propagated there.

Amongst other speakers were Rev. Pedr Williams and Mr. Stabb.

FRIENDLESS AND FALLEN.

This year Mr. Edward W. Thomas and his committee decided to hold the annual meeting of the Institution in the Holloway Home connected with it. Friends had an opportunity, by this means, of catching something more than a glimpse of the work and the manner in which it is done.

Mr. George Williams presided at the afternoon gathering. The Secretary presented an outline of the report, which showed that the total admissions during the year had reached 946. Of the Preventive and Reformatory cases, 215 had come from the Open All Night Refuge.

The Chairman, in his address, said he considered that Mr. Thomas and his friends were doing a most excellent work for the tempted young men of the great city, as well as for the young women.

Rev. Geo. Hawker stated that the chief work which the friends of the Institution had before them was to bring the girls to the feet of Christ. Rev. W. Pierce earnestly commended the Preventive work. Dr. Souter and other friends also spoke.

Mr. R. C. Morgan presided over the evening meeting, when there was an overflowing attendance. He congratulated the Society on the progress which had been made since he last visited them some three years ago. He dwelt on the necessity of domestic servants being well trained if they were to meet the high expectations of those into whose service they entered. He was thankful for the high aim Mr. Thomas had constantly before him, that all the girls who came under the training of the Homes should not only be fitted for secular service, but that every one of them should be brought to Jesus Christ.

The meeting subsequently took the form of a Conference, in which workers like Mr. Browning, of the West London Home, Mr. Taylor, and other friends spoke of aspects of work which had come under their notice.

In the history of the work of this institution some remarkable facts have been brought out. Amongst the fallen, girls of the domestic servant class, belonging to every part of the United Kingdom, have been rescued from the streets. They have not been found to be more depraved than others, but the morality of a domestic servant is the first essential quality in her character.

Another fact is that the great majority of domestic servants in the metropolis belong by birth to the provinces. When out of situation they have no homes of their own to which they can resort, but have to lodge wherever they can secure apartments at reasonable rates, or at best in Servants' Homes which are conducted on strict commercial principles. These facts weighed with the committee in the year 1889, and induced them to take the house 459, Holloway-road, since which time No. 461 has been acquired. These two houses constitute good training-homes for about twenty friendless young girls, and also homes for young servants while out of situation, conducted on definite Christian and Temperance principles. Six shillings per week only is charged for board and lodging, and if young servants are out of funds they are helped over their difficulties. Nearly four hundred such have availed themselves of these Homes, and it is hoped that the careful working of this extension may prove to be not only a protection of a worthy class of workers, but also a means of leading large numbers to the Lord Jesus Christ.

CAPE COLONY.—Rev. A. Welsh, U.P. Church of Scotland missionary, writing from Emgwali, Dohne, Cape Colony, says: At our Communion here last Sabbath over 200 of the Lord's people remembered Him at his table. It was felt to be a hallowed season. The work at our out-stations is prospering. We have now five Evangelists, one of them an unsalaried agent. We trust that many more will soon be led to give themselves to the Lord.

THE DUBLIN CITY MISSION held its annual meeting last week in Dublin, Rev. J. D. Smyly presiding. The report, presented by Mr. T. P. Law, Q.C., showed that God had blessed the work of the missionaries, but that the number of these agents ought to be largely increased. A female missionary had been put to work in a special district with good results. The various branches of the Mission operations had gone on steadily and with encouragement. Sympathetic addresses were delivered by the Chairman, Revs. J. Irwin and C. Inwood, Mr. J. R. Fowler, and Captain Thompson.

NOTES ON DAILY READINGS.

SUNDAY, JUNE 5.—GENESIS XLVII.

Joseph was not ashamed of his brethren, though they were shepherds, and men of that calling were an abomination to the Egyptians, who had suffered much at the hands of the shepherd-kings. And our Elder Brother is not ashamed to call us brethren, who by faith have become part of the family of which He is the head. O my soul, see to it that thou art not ashamed of Him, or of thy brethren in the faith. It is remarkable how greatness insensibly feels the awful power of goodness. Pharaoh asks for the blessing of this old, withered man, and Jacob the Supplanter, having become Israel the Prince, is able to communicate blessing to the greatest monarch of his time. Pilgrim souls which walk with God may become so rich in spiritual power that they may shed untold blessings on those with whom they come in contact. Let us seek to buy more of the refined gold which Jesus offers, that we may enrich others.

MONDAY, JUNE 6.—GENESIS XLVIII.

El Shaddai, God Almighty, was a favourite name for God on Jacob's lips. Let us, like him, treasure those sacred promises which God has spoken to our hearts. They are the golden threads interwoven in the strands of life. Note how the old man's memory went back to that grave on the way to Ephrath, where the beloved Rachel died by him. Oh, the graves of our Rachels, where we said farewell! We may not speak much of them. We hide them deep in our hearts. But there are times when the veil is rent, and our fellows see where our heart's scars are, which we have striven hard to hide. But there is a Home where we meet again those whom we loved long since, and lost awhile. He spake of his fathers, Abraham and Isaac, little thinking that he would come to be associated with them in the love of future generations. Happy that we cannot estimate our own worth But let us walk before God; those that walk with Him shall ever be fed and redeemed from evil. Provision and Redemption lie along the track which God treads. Our Jacobs die, but God is with us; He is with us every day until the end of the age, and He will bring us into that goodly land for which we yearn.

TUESDAY JUNE 7.—GENESIS XLIX.

The past always forecasts the future. What we have been is a very fair indication of what we shall be. Therefore the sombre colours with which the patriarch depicts the future history of some of his older sons. But how blessed the contrast to turn from the sins of the progenitors of the twelve tribes to the Shiloh, the true Rest-giver, who came just before the sceptre and staff were wrenched from Judah's hand. To Him shall the people gather, attracted to Him as bees by the flowers. There are special geographical and other allusions in the predictions of the dying patriarch which deserve attention, but we must leave Zebulun with his seaboard; Issachar with his richer soil; Dan with his aptitude at attacking the foreign invader in the rear; Gad, Asher, and Naphtali, inconspicuous and amongst the first to be carried away captive that we may dwell on the glowing words spoken of Joseph. Joseph throughout was a type of our blessed Lord Let us study Him here. His roots were nourished by the river of life, and his branches have come over the wall of heaven, reaching down his fruit to our hands. He, too, was grieved, shot at, and persecuted, but all power is in his grasp, and He is strong in the strength of God. All blessings rest on Him, and through Him on us, if only we separate ourselves from all evil, as He did. Our arms are weak enough, but the hands of the Mighty One of Jacob are with us, working through our hands, as when a father makes strong the trembling, slender fingers of his boy first handling the bow. May these blessings be ours, all spiritual blessings in heavenly places in Christ!

WEDNESDAY, JUNE 8.—GENESIS L.

The pilgrim and stranger must rest in the land which God had promised to his seed. He would, so to speak, hold it against the coming of his people. In some such way as this the bodies of the saints are holding this earth against the coming of the Lord to redeem his purchased possession. What honour God ordains should be paid to those who, however imperfectly, have honoured Him! Let us entrust Him with all that concerns us. He will do better for us than ever we can do for ourselves, or can make others do for us. And the precious casket in which the spirit that He loved was enshrined shall be counted dear to Him. What a picture is here of the way in which we mistrust our dear Lord! As these brethren treated Joseph, so do we Him. We cannot realise the utterness of his forgiveness. We have no idea of its depth and length. We fail to believe that when once He forgives, He forgives for ever. It is a mistake, therefore, as Joseph's brethren, to recall sins which He has put away as far as the east is from the west. His hand can also turn evil into good; what man proposes malevolently, God disposes benevolently. But how startling to find that the result of all his work is apparently a coffin; but this is not the only instance of how through death we pass to life. The seed of life, though buried deeply, gives ultimately a world-wide harvest.

THURSDAY, JUNE 9.—EXODUS I.

The buried seed begins to bear an abundant harvest, and this notwithstanding the united efforts of Pharaoh and his people. The kings of the earth take counsel together to thwart the Divine purpose. They might as well arrest the incoming tide. The times of suffering and persecution have always been the growing days of the Church. There never were such days for the spread of the truth as when Diocletian's persecutions swept over the followers of Jesus or the dragoons of Claverhouse the moors of Scotland. And if ever those days should come again, they would probably add a marvellous increase to the true followers of Jesus. And so it is in the case of the individual. We make our best progress, not when all our circumstances are favourable, but when they are adverse; when temptation thunders at the door of the soul, to be met by an unhesitating refusal to sin against God; when bitter sorrows try the heart to its uttermost, to be endured with Divine patience; when we see our dearest torn from our side for the river, but we say with Job, "It is the Lord." Then we make headway. Stormy billows waft us home. And God sees to it that with us, as with Israel, there is some human kindness shown, some alleviation of our lot.

FRIDAY, JUNE 10.—EXODUS II.

What glorious faith! There does not seem to have been any precise promise that this goodly child should be spared. But probably some assurance stole into the mother's heart as she beheld his lovely beauty, and her faith clung to it. Nor was she alone in this. Heb. xi. tells us that by faith his parents hid him, so that the father and the mother were one in their simple-hearted faith. Their faith cast out fear. "They were not afraid of the king's commandment." And when the mother went down to the brink of the Nile bearing the precious burden to launch it there, she had no fear of soldier, or crocodile, or other dread, but launched the tiny bark on the bosom of the love of God. He would be captain, He steersman, He convoy. She was not startled when Miriam told her that the king's daughter needed her as nurse. It all turned out as her faith had prognosticated. See how at first this Moses sought to deliver the people by his own strong hand of impetuous might. But he would yet cool down into the meekest of men. O Christ! do for us what years did for Him. It is sad to hear an individual groan and sigh. How much more a nation's agony. But such cries awake deep covenant memories in God's heart.

SATURDAY, JUNE 11.—EXODUS III.

This fire was the manifestation of the Presence of God. Ah, my soul, though thou be only an acacia bush, the presence of God will settle down on thee and abide, preserving thee within its folds from taint and harm, so that all who pass by shall be compelled to turn aside and see this great sight. Where God comes there must be holiness, and purity, and reverent awe. And one great sign that He has entered a heart will be the solemnity with which it bears its weight of glory. What a revelation this is of the way in which God works in the world. When there is aught to be done in his redemptive processes, He does not send an angel, but comes down Himself and chooses some fit soul through which He works. He does all that has to be done by the fit instrument whom He has cleansed and prepared by long years of waiting. The chapter is full of what Jehovah is and will do. That majestic "I" rings through it like an organ peal. And what He has done, He does, and will do, because He is the I AM, the unchanging, who will ever be mindful of his covenant, and will smite the seven nations that resist the entrance of those He loves into the land of rest and promise.

SUNDAY AFTERNOON, JUNE 12.

THE DEN OF LIONS.—Dan. vi. 16-28.

Golden Text: Verse 23.

"Darius seems to have been a common name of the kings of Medo Persia, just as Pharaoh was common to many kings of Egypt, and Cæsar was the common name of many Roman emperors." This unwise decree was issued by Darius Cyaxeres II., under whom Cyrus took Babylon in 538 B.C.

The prominent part Daniel had been called to take in the last night of Belshazzar's reign (v. 10-30) would surely reach the ears of Darius, and to this would be added the story of what he had done during the reign of Nebuchadnezzar. It is not remarkable that he should again be exalted to the highest position in the land.

Envious eyes were upon him (3, 4), perhaps because he was a foreigner, and still more, probably, because of his strict integrity. It is to his credit that though in such an exalted position his conduct was such that no fault could be found in him.

The decree which Darius made at the suggestion of his nobles need not surprise us (6-9). "The Persian king was regarded as the representative of the chief god, Ormuzd." Even Herod, at a later day, consented to receive Divine honours (Acts xii.). The ostensible reason for this decree would be to test the fidelity of the Chaldeans, whom he had just conquered. That it was unalterable arises from the idea that the king was the embodiment of the god who acted through him. To change the decree would be a confession of fallibility.

The conduct of Daniel after he knew that the decree was signed (10) is worthy of careful notice. He acted promptly. Hesitation, or conference with others, when a question of right was involved, was not Daniel's custom. Consequences he could leave with God; duty was of first importance to him He adopted his usual course. If he had acted thus only on this occasion, and because the decree was signed, his conduct would have had the appearance of unworthy bravado or ostentation. But he followed his usual custom. He sought no special secrecy. Of course, prayer is possible, and even necessary, in secret. But to discontinue his habit, or to alter it in any degree, would have appeared like yielding obedience to an unrighteous decree. It was needful to act so that the king and his nobles might learn that in the region of conscience every man is free from the domination of his fellow. The "window opened toward Jerusalem" suggested that his faith was in the God who had been enthroned in the most holy place there, and who, even while his people were in captivity, might be expected to hear prayer (1 Kings viii. 44-48.) "Three times" = the third, sixth, and ninth hours, corresponding to our nine, twelve, and three o'clock. Daniel gave no small part of the day to the exercise of prayer. Was not this the secret of his prosperity? His conduct would inspire others with courage. If one in his position should falter through fear of the lions, how could others be expected to abide faithful?

It is pitiable to see Darius the helpless tool of his nobles (11-15). The gold has given place to the silver. He supposes that his own decree binds him to do what his conscience and judgment condemn. Compare Herod (Matt. xiv. 9). To execute a wicked purpose is more guilty than to break it. No circumstances can make sin necessary. Darius is the helpless slave (14), Daniel is the true freeman. When Pallissy was lying in the Bastile for his adherence to the Protestant faith, the King of France visited him, and urged him to comply with the established religion, adding, "If you do not I shall be forced unwillingly to leave you in the hands of your enemies." "Forced, sire!" replied the old man; "this is not to speak like a King; but they who force you cannot force me. I can die!"

The form of punishment (16) is incidentally a proof of the genuineness of the narrative. The Persians were fire-worshippers, and they would not use fire as a means of punishment, as Nebuchadnezzar had done. "Christians to the lions!" was a cry often heard in the early days of the Church of Christ, but Daniel was one of the first witnesses for God who was punished thus. The encouraging word of Darius (16) was suggested by what he had heard of the deliverance wrought for Daniel's three companions. The God who could quench the violence of fire could also stop the mouths of lions. The sealing of the stone (17), like that of the tomb of Jesus, was surely unnecessary. If the lions are powerless to destroy, what can the seal of the king and of his lords do? The night was one of agony to the king (18). The man who does wrong suffers more than the man he has wronged.

God delivered Daniel (19-23).—The king was impotent, yet he continued deeply solicitous (19, 20). With what joy he heard Daniel's reply (21, 22). The night had been one of greatest joy to Daniel. The fear from the presence of the lions had been driven away by the joy of the presence of God's angel (Psa. xci. 11). "He believed in his God" (23). Faith was the secret of his victory (Heb. xi. 33). Similar faith secures for us equal victories against our great adversary (1 Pet. v. 8).

Letters to the Editor.

THE DOMESTIC PROBLEM.

Dear Sir,—Having kept house for more than fifty years I was much interested in the letters of W.G.F., and others on our duty to our maid-servants. Without attempting to reply to her queries, about which I think no hard and fast rules can be made, may I quote the advice given to me when a young housekeeper by my valued friend and patron, the late Prebendary Fiske. And may they prove as helpful to others as they have been to myself.

He said: "Take each fresh servant into your own room, and tell her that you can only do your duty as mistress and she as maid but by the help of God. Then kneel down by her side, and ask God to give to each the help each needs. And this," he said, "will be given if that word of our Lord's own teaching is followed (Luke vi. 31): 'As ye would that men should do to you, do ye also to them likewise.'

"If in every perplexity you ask yourself, 'If I were the servant, what should I expect?' and she ask herself: 'If I were the mistress, what should I think just and right?' would it not guide both in their daily walk?"

Thankfully would I acknowledge how helpful that advice has been, and for ten, twenty, and in one case thirty years, we have lived together in peace and happiness.—Yours, H. W. E.

"THE ACCUSER OF THE BRETHREN."

Dear Sir,—Most of your correspondents have confused this subject by not having clearly distinguished between Christ's offices as Priest and Advocate. As a Priest, He "bears the iniquities of our holy things" (Exodus xxviii. 38), but as an Advocate He pleads our cause against the adversary (Zech. iii. 2). When the Scripture says that nothing shall be laid "to the charge of God's elect" (Rom. viii. 33), it does not mean that there shall be no formal charge made by the adversary against them—for the Scriptures assert the contrary—but that no such charge shall ever be established against them so as to cause them to be condemned in consequence (Rom viii. 1-34). If Satan had been cast down from the heavenlies at Christ's resurrection, and had thenceforth been unable to accuse the saints, there would have been no need for Christ's advocacy on their behalf.

But we are expressly told that one object of his "appearing in the presence of God for us" was "to make intercession for" us (Heb. ix. 24; vii. 25). And the Apostle Paul speaks of Satan and his hosts as being "in the heavenlies" long after the resurrection of Christ Himself from the dead (Eph. vi. 12). Hence the Apostle John says, "If any man have sinned," ἁμάρτῃ, "have fallen into sin"—i.e., into some grievous outward sin into which he has been hurried by the force of temptation, as in Gal. vi. 1, "we have an advocate with the Father, Jesus Christ the Righteous, and He is the propitiation for our sins" (1 John ii. 1, 2). For the office of an advocate is not to plead with a judge to show mercy upon a criminal; for if a criminal be before the judge, the judge is bound by the law to condemn him as such; but the office of an advocate is to set before the judge the legal proofs that his client has the law in his favour.

Satan, as the Scriptures very clearly show, when one of the Lord's own children has fallen into some grievous open sin, such, for instance, as that of the incestuous Corinthian—who was afterwards restored (see and compare 1 Cor. v. with 2 Cor. ii. 2-8; vii. 8-12)—accuses him of it at once before God, endeavouring to show that such a sin is inconsistent with a man's being in a state of grace, that it is not, in fact, "the spot of" God's "children" (Deut. xxxii. 5); and that he ought to be condemned under the law in consequence. Now, if such an one really be interested in the Divine covenant of grace, our Advocate comes forward "to make intercession for" him, and to show that that sin has been atoned for, and that the poor miserable backslider shall, after chastisement (Psa. lxxx. 30-34; Isa. lx. 3; Rom. iv. 16; 1 Cor. xi. 32), be restored (Gal. vi. 1), and shall not be brought under condemnation in consequence. And now the case is altered; for the question now is as to the sufficiency of the sacrifice, as John clearly intimates in the passage before quoted; and Satan is, of course, "rebuked" and silenced (Zech. iii. 2).

The reason, of course (as the Scriptures also clearly show), why Satan persists in such accusations is because there are numberless professors having the Spirit on them for gifts who have not the Spirit in them for grace; who are not interested in the Divine covenant (Mat. vii., 22, 23; 2 Tim. ii. 19-21), and against whom Satan's plea will prevail; as is very clearly shown in Psalm cix., where these two classes and persons are distinctly referred to, and their different ends pointed out.

I have myself gone into this subject fully in my second volume of "Outlines of Prophetic Truth," chap. ix., sec. 3, pp. 512-519 (S. W. Partridge and Co.), in an exposition of Zech. iii. (which is clearly future), to which I refer your readers should they desire to look further into it, as it is much too long for insertion in your paper.—I remain, yours truly,

Robert Brown.

THE LORD'S DAY OBLIGATION.

Sir,—The differences of opinion regarding the obligation of keeping holy the Lord's Day arise from want of clear views regarding the moral law.

All Christians know that we are not, and cannot be, saved by obedience to any law. Christ died for our sins, that is, for our "transgressions of the law," and if we are one with Him, we are "dead to the law" (Rom. vi. 8, vii. 6, R.V.), no longer under it as a means of salvation. No longer subject to its penalties, because he was made a curse for us (Gal. iii. 13). But that is a very different thing from being "without" any law to guide us! The revelation of God's unchangeable will regarding right and wrong is our sole guide, and this can never be altered or pass away.

The Jews had also the ceremonial law, "the law of commandments contained in ordinances" (Eph. ii. 15), by which the Gospel was set forth in types. This, having been perfectly fulfilled by "the Lamb of God who taketh away the sin of the world," naturally came to an end, as there can be no need of symbols when we have the reality. This is most clearly taught in the Epistle to the Hebrews.

The Jews had also civil laws regarding land, crime, penalties, divorce, food, dress &c.—many of them designed to keep Israel separate from the heathen. Some of these were expressly repealed by the Supreme Lawgiver (Matt. v. 31-2; Acts x. 13), and all came to an end with the existence of the Jews as an independent nation.

Any one keeping firm hold of the distinction between the Moral, the Ceremonial, and the Civil Laws will find no difficulty in learning which among these Divinely-given laws are still in force, and which have answered their purpose and have vanished away.

Our Lord expressly declares, "I am not come to destroy the law or the prophets, but to fulfil." Matt. v. 17-19. Now, no enactment regarding right and wrong can possibly be fulfilled except by continued obedience. To treat it as no longer binding, because Christ has perfectly obeyed it for us, would be to "destroy" it. He fulfilled the righteousness of the law so that those who believe are reckoned righteous for his obedience, guiltless because He has died in their stead for their sins; but, though He atoned for all their idolatries, murders, and other sins, they are not, therefore, set free to break these laws! On the contrary, they receive grace to obey them, "that the righteous demands of the law may be fulfilled in us who walk not after the flesh, but after the Spirit" (Rom. viii. 4).

Paul teaches that "circumcision is nothing, uncircumcision is nothing, but the keeping of the commandments of God." The first clause teaches that the Jewish law is abolished, the second that the commandments are binding upon the Gentile Church. We are "not without law to God but under (or in) the law to Christ. We are to be "zealous of good works" (Tit. ii.), but we must have some guide. The Lord Jesus says, "If ye love Me keep my commandments."

Now where are those commandments to be found? We answer, In every revelation of the mind and will of God regarding right and wrong, from Genesis to Revelation; chiefly in the most solemn of all given from Mount Sinai. The "ten words" were given by Christ (1 Cor. x. 4). They are repeatedly referred to by Him as binding (Mat. v. 19, xxii. 36-40, John xiv. 21, xv. 10, Luke xxiii. 56), and by his Apostles (Eph. vi. 1-2; 1 John iii. 24, v. 2, Heb. iv. 4). Men often speak as if a vague feeling of love was a substitute for obedience, but "Love is the fulfilling of the law." There must therefore be something to fulfil. Like marriage, the Sabbath was instituted "in the beginning" (Mat. xix. 4), and one law is as binding as the other. "The Sabbath was made for man," not only for the Jews.

Some ask why the Fourth Commandment is not repeated in the New Testament? Simply because it is contained in the Old. The Second Commandment is not repeated, nor indeed is the First, except by inference. There are no rules concerning the relationships which bar marriage, except in the Old Testament. The Bible is a whole and all Scripture is given for instruction in righteousness (2 Tim. iii. 16). Rest from labour is the right of all creation, man or beast. It is the gift of God to them.

No one would maintain either that the Creator rested for twenty-four hours on the Saturday, nor that any one can be sure that Saturday is the seventh day reckoning from the creation. The essence of the command is, Work for six days and rest every seventh day (whatever it is called), and I am satisfied that the inspired Apostles would not have allowed the transfer of the day of rest from the seventh to the first day of the week without Divine sanction. The Son of Man is "Lord also of the Sabbath." He cannot be called Lord of that which does not exist. The "keeping of a Sabbath" (Heb. iv. 9) is therefore a law and a right for all, and for the believer it is a glorious privilege, a delight, the holy of the Lord, honourable (Isa. lviii. 13.); a foretaste of the rest that remaineth for the people of God.—Faithfully yours,

H. C. M.

OBITUARY.

REV. J. DICK, BRAZIL.

News has been received of the death of Rev. James Dick at Ceara, Brazil. He has fallen a victim to small-pox at the early age of thirty-one, after only three years' service. Mr. Dick was apprenticed to the law in Linlithgow, and afterwards held a good position in Edinburgh, where he was well known. Leaving his profession, he was trained at Cliff College, England, for the mission field, and three years ago went out to Brazil as a Baptist missionary. Latterly he was in the service of the American Mission Board. Mr. Dick was very devoted to his work, and often went on pioneer journeys inland at considerable risk to his life. He has left in a foreign land a widow and two of a family. Mr. Dick was the younger son of Mr. James Dick, Cupar, Fife.

MRS. FORDER, OF THE MOAB MISSION.

Many will hear with deep regret of the death of Mrs. Forder, who so lately went out with her husband to the aid of Mr. and Mrs. Lethaby at Kerak, in the land of Moab. This devoted couple joined Mr. and Mrs. Lethaby in the month of October, and quickly won the esteem of the Mission workers and the Arabs. Mr. Forder showed singular aptitude for the work, and his wife's presence with him, of course, greatly increased his influence for good. Suddenly however, as announced by the mail, Mrs. Forder has been removed by death. Great sympathy has been expressed in Kerak by the native Christians, and even the Moslem Sheikh, we are told, wept when he heard of Mrs. Forder's death. We are thankful to learn that Miss Bowyer, who has already been engaged in Christian work in Jerusalem, has volunteered for Kerak, and sailed on Friday last.

REV. J. T. FOWLER.

We hear with regret that the devoted rector of East Hanningfield, Essex, who was also Canon of St. Patrick's, Kil'alah, Ireland, died on May 13, at San Remo, of fever contracted during a tour in the East. Canon Fowler's earlier ministerial work was in the West of Ireland. He was afterwards for sixteen years vicar of Whittle-le-Woods, in Lancashire. In 1883 he removed to East Hanningfield, where his first work was to build a new church in the centre of the village, the old one, situated at an inconvenient distance, having been burnt down shortly after his arrival. Canon Fowler was an earnest adherent of the Evangelical school. His later years were darkened by much domestic sorrow, but there was always "light in the darkness."

DR. MACLAGAN, BERWICK.

It was a sad and unexpected piece of intelligence, carried everywhere by the daily press last week, that the honoured and beloved Dr. Maclagan, of Berwick, had been called to his reward. He will be mourned by all who knew him, and especially by those who admire the combination of the highest culture and refinement of taste with the beautiful simplicity of the Christian graces.

His profession brought him into constant touch with his fellows, who found in him not only the highest medical skill, but that sympathy and kindliness of heart which do good like medicine. Many are the young men who owe to him, not only prescriptions which saved them from loss of health, but advice which he gave with almost unrivalled delicacy and wisdom, and which rescued them from moral shipwreck.

In Berwick he was known as a foremost citizen, and a man of unimpeachable character. There was a close affinity of spirit between the Presbyterian elder and his brother, the present Archbishop of York.

LISSON-GROVE MISSION.—In the report of last year's work we read: "Believing that the Gospel is still God's power unto salvation to every one that believeth, we have made use of no other book than the Bible in our mission services, mothers' meetings, Sunday-schools, &c. We are confident that the efforts of those who work on in faith, depending on the Word of God as used by his spirit, will be owned by Him in the salvation of sinners. In the Sunday-schools we have now altogether two hundred children, with an average attendance of seventy in the morning and 170 in the afternoon. The hon. superintendent is Mr. G. T. Hunt, 5, St. Ann's-terrace, St. John's-wood, N.W."

DESTITUTE CHILDREN AT SALTCOATS.—The seventeenth annual report of the Homes for Destitute Children at Saltcoats says:—"The streets of Glasgow by the various agencies at work have been swept all but clean of poor Protestant children. There are children still to be found hanging about our railway stations and other places of resort, but almost without exception they are Roman Catholics, and whilst their co-religionists do nothing for them themselves, they defy any Protestant agency to interfere, although it be to rescue them from the gutter. No one who can remember the state our streets were in with ragged children some ten or twelve years since but must recognise the immense improvement which has taken place, and we could only wish that other cities and towns were as successful." Communications respecting the Home should be addressed to Mr. J. Galloway, 15, St. Vincent-place, Glasgow.

The Book World.

Introduction to Dogmatic Theology, on the basis of the Thirty-Nine Articles of the Church of England. By Rev. E. A. Litton, M.A., rector of Naunton, Gloucestershire. This is the second volume of a valuable work from the pen of an out-and-out Protestant theologian. The principal sections are headed Order of Salvation (Individual), Communion of Saints, and Eschatology. Doctrines of the utmost moment are explained, the pages bearing evidence of much research in ancient and modern theology. (7s. 6d. Elliot Stock.)

The Gospel of St. Matthew. By Alexander Maclaren, D.D. Vol. I. (3s. 6d. Hodder and Stoughton.) This is the commencement of a series of "Bible-class Expositions," which, if they all come up to sample, will be of great practical utility. The volume contains twenty-five lessons, carrying the exposition as far as chapter xiv. 12. The text is set out as in the A. V., and Dr. Maclaren proceeds to open it up as to meaning and application with his well-known ability. Old truths are set in new lights, and familiar portions of the Word are invested with special interest through a regard for details such as are unobserved by the superficial reader.

The People's Bible. By Joseph Parker, D.D. Vol. XVI. Jeremiah xx.—Daniel. (Hazell, Watson, and Viney. 8s.) If we are not unqualified admirers of Dr. Parker, and if we cannot altogether justify him from the charge of inconsistency in his recent attack on a brother minister for plagiarism, we are bound to say that there is in this and the preceding volumes abundance of thought which, even if in some degree anticipated by others, has passed through the alembic of his own mind, and is expressed in language original to himself. There are few books which contain within the same compass so much suggestion for others to work out, each in his own way.

Doing and Suffering: Memorials of Elizabeth and Frances, daughters of the late Rev. E. Bickersteth. By their Sister. (Sampson Low and Co.) The Bishop of Exeter opens a tenderly-worded preface to this re-issue—twenty-seventh thousand—of his sisters' letters, with the very pertinent remark: "It is not often that the brief memorials of two sisters who have fallen asleep in Christ, one of them thirty-six years and the other nearly forty years ago, are still sought after and lovingly studied and gratefully treasured. Yet so it is with the little volume of which the title 'Doing and Suffering' expresses the chief characteristics of these thoughtful, fruitful lives."

The Highest Critics versus The Higher Critics. By Dr. L. W. Munhall. (W. G. Wheeler, 21a, Warwick-lane.) The author of this work is of our mind in entertaining a low estimate of modern theories regarding the Old Testament. He stands by the testimony of Christ and the Holy Spirit—the "highest critics," rather than the doctors and professors of our day, classed as "higher critics." It is strange that these latter should be so oblivious of the fact that their individual confidence is hardly consonant with the inharmonious "results" at which they claim to arrive. This is a very instructive book; the more is the pity that the proper names mentioned should so frequently be wrongly spelled.

Bible Talks: The Christian Life, and How to Live It. By George Clarke. This is the second of a series of "Bible Talks." The author thinks there is "a separate stage in spiritual life, distinct and separate from conversion." To our mind a conversion which is not from sin to holiness requires depreciative qualification; New Testament conversion is by the power of the Holy Spirit, which by regeneration, and nothing less, creates the "new man in Christ Jesus." The many points and topics introduced in the "Talks" are not so firmly set as careful readers would like. There is no pretence at originality, but an obvious desire to help those who would lead consecrated lives. The pages will doubtless be welcome to those who have heard the chapters delivered as addresses by their author. (Marshall Brothers.)

England's Greatest National Sin. Being Selections and Reflections on our Asiatic Opium Policy and Traffic. By H. H. T. Cleife, M.A., rector of Hardington Mandeville, Somerset. (Paper, 1s. 6d.; cloth, 3s. 6d. Elliot Stock.) This is a compendium of facts, gathered from a variety of sources. It is not a history of the traffic, but a statement of its recent development and present aspects. Even though the author's impression that the historical phase is "tolerably well known to most persons" were well founded, a lucid outline of the facts of history would have been welcome to the instructed and helpful to the many who are quite ignorant of a record at once grievous and shameful. We heartily thank Mr. Cleife for what he has done, and trust the book will arouse the indignation of many readers, and induce them to raise their voices in the name of national righteousness and for the emancipation of the millions of Asia from a deadly thraldom.

The Biblical Illustrator: Exodus. By Rev. Joseph S. Exell, M.A. (7s. 6d. Nisbet.) This is a specially useful volume of a series which many public teachers are finding of great value for their anecdotal, expository, and homiletical contents, gathered from a wide range of home and foreign literature. It is a marvellously rich compilation, not only affording some idea of the place which Exodus occupies in pulpit ministration, but showing what a mine of religious instruction the second Book of Moses really is. In these six hundred pages there are many hundreds of outlines and condensed sermons, remarkable value attaching to the extensive illustration of those sections which record the Divine utterances, bear upon ministerial responsibility, or relate the critical episodes in the deliverance of Israel from Egypt. The evangelical application of Exodus is obvious, and the "Illustrator" shows how wonderfully it enfolds and explains the plan of human redemption.

Present Day Tracts: Volume xi. of this admirable series contains Tracts 61-66, all of them essays at once cogent and succinct on subjects of living interest. The last contribution by the late Principal Cairns shows the grasp and precision of all his work, and is a very useful "Argument for Christianity from the Experience of Christians." Rev. M. Kaufmann writes on "Egoism, Altruism, and Christian Eudaimonism"; Rev. W. S. Lewis discusses the two geologies; Professor Blaikie compares the Psalms with the hymns of different religions, furnishing evidence of their inspiration; Dr. Charles Chapman investigates the origin of life and consciousness against atheistic theories; and Rev. T. E. Slater sketches "The Influence of the Christian Religion in History." We have from time to time spoken in terms of warm commendation of this series, and are glad to say that the latest issues fully come up to the high standard of previous volumes. (2s. 6d. Religious Tract Society.)

Ethical Teachings in Old English Literature. By Theodore W. Hunt, Ph D., Litt.D. (5s. Funk and Wagnalls Company.) A series of very readable papers, surveying the period 650 to 1550, and emphasizing the devout and religious temper which pervades the literature of the period. Professor Hunt's interpretation of this spirit, as showing itself in the pre-Elizabethan and pre-Reformation poets and prose writers of our land, should prove of service to literary students, and not least to those who would illustrate the progress of Christian life and influence in the world. This volume summarises a large and important library. In the concluding chapter, on the English Bible and the English Language, Dr. Hunt says:—"From the days of our oldest English to the present, it is largely by reason of the influence of this English Bible that the language which we love has become the accepted language, the world over, of modern progress, of Protestant Christianity, and of the rights of man."

Railway Booklets is the title of two series from the pen of the late W. P. Mackay, M.A., M.D. They are published in sixpenny packets, the first series consisting of eight pages and the second of sixteen. The excellence of these booklets hardly requires mention.

New Holidays in Essex, edited by Percy Lindley, is an illustrated Handbook to the little-known districts of South-East Essex, including Maldon, Danbury, Burnham, Riadwell, and the country between the Blackwater and the Thames Estuaries. (6d. 80, Fleet-street, E.C.)

On Zangboekje is the title of a collection of Psalms and hymns, with music, by C. S. Adama Van Scheltema, who enjoys a high reputation as the author of many useful religious books and spiritual songs. The compilation was made for the orphans of Neerbosch, who have done much to popularise singing in the Netherlands. (25 cents, Nijmegen P. J. Milborn.)

The Holy Tears of Jesus is a booklet (1s. 6d. Hodder and Stoughton) containing a remarkable sermon on Luke xix. 41-44, by the late Dr. Theodore Christlieb, of Bonn, translated from the German, and edited with an introduction and appendices by Prebendary Thomas L. Kingsbury, of Coombe Bissett. The appendices will specially interest students of church order as regards the commemoration of great events in Gospel history.

A Forecast and a Story. By Marianne Farningham. (3s. 6d. James Clarke and Co.) A story with a purpose, the purpose being to show what might be done, say in 1900, if in social, political and commercial life the spirit of Christianity were carried out, and men did unto others as they would be done by. With much that is attractive in aim and ideal, there is yet something lacking, inasmuch as the advancement of social well-being in the life that now is, seems to take the place of the Gospel message for the life which is to come.

Two penny pamphlets of deep import on the Romish question are: A Curate's Protestant Speech and Subsequent Forfeiture of his Cure, the matter discussed in correspondence with the Bishop of Gloucester and Bristol, by Rev. James Mortimer Sangar, M.A. (W. Wileman, 27, Bouverie-street, E.C.).—Popery Completely at Variance with the Bible, by Rev. James Gardner, M.A., M.D. Rome speaks for herself in these pages; and chapter and verse are given for the Scriptural doctrines set forth in refutation. (J. Kensit, 18, Paternoster-row.)

BIBLE FLOWER MISSION.—Miss Dove is the hon. superintendent of this Mission, the office of which is 110, Cannon-street, E.C. The annual report states that during the past year a larger number of messages from God's Word were distributed than in any previous period of the same duration. The fruit has been more abundant in the lodging-houses, and in the houses of the poor, than in the hospitals and infirmaries. The report says: "Lavender bags are still an unfailing source of pleasure to the recipients; some thirty-eight thousand have been given away during the year. Flowers were in scant supply last summer, that we were constantly forced to employ these and other substitutes. It is very sad to relate that there are no fewer than ten or twelve hospitals and infirmaries which have been for some time without regular visitors."

June Magazines.

Messrs. Partridge and Co.

The serials that come from this firm maintain all the attractive qualities that have made them famous. Our old staunch friend The British Workman has a capital front page picture this month—"The best canteen," which tells its own tale in praise of cold water, though Mr. Courtenay's story drives home the moral. In Our Own Gazette, Rev. J. G. Paton, of the New Hebrides, pathetically protests against the re-opening of the Kanaka Labour Traffic. The other serials from Messrs. Partridge are up to the usual high mark.

Messrs. Cassell and Co., Limited.

Kilkenny Castle and Longleat are two of the "Historic Houses" sketched this month in the handsomely-got-up serial bearing that title—recalling some stirring memories in our island story. Professor Morley's "History of English Literature" has reached Part 41, which deals largely with the writings of Chaucer and Spenser, long extracts are given from the latter's "Faerie Queene." The "Illustrated History of England" has come down to the Victorian era and the Crimean War. In "The Life and Times of Queen Victoria" we are carried back to the stormy days of agitation on behalf of the reform, when Mr. Disraeli "dished the Whigs." "The World of Romance" records deeds of daring and adventure.

Religion at the World's Fair.

In an article in The Missionary Review of the World on the Parliament of Religions at the World's Fair, Dr. Barrows, of Chicago, writes:—"Religion, the supreme concern and glory of man, has been excluded from all previous world's fairs. In the coming Exposition, however, it will have a most conspicuous place, not only in the material exhibit, but in a series of congresses extending from August 25 through September 29....I express a deep personal conviction in saying that I believe that the Parliament of Religions, in connection with the whole series of religious congresses, will bring into glorious conspicuity the supreme power and attractiveness of the Cross of Christ. While we earnestly seek from our brothers beyond the sea a frank and full presentation of their sincere beliefs, which is only possible in an atmosphere of confidence, mutual respect and affection, we shall speak from our hearts those truths which have come to us from the words and the life of the Son of God. Believing that Christianity is not only the complement of all other religions, filling out what is imperfect in them, and correcting what is erroneous, but is also a direct, miraculous revelation centring in a Divine Redeemer, they who hold this faith will have the opportunity to proclaim it as never before."

The Expository Times (T. and T. Clark) has some thoughtful contributions to the discussion on the alleged "failure" of the Revised Version of the Bible. The Bishop of Durham, recalling the opposition to the Authorised Version, which was before the English-speaking people fifty years before it came into general use, declares himself content to appeal to the next generation for a just judgment on the Revision. One writer points out that a great drawback to the more general use of the R. V. is its want of references. Rev. A. H. Wratislaw, M.A., in a learned article suggests that the Old Testament type of the scapegoat was fulfilled by Barabbas, whom the Jews preferred to Christ, whom they in turn delivered up to be crucified. He says: "As identified with Barabbas, the Jews have held the position of the scapegoat ever since. They are wanderers in the wilderness of the world everywhere separate...a kind of living scapegoat, representing the mystical body of Barabbas, whom they preferred, even as the Church of Christ represents the mystical body of Him, in whom every member thereof suffers a symbolical death and resurrection at his baptism."

The Church Missionary Intelligencer renders a full account of the anniversary celebration of the Society. The news from the mission field includes extracts from Rev. G. K. Baskerville's journal. On December 4 he writes: "We are living in a volcano—the whole country is in a ferment. The Roman Catholics started all the trouble by sending men to destroy the Melondo's place in Kyagwe. He is one of our biggest and most respected chiefs. Wisely, he, before taking any hasty measures, went to consult Captain Williams, who told him to go and defend his property. Accordingly yesterday he went, and the King (i.e., the Roman Catholics) has sent four Roman Catholic Chiefs after him to kill him! Here our friend Mwanga has put his foot into it, and deserves no mercy at the hands of the Company. Well, Mr. Williams went to the King, and told him that unless he sent counter orders to stop these men he would fight with him. Our people have acted nobly, and kept from violence." Writing on December 5, Mr. Baskerville says: "One chief of ours was on his way quietly home at about four o'clock, when we from our garden, where we were walking, saw a Roman Catholic chief fire four times on his men...He is to send his guns to the camp."

Temperance Notes.

Mr. George Blaiklock has been advocating Gospel Temperance at Graaf-Reinet, South Africa.

At a Women's Temperance Conference just held in Belfast, Mrs. Barcroft presided, and spoke on the difficulties and encouragements of the work.

You will be glad to hear, writes a correspondent, that a really blessed Gospel temperance work is being carried on in Paris and Rouen.

At a meeting last week of the Central Temperance Association, Mr. Ling insisted on the necessity for the gradual extinction of the public-houses.

The United Kingdom Temperance and Provident Institution showed, at its fifty-first annual meeting, held last week, a most satisfactory state of affairs.

"The sale of intoxicants," declares Dr. Richardson, "is the sale of insanity, the sale of disease, the sale of crime, and the sale of poverty."

A temperance speaker urges that by punishing drink-made criminals, and continuing to licence, we are mopping up the slops and letting the running tap alone just as a silly servant girl would do.

Dr. Norman Kerr estimates that of the two hundred and sixty thousand deaths occurring annually amongst children below the age of five years, sixty-five thousand are directly or indirectly due to intemperance.

A veteran teetotaler has just passed away in Mr. J. Osborne, who had been a champion boxer prior to his conversion fifty-two years ago. He lived at Worthing, Sussex, and was known as "The Sussex Temperance Champion."

"The use of intoxicating drinks," says a medical man, "has been, so far as I can judge, only productive of evil, and he who uses them needs to say often the prayer of St. Chrysostom: 'God keep my body from the doctors, my money from the lawyers, and my soul from the devil.'"

Our Blue-books show that millions of the ratepayers' money (in excess of the revenue derived from intoxicating liquors) are annually spent in dealing with the effects of this excess in strong drink, and as criminals and drunkards do not pay these taxes, the industrious and temperate ratepayers must.

The Army Temperance Association in India reports a membership of 18,029, all total abstainers. This means that considerably more than one-fourth of the soldiers in India are total abstainers. The present membership is the largest ever recorded, and the average membership for the past year is more than one thousand over any previous year.

A notorious public-house in Trafalgar-street, Liverpool, has passed into the hands of the Rev. John Gamble, of the Lancashire and Cheshire Colportage Association, who is about to transform the house and turn it to better account. In future, the "Old House at Home" will be a temperance public-house and mission-room combined.

The annual meetings of the Women's Temperance Association were held in Belfast on Wednesday week. Mrs. Richardson took the chair, and Mrs. Byers presented the report. During the year the lady missionary paid 4000 visits to homes, held ninety-four cottage meetings, and gave 139 pledges. Earnest addresses were delivered by various ladies, and encouraging reports of the work in Cork, Newry and elsewhere were submitted.

Mrs. Mary Clement Leavitt, the World's W.C.T.U. Missionary, who has been prosecuting her work in South America, met recently with a painful experience at Pernambuco, Brazil. A well-dressed Catholic crowd, mostly students, took possession of the building in which the second of a course of lectures was to be given by Mrs. Leavitt, and prevented the lecture by shouting, hooting, and disorderly rushing about.

Mr. Emerson Bainbridge, the proprietor of Bolsover Colliery, one of the largest in the kingdom, and president of the Sheffield Y.M.C.A., is endeavouring to establish a model village for his work-people on somewhat similar lines to those of Sir Titus Salt at Saltaire. There will be no public-houses. The government of the colony will be in the hands of a village council elected by the inhabitants.

Mr. Jonathan Hargrove, the Temperance candidate for the Houghton-le-Spring Division, has commenced his candidature in opposition to Captain Fenwick, the brewer. The proceedings were inaugurated by a conference at Sunderland, followed by a great public meeting in the Victoria Hall. Mr. Hargrove says it was only through being actuated by a strict sense of duty that he was induced to come forward. A great principle being assailed had to be defended.

The liquor-sellers are not in love with the Hull Wesleyan Mission, and, considering what their trade has suffered, it is hardly to be expected. But their friends have adopted an absurd way of showing their spite. A few weeks ago they wantonly smashed the large and costly lamp which has just been placed over the entrance to George-yard Chapel, and within a week of the lamp being repaired it was broken a second time. Then they went a step farther, and a party of drunken men paid a visit at midnight to the house of Rev. H. S. B. Yates, and broke one of his windows.

Personalia.

Rev. John Thomas, D.D., of Liverpool, celebrated last week his ministerial jubilee.

Rev. W. F. Moulton, D.D., has now returned from his visit to Omaha, U.S.A., where his addresses aroused much enthusiasm.

The Bishop of Bedford, who has been in ill-health for some weeks, has left for Devonshire, being ordered complete rest.

Dr. MacWhirter Dunbar, of Hedingham House, Clapham-common, has, we learn, undertaken the duties of treasurer to the Figueras Mission.

Rev. W. J. Dawson, of Southport, has, it is announced, declined the invitation to Highbury-quadrant Congregational Church.

Rev. T. H. Darlow, M.A., has resigned his post as superintendent of the Browning Hall Mission, York-street, Walworth, S.E.

Mr. A. H. Baynes, who has been visiting the mission stations in Italy, is now at his post in view of the centenary celebrations of this week and next.

Rev. J. Inches Hillocks is, we hear, now convalescent, after a severe attack of influenza, and has been ordered by his doctor to Broughty Ferry to recruit.

Paul T. Bliss, son of the late P. P. Bliss, is a member of the Princeton Male Quartette, which has been helping Major Whittle in Gospel services at Philadelphia.

Rev. C. H. Yatman, an American evangelist, is studying evangelistic work in London and Paris, especially in connection with Rev. Hugh Price Hughes and Dr. McAll.

Rev. J. Hiles Hitchens, D.D., in a letter to a friend, states that he is recovering strength, and hopes shortly to be able to resume his duties at Eccleston-square Church.

Rev. J. Morrow, D.D., Secretary of the Pennsylvania Bible Society, in connection with which he is doing a great work, has been on a tour in the East, and is now on a visit to the scene of his early ministerial labours.

Rev. J. Bailey, B.A., who has just returned from a missionary tour in the West Indies, was welcomed last week by his people at Glossop-road, Sheffield. He speaks warmly of the encouraging state of things in the islands.

Rev. Alexander Gregory, M.A., who four years ago gave up his charge at Wooler to devote himself to foreign mission service, being now at home on furlough, gave his old congregation on Sunday week stirring accounts of the Lord's work in China.

Mr. and Mrs. Charles E. Faithfull were suddenly called to England, on the 23rd ult., owing to a serious accident to their youngest son. Mr. Faithfull will be glad to communicate with any friends willing to give him an opportunity for speaking about the work at Marseilles. His address is, care of Mr. H. Clapton, 8, Widcombe-crescent, Bath.

Rev S. H. Kellogg, D.D., is to return to India at the close of this summer, to act with other able scholars in the revision of the Old Testament in Hindi. The St. James' congregation in Toronto, the pastorate of which he now resigns for this more special field, will feel his departure sorely.

Mr. George Hatton has, we learn, been compelled by the state of his health to resign the superintendence of the St. Giles' Christian Mission—a post he has held since the founding of the Mission over thirty years ago. His place has been filled by Mr. William Wheatley, who for so many years has been closely associated with the work, and to whose energy and zeal the success of the Prisoners' branch is so largely due. While all must regret that such a devoted labourer as Mr. Hatton has been laid aside, it will certainly be felt that no more fitting successor could be found.

SEAMEN AT SHANGHAI.—Mr. T. Macoun, of the China Inland Mission for Shanghai, writes: On H.M.S. Caroline some thirty men have been converted lately. Five months ago, not a man of them was Christian; now, thank God, there are, as I have said, some thirty—indeed, the number is much nearer forty. I do not think I have ever seen more thorough, out and out cases of conversion. The vessel has been here for many months, and an opportunity has thus been given us of helping the Christians, until they become established. Miss Geraldine Guinness was much used of God in leading many of the men to Christ.

CARDIFF has just sustained a great loss in the departure of Mr. Joseph Carss, who worthily filled the position of Town Missionary for seven years. During that period he proved himself to be a devoted worker amongst the poor, ministering to their temporal and spiritual wants, and a capable and most acceptable preacher. He established mission-room and cottage meetings in the various centres of Cardiff, and the number of souls won to Christ under his ministry testify to the Lord's blessing which rested upon his efforts. Many share the regret expressed by the Committee at his departure, which became a necessity through the health of Mrs. Carss requiring a change of climate. He was greatly assisted by the constant generosity of Mr. John Cory and Mr. Richard Cory and other friends of the Mission.

Evangelistic Notes.

Mr. William Grove is conducting a tent mission at Forest Gate during this month.

Dowlais.—An open-air mission is being held during the present month by Mr. James Jones, at Dowlais, South Wales.

Mr. W. R. Bradlaugh has held a fifteen days' mission in St. George-the-Martyr schoolroom, Bolton. This is his fourth mission in the same place during the past six years, and he has been permitted to see abiding fruit from his first visit.

Messrs. Whittle and Stebbins have lately been evangelising at Hartford, Conn., U.S.A. Some four hundred signed cards testifying a desire to lead a new life. Miss Whittle and Miss Boardman (of Stratford) had meetings for girls, with marked results for good.

Ireland.—Rev. J. P. Cushing has just concluded a most successful sixteen days' mission in the Parish of Glenady, co. Antrim, of which Rev. Chas. Watson is the rector. All the services were largely attended, and much good is believed to have been done. Mr. Poolton, of the Belfast City Mission, has held a series of evangelistic services in the Methodist Church, Comber, which have been a means of blessing to not a few.

CAMBRIDGE NOTES.

On Ascension day, sermons were preached in Holy Trinity Church on behalf of the women of India; in the morning by Rev. H. C. G. Moule.

On Sunday (22nd) Mr. Moule began a series of three Bible Readings after the morning service. He dealt first with "Grace."

The University sermon of May 22 was preached by the Bishop of St. Asaph. At the Alexandra Hall Major Pelham Burn gave the address on Sunday evening.

Mr. Moule's new book "To My Younger Brethren" (Hodder and Stoughton), seems likely to become very popular with the Christian men, especially those about to be ordained for the ministry.

It has been decided to hold a Missionary Conference in Cambridge in the "May Week," lasting four days, June 7-10. The object is not to put forward the claims of any special society or to appeal for funds, but to have laid before the members of the University in particular, the vast and pressing need for men to carry God's Word and the message of salvation all over the world.

Work in Beyrout.

Miss Jennie Street, who is visiting the Holy Land, writes from Beyrout:—I spent Sunday with Miss Taylor, whose school for Moslem girls is unique in character, and has had a wonderful history. It was very beautiful to hear the simple prayers of the girls, and to see how heartily the older pupils entered into the study of Ephes. iii. 9-21, in the cheery Bible-class, which attracts several young people to Miss Taylor's house every Sunday evening. In the afternoon I spoke (through interpreters) to the large meeting of poor Jewish women, conducted by Mrs. G. Machie, in connection with the American Mission, and to the Arabic Sunday-school, superintended by the venerable Dr. Jessup.

FINLAND.—Rev. J. D. Kilburn, of Hamburg, writes: "Miss A. Helman, of Wasa, a confirmed invalid, asks me to plead for something to be done to supply workhouse inmates and the aged poor of Finland with large-type New Testaments. There are about four thousand people in the workhouses, and even more outside, who cannot buy for themselves; yet many of them are longing for God's Word, and would be cheered and helped, and maybe saved, if they could have copies."

ORPHANS' HOME, SOUTHWARK.—In the letter sent out last summer it was suggested that a permanent seaside home would be a great boon, especially for the use of consumptive children. Another year's work among the orphans has only added to the strength of my conviction that such a branch Home is greatly needed, that it would make the institution much more complete, and that some day it will become a reality. Up to the present time I have received donations for this purpose amounting to £417 5s.—an earnest, I trust, of all that is needed. Charlotte Sharman.

CHINESE MISSION IN LONDON.—In his report for 1891 Rev. George Piercy says:—"The work has been carried on in a similar way to that of previous years. The little Mission-House has been resorted to regularly by many Chinese for study of the English language and writing. Direct religious instruction has constantly been given, and the Scriptures in their own language read to them, and read by them. In all 3903 visits were paid by these men to the Mission-rooms. Although several men have given evidence of being under Divine teaching, still no one has manifested such a change of heart as to warrant his baptism into the faith of Christ. The seed is sown in faith." Mr. Piercy's address is 276, Burdett-road, London, E.

Now that Spring has Come

the yearly advent of Spring Cleaning will be set a-going ding-dong by all busy housewives, and an active demand may be expected for all the various commodities required for this purpose, particularly of SUNLIGHT SOAP, which is peculiarly adapted as a cleansing agent for this annual irruption. Thrifty housewives appreciate the advantages of for making everything as good as new, and as bright as a new pin; they know that by its aid the whole house, from cellar to garret, is made clean, bright, and cheerful, with Less Labour and Greater Comfort than would otherwise have been the case.

Mrs. George Augustus Sala,

in an article on "Spring Cleaning," writes:—"Our last Annual Spring Cleaning took exactly a week where formerly it had taken a month. "Everything that was washable was subjected to the influence of "SUNLIGHT SOAP, and effectually cleansed by two persons, instead of "the usual army of additional labourers one used to lay on at such a time."

The Logical Deduction from this is Apparent.

DON'T DELAY,

but GIVE SUNLIGHT SOAP A FAIR TRIAL AT ONCE. For a few pence, in a short time, and without the usual inconveniences, you can wash your linen, your flannels, your sheets, your blankets, your floors, &c., &c., by the aid of

SUNLIGHT SOAP.

SUNLIGHT SOAP FINE ART PRIZES.

Among the Churches.

CHURCH OF ENGLAND.

Rev. J. H. Potter, of Upper Tooting, has been appointed Rural Dean of Streatham.

The secretaries of the C.M.S. have submitted to the Archbishop the name of one whom they propose as successor to Bishop Crowther.

The Bishop of Newcastle addressed on Sunday week a great gathering of cyclists in Delaval Park, devoting himself specially to Sunday observance.

So many men are still needed for special posts and general work that the C.M.S. has resolved to have meetings for intercession, on Thursday, July 14, at Sion College and at the Church Mission House.

At the annual conference in connection with the Bishop of London's Fund, the Bishop of London said that the income generally had been £18,000 in years past; but this year it had been something like £20,000.

In an article headed "A Modern Paul's Cross," The Church Monthly for June contains a very appreciative account of the open-air services that Rev. T. Selby Henrey holds during the summer months in the churchyard of St. Botolph, Aldersgate.

A letter has been received in Durham from Bishop Tucker, in which he joyously refers to the vote for the Mombasa survey. He thanks God for such a cheerful message, flashed to the shores of Africa, which showed that the British House of Commons still had sympathy with the slave.

The Bishops of London and Marlborough spoke on Saturday at Grosvenor House at the annual meeting of the London Diocesan Council for the Welfare of Young Men. At the close of the meeting a detachment of one hundred boys of the Church Lads' Brigade were inspected in the grounds by Colonel Farquharson.

Speaking of the large congregations which now, Sunday after Sunday, throng St. Faith's Church, Maidstone, especially in the evening, the Rev. R. W. Colquhoun, a few Sunday evenings ago, said he took this as an evidence that it was the old, old Gospel which the people wanted, preached, as they wished to preach it, in its great simplicity and love.

The annual united meeting of the Ipswich and Norwich Evangelical Clerical Societies will be held at Norwich on June 7 and 8. Subjects—(1) "Present Day Literature—its Relation to Faith and Morals;" to be opened by Rev. A. R. Buckland. (2) "Old Testament Criticism," to be opened by Professor Stanley Leathes, D.D. (3) "The Devotional Life," to be opened by Rev. H. C. G. Moule. The sermon will be preached by Canon Garratt.

Archdeacon Sinclair, in his charge to the clergy delivered last week, maintained vigorously his position as to the true meaning of the word "Church"—that is the body of Christ, including all of every name who believe in Christ. In the language of Christ, there are many folds, but one flock. It was important to remember that the Church of England had declared against the infallibility of the Church. The Archdeacon then proceeded to discuss the meaning of the word catholic. It had four primitive usages, namely: (1) As indicating the whole Church; (2) the universal Church as represented in any particular place; (3) as synonymous with Christian; (4) as showing the universality of the Church.

CONGREGATIONAL.

Considerable interest was shown last week in the jubilee services at Falcon-street Chapel.

The will of the late Rev. Dr. Allon shows that he had accumulated £27,556.

Mr. John Gardner, of Hackney College, has accepted the pastorate of the Redhill Congregational Church, commencing his ministry on July 1 next.

The pastorate of Wharf-street Congregational Church, Brisbane, one of the most important in Queensland, has been offered to Rev. E. R. Barrett, of Liverpool.

All the students of the Lancashire Independent College who completed their college course last summer, have now found spheres of labour, five in this country and one in South India.

The men's meeting, held every Sunday afternoon at New Court Chapel, Tolmington-park, N. (Rev. W. Pierce), has now a membership of about two hundred. In connection with the society there are an orchestra and a provident association.

The Year Book of the Lancashire Congregational Union, just issued, states that a revived activity is visible. The total number of Congregational chapels in Lancashire has risen to 317, and the sitting accommodation is now 161,099, an increase of six chapels and 3,277 sittings.

Last week's Merchants' Lecture, delivered by Rev. A. Rowland, had special reference to almsgiving. He remarked that many ways of raising public subscriptions had a distinct tendency to appeal to the vanity and weakness of human nature. The great test was to live and bestow as in the sight of their Heavenly Father. No air of patronage should mar the beauty of almsgiving, but giving simply and freely, their motive would be such as He Himself approved.

The delegates of all the Congregational churches of Imerina met in April for their Six-Monthly Conference. "The strength of British Mission work," says The Madagascar News, "has never been more apparent. The churches at which the meetings took place were thronged day after day, and the addresses and accounts of church progress were convincing evidence of how deep a hold British tuition has upon the minds as well as the hearts of the people."

BAPTIST.

Special services are being held by the Graham-street Church in the City Hall, Birmingham.

Rev. W. J. Packer has been welcomed as pastor of West-street, Rochdale.

At Doniford, near Watchet, a disused third-class railway carriage is made to serve as a chapel.

Mr. William Owen, of the Baptist College, Manchester, has accepted the pastorate of Emmanuel Chapel in that city.

The 203rd anniversary of the East-street Church, Southampton, produced many indications of the revived state of interest.

The 156th anniversary of South-street, Hull, has just been celebrated, it being shown that this venerable church is still doing important service.

A "mission van" has been placed at the disposal of the Bradford and Craven district Baptist Union, for the purpose of visiting weak churches and doing evangelistic work.

At Coupland-street, Manchester, Rev. D. Donald, of the Pastors' College, who has been working in the church since March with tokens of blessing, has been recognised as pastor.

The friends at Willesden-green find the imperative need for enlargement of the present school church, and are endeavouring to raise £400 for the purpose. The pastor is J. S. White, The Cheenuts, High-road, Willesden-green.

Mrs. Squire, who died recently at Nottingham, has left a sum of £2,250 to denominational objects:—£500 to the Foreign Missionary Society, £200 to the Home Missionary Society, £250 to the Building Fund, £500 to Pinchbeck Chapel, £200 to Broad-street Church, Nottingham, to be applied for the purchase of coals for distribution among the poor widows of the church, and £600 to be invested for the benefit of three poor widows of Baptist ministers.

The Fraternal Union met on Tuesday week in Cotton-street Chapel, Poplar, to hear an address from Dr. Pierson on the "Christian's armour and the character of the foe with whom he has to deal." At night, Dr. Sinclair Paterson presided, and addresses on "Vital Truth" were delivered by Pastor F. B. Monti on the importance of an interest in vital truth; Rev. G. D. Turner, on the sacrificial and substitutionary character of the atonement as the heart of Christianity; and Rev. G. D. Hooper on the Divine authority and inspiration of Scripture.

METHODIST.

Rev. J. Sharman, of Wesley College, Sheffield, is about to leave for missionary service in Madagascar.

The missionary income of the Methodist Episcopal Church for the past four years was 8,000,000 dols.

The Wesleyan Conference is asked to adopt, as an experiment, a board of examiners in religious knowledge.

A ladies' auxiliary is to be formed in connection with the Australasian Wesleyan Missionary Society to take special charge of the new branch of women's work in the mission field.

Rev. W. A. Burns, of Fiji, has arrived in Sydney, bringing with him six Fijian teachers and their wives, en route for New Britain and New Guinea. A further supply of teachers is shortly expected from Samoa.

A largely attended meeting of the London Wesleyan Council was held in the Centenary Hall last week to consider the question of extending the three years' system. Ultimately it was agreed that on the whole the itinerancy works well, but that in certain districts some elasticity was necessary.

At the Wesleyan District Meeting in Liverpool, a very remarkable outburst of generosity occurred. Mr. Garrett mentioned his want of a Girls' Home. Some said that one could be furnished for £200. Immediately offers were made from all parts of the room. In a private letter Mr. Garrett says: "Before I had well got my breath £220 was volunteered. I never saw anything like it. I am now committed to the Home without my own consent. God will guide us."

PRESBYTERIAN.

A good work has been opened on the "Leper Island" near Penang.

Rev. C. Moinet has been preaching in Belfast, and other parts of the North of Ireland.

In Newport-road, Middlesbrough, fruitful church and mission work is now going on, specially among the young.

The season's open-air work of the London Presbyteries was commenced on Sunday afternoon with a service in Southwark-park.

It is proposed to place a memorial of the late Principal Cairns in Berwick, where so many years of his life work were passed.

The late Dr. D. Fraser's Commentary on the New Articles of Faith, "Sound Doctrine," was issued last week by the Presbyterian Publishing House, 14, Paternoster-square, E.C.

The Sultan of Muar, a semi-independent Malay State, has given the Presbyterian missionaries permission to labour in his capital, and has even given a site for a mission station.

At the recent Forest-hill Conference of Home Mission Work, many interesting facts were given, bearing on the evangelistic efforts carried on by the South London churches.

Prospect-street, Hull, with which the late Dr. Mackay was so long associated, and now occupied by Rev. J. G. Train, while still a centre of thorough Home Mission work, shows large and increasing interest in Foreign Missions.

Rev. W. M. Macphail maintains that a church which is not evangelistic is missing its vocation. The Church will never conquer the world until it becomes, as it originally was, a Salvation Army. The Christian work of a congregation cannot be delegated to one or two paid officials.

NOTES FROM IRELAND.

The Presbyterian Orphan Society has just received bequests to the amount of £1320, and has added twelve new orphans to its list.

Rev. James Salters, recently sent out to India by the Irish Presbyterian Mission Board, has been obliged to return home on the ground of his health.

Mr. J. B. Wookey and his band of lads from Dr. Barnardo's Homes have just visited Cork and various towns in the South of Ireland, and everywhere met with a hearty reception.

The first ordinary meeting of the Belfast Methodist Council was held last Friday evening, Rev. Dr. McCutcheon presiding, when it was stated that Methodism requires four new churches in Belfast and a central hall in which to carry on mission work.

The vexed question of instrumental music in public worship is reaching an acute stage in the Presbyterian churches, and is likely to come up for debate at the approaching General Assembly in Dublin, as contrary to the general understanding two or three churches have recently introduced musical instruments.

The Belfast branch of the Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Children is doing excellent work. During the past year 233 cases have been investigated, including 530 children—195 boys, 181 girls, and 154 babies; forty-six convictions were obtained, and fourteen children were taken from their parents and placed in homes or industrial schools.

The annual meetings of the Irish Baptist Association were held on three days during the past week, presided over by Pastor A. M'Caig. The reports from every station were far beyond anything ever given in the history of the Baptists in Ireland. The Lord has wonderfully owned and blessed the simple testimony of his truth, and all the addresses delivered at these meetings were full of real, living power. It is only what was expected, prayer having been made for some time on their behalf.

SALVATION ARMY.

General Booth meets with enthusiastic receptions in the meetings arranged for on the Continent.

The first cycling corps has reported thirteen conversions as the fruit of their first week's tour in Essex.

Colonel Lucy Booth is recovering from her recent indisposition, and will proceed as soon as possible to India.

Major and Mrs. Cooke, formerly of the Slum Department, have sailed for Jamaica, and Major Milner and wife for Natal. The last-named will commence operations among the Tamil-speaking immigrants.

FALLEN ASLEEP.

At Oakley Cottage, Weston-super-Mare, on May 1, Rev. George Fisher, formerly Pastor of the Baptist Church, Alderley Edge, also of Falkirk, Scotland, aged 68; at Berwick, on 25th inst., Dr. Maclagan, brother of the Archbishop of York, father of a Presbyterian missionary in China, and himself a faithful elder; at Haverford West, after a long and painful illness, Mr. W. Garnon, aged 4[illegible], an earnest Christian; at Newport, Pembroke, Rev. [illegible] George, one of the oldest Baptist ministers in Wales—his pastorate alone extended over sixty years; at Barking, near Needham Market, on 19th inst., Rev. F. Stewart, who had been the faithful rector for fifty-six years; at Fairfield, Liverpool, on 23rd inst., Rev. John Barnacle, a widely-respected clergyman; at Rotherham, on 22nd inst., Mr. W. H. Oxley, J.P., known and beloved as a helper of many; at Windsor, Mr. B. C. Durrant, a devoted Sunday-school worker; at Sandymount, Dundalk, Rev. D. [illegible] Browne, formerly Presbyterian minister of Newtownhamilton, aged eighty-five years; at Whitehall, co. Louth, Mr. Wilson-Slator, D.L., a devoted Presbyterian elder; at Mountain Ash, Rev. T. Llewellyn, for thirty-two years a devoted pastor.

"We are glad to see our old friend John Foxe in this new and handsome form. Of all the editions that we have seen, this of Messrs. Morgan and Scott's is decidedly the best. The additions of the Editor's, bringing the history down to recent date, help to show the unchanged nature of Romanism, and the need of watching its assiduous encroachments. The introductory essay on Popery is of a very vigorous and instructive character. The numerous engravings lend additional interest to the book, and its excellent 'get up' renders it an ornament worthy of any drawing-room."—Methodist Recorder.

FORTIETH SERIES OF CASES.

CASE FOR THE WEEK.

REMARKABLE RECOVERY of a CHILD at GRANTHAM—CASE REPORTED HOPELESS.

Early in January of this year I received a letter from Mr. WM. BROWN, of SUDBROOK, near GRANTHAM, requesting immediate attention to the case of his little girl, who had been delicate from infancy, and was then in a very critical state. She was now nearly nine years old. All the worst symptoms of Consumption were present.

In three months Mr. Brown reports:—"There is a very great improvement in our little girl. She was almost too weak to take anything at first, even your medicine; now she is able to go to school each day."

I have just received a letter from the father in which he says:—"I am pleased to say our dear child continues well and strong, and able to attend school. Those dreadful night sweats, the odour of which was almost past bearing, are all gone. To-day she is nine years old. Never since her birth has she looked so well as now. She is a wonder to many. Given up by the doctor, looked upon as dead, and now to-day the picture of health and full of mirth. Words would fail to express the joy we feel. I shall be pleased to show the child, or answer any correspondent desiring to adopt your treatment."

NOTE.—CONSULTATIONS FREE at Coombe Lodge, Peckham, on TUESDAY, THURSDAY, and SATURDAY Mornings only. No charge except the usual charge for three or six weeks' supply of medicine. All Patients should read the Book first.

"MERINOLAN" SUMMER UNDER-WEAR—for LADIES, GENTLEMEN or CHILDREN.
Samples and Illustrated Catalogues containing all particulars sent on receipt of inquiry, post free.

Opinions of the Press.

THE QUEEN says: "The latest samples in Under-wear (Forsyth's 'Merinolan,' Glasgow) that have come under our notice, are little short of perfection, and may be obtained in a delicate, silky texture for the present season, or in heavier qualities for Autumn, both for Ladies and Gentlemen. In all the qualities they are admirably soft and exquisite to the touch, whilst in the shaping of the garments, they are beyond praise."

THE LADY says: "Messrs. Forsyth, of Renfield-street, Glasgow, have brought out a most beautiful make of Under-wear called 'Merinolan,' which is extremely soft, very elastic, and combines every possible improvement in fabrics, fastenings, and finish. Every hygienic condition is fulfilled by 'Merinolan,' and it is very moderate in price, considering the very high-class quality of the garments."

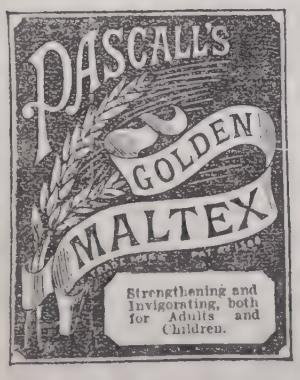
Opinions of the Press.



THE COURT JOURNAL says: "Mr. Forsyth, of Glasgow, has attained much-desired fame for his makes of Under-wear, producing garments which combine quality, comfort, and all possible improvements. His 'Merinolan,' whether as an Undervest or Combination for Ladies, or Shirts and Pants for Gentlemen, are alike beautifully soft, elastic, and delicate in texture, so that the most sensitive skin may not be subjected to the slightest irritation, thus rendering the various articles of the highest utility, and to be specially appreciated by the invalid."

HEALTH says: "In the garments made by Messrs. Forsyth, the purchaser has a guarantee of their sound wearing qualities; while the great attention to the matter of finish will afford to wearers a great degree of comfort."

LANCET says: "The samples from Messrs. Forsyth are eminently satisfactory, and are gratifying examples of home manufacture."

Notes and Comments.

NEXT week we purpose giving portrait and sketch of Rev. George Cousins, Editorial Secretary of the London Missionary Society, and formerly missionary in Madagascar.

Rev. F. B. Meyer's studies on "Moses, the Man of God" are concluded with the "Last Words" in our present issue. We have from time to time been pleased to learn that these papers have been highly appreciated by our readers. In due time they will appear in permanent form, with illustrations.

Mr. Moody, as will be seen, has now entered on his short evangelistic campaign in the English provincial towns. He is at Shrewsbury for the closing days of this week, and the friends there have arranged for some other evangelist to take the overflows, and to follow up the work when Mr. Moody has left. If this plan were generally adopted the greater fruitfulness of the special effort would be secured. It will be observed that the Wandsworth friends have had cause for rejoicing in this respect.

Mr. and Mrs. Sankey sail from Southampton for New York on Saturday next.

At the annual meeting of Miss De Broen's Belleville Mission in Paris, referred to elsewhere, Lord Kinnaird made the excellent and timely proposal that a thanksgiving fund should be raised in connection with the remarkable work of evangelisation sustained these years past by Miss De Broen and her helpers. Striking in the circumstances of its inception, this mission has enjoyed a large measure of success in a very difficult field. We sincerely trust that the proposal to institute a thanksgiving fund will be heartily taken up and supported.

Dr. Pentecost has begun a mid-week service in the Marylebone Presbyterian Church (Upper George-street) for the benefit, not only of his own congregation, but for very many people who cannot attend his Sunday services. The service is practically a Bible reading, critical, apologetic, and expository. He has chosen the Gospel of John for the basis of his readings. The service is held on Thursday evening in the large audience room of the church from eight till nine o'clock. The first service was attended last Thursday evening by about six hundred persons.

The action taken by the Bishop of Durham in arbitrating and mediating between the miners on strike and their employers is one which we shall hope to see followed in other quarters where unhappy strikes take place. The Bishop is to be congratulated, not only upon having been able by his kindly labours to put an end to widespread misery, but also upon having furnished a strong, practical illustration of the good likely to follow from the appointment of properly-authorised Councils of conciliation.

Sir Arthur Gordon, late Governor of Fiji, contributes to Tuesday's Times a very weighty letter on the proposed resumption by Queensland of the labour traffic in the islands of the Western Pacific. From former experience he shows that the needful supervision of the traffic will be very difficult, even with the fullest precautions. Moreover, the depopulation of the islands will be in itself a great evil, as tending to the rapid extinction of the native races. Sir Arthur suggests that the needed labour should be got from the swarming coolie populations of the Indian peninsula, where emigration would be a blessing, and where proper supervision can be easily maintained.

The Standard of Monday contained the following announcement:—

An entertainment under the title of "From 'the Wilds' to Westminster" will open to-day in the Imperial Theatre at the Aquarium. It is given by a troupe of Ama Zulus, fifteen in number—seven men and eight women, all of whom are baptized Christians. They belong to Zulu tribes who took part in the war, and several of them are grandchildren of warriors for whose services at Isandhlwana and elsewhere medals were awarded them by Her Majesty's Government. The entertainment is intended mainly to illustrate the old barbarous and warlike ways of their forefathers, and the domesticated lives which they and many thousands more are now living, owing to the vigorous efforts of the missionaries. So averse were they on landing in this country to reproduce their native customs, and especially their war songs and dances, that it was not until after an appeal to a high Church dignitary as to whether they would be morally right in so doing that they consented to the exhibition being part of their programme.

These Zulus are mostly from Edendale and Driefontein, and have been under the care of Rev. Mr. Harrison and Rev. W. A. Hilling. All who take an interest in missionary work, as well as those who wish to see an excellent entertainment, should visit the "Wilds" at Westminster without delay, as the time for the troupe to remain in London is limited.

That missionary work should be furthered by an entertainment at the Aquarium is a startling idea even in these mixed days of linsey-woolsey garments, and of the ox and the ass ploughing together (Deut. xxii. 10, 11). But is it not pitiful that men, professedly servants of Jesus Christ, should override the convictions of these babes in Christ, if, indeed, they are such, as we would fain believe? They at least show more spiritual sense than the High Church dignitary, who, in spite of their aversion, advised them to reproduce their native customs—and, of all places, in the Westminster Aquarium! A correspondent truly says, "It is grievous that Satan should thus make the Lord to be wounded in the house of his friends, and his lambs to be possibly led astray by a spurious Christianity."

In the House of Commons last week a question was asked of the Financial Secretary for War based on the statements recently made by Miss Sarah Robinson in our columns. The answer given was, "that Miss Robinson's visitors had never been refused permission, but that she had been informed that the Meetings must be of an unsectarian character, a caution necessary, as religious subjects of a controversial character had been introduced. There was no intention of interfering with Miss Robinson's work, if only she kept within the regulations."

We have the best authority for saying that this answer does not represent the true state of the case. Nothing has ever been said to Miss Robinson about the meetings she held in barracks being unsectarian; the meetings have simply been stopped. Much more testimony could be produced confirming the statements that have been made in recent issues; but it will be evident to those acquainted with army matters that the names of informants cannot be made public, as they would suffer in consequence. Several letters received late must stand over for consideration.

The following letter, written by Canon Tristram, and referring to the first question in the House of Commons, appeared in last week's Record, will carry with it all the weight of the Canon's honoured name:—

It is to be hoped that the friends of the soldier will not rest satisfied with the very unsatisfactory reply of the Secretary of War to the questions relating to the thwarting of Miss Robinson's noble work among the troops of Portsmouth, and to the stoppage of the circulation of religious literature not having Dr. Edghill's imprimatur among the patients at Netley Hospital. Further questions might also have been asked respecting interference with the Army Scripture Readers' Society. Practically no denial to the charges was given. It was stated that the dissemination of literature not in accordance with certain teaching might lead to quarrels and dissensions. Really has it come to this, that the British soldier is such an unintelligent child that he is not to be trusted or permitted to read anything which does not commend itself to the head of the military ecclesiastical department? We had thought that these were the days of religious freedom. It seems, however, that the army is an exception. As to the certificates we have had of Dr. Edghill's excellence and fairness, unless certain letters of his published in the secular press are forgeries, these testimonials have less than the usual value of such documents, for they have been evoked by his own invitation. And unless certain letters and extracts from letters of his, printed by Mr. McLeod, and which have not been challenged, are forgeries also, Dr. Edghill's tone to his subordinates is very different from what was usual in the days—now many years ago—when I acted as a military chaplain. Mr. Sadlier's testimony in your columns in favour of Dr. Edghill is of the same value as a testimonial from Canon Knox Little to Canon Carter's staunch Protestantism. There used to be a minute—when Dr. Greig was Chaplain-General—forbidding Chaplains to take the Eastward Position. It would be interesting to know when this was repealed. If the letter to his subordinates by Dr. Edghill is not a forgery it is difficult to understand how the Secretary should have been instructed to say in his place in Parliament that the testimonies to Dr. Edghill were "spontaneous."

The correspondent from whose letter we quoted a fortnight ago writes:—

Mr. Horton wishes me to correct the impression I gave that he has receded in any way from opinions expressed in "Inspiration and the Bible." For these four years, he says, all kinds of prejudice and ignorance have raged round the book, but no one has been good enough to point out to him any mis-statement. He is quite ready to retract whatever is wrong, but he believes the position of scholarship on the subject of the Bible is the only way of vindicating its authority in the present crisis.

Of course the force of this remark depends upon what Mr. Horton would regard as "pointing out to him any misstatement."

In the book to which reference has been made, Mr. Horton says:—

Our blood runs cold as we read (Esther ix. 5-17) how the fierce and pitiless exiles slew five hundred men in Shushan the palace, and many more in the rest of the king's provinces! and how the beautiful Jewish queen, unsatiated with slaughter, asked for a further butchery, in which three hundred more were slain in the palace, so that altogether seventy-five thousand men perished; and how then the Jews "rested and made it a day of feasting and gladness."

This is a terrible indictment, but a more careful reading on the critic's part would have saved his readers from so painful a misrepresentation of facts. The narrative states that "the Jews gathered themselves together . . . to lay hands on such as sought their hurt; and that "they stood for their lives, and had rest from their enemies, and slew of their foes seventy-five thousand." It was, from first to last not, as Mr. Horton represents, "a hideous outbreak of Semitic fanaticism," but a defence of their homes and wives and children from their ancient and inveterate foe, the Amalekite, and from those who aided and abetted him.

Mr. Horton proceeds to declare that

To leave any room for supposing that God either approved the action, or had it recorded for our admiration, is to confuse the moral sense and to blaspheme the name of Him who has required us to love our enemies, supporting his law upon the great and wonderful fact that God Himself is love, and loves the world.

But has not the writer of these bold words read the account of Amalek's attack on Israel in Rephidim, and the Lord's command to Moses:—

Write this for a memorial in a book, and rehearse it in the ears of Joshua: for I will utterly put out the remembrance of Amalek from under heaven (Exod. xvii. 8-16; see also 1 Sam. xv.).

That the Jews did not lay their hands upon the spoil is in evident allusion to Saul, who took the best of the spoil and spared Agag, the Amalekite king. We are very far from wishing "to make a man an offender for a word," but when we are urged to apply a ruthless criticism to the Scriptures of truth, when also the critic is a prominent teacher of Holiness, and his words are therefore accepted as authoritative by many of his hearers, we think he will be led to withdraw his sweeping denunciations, "if," to use his own words, "we will only be quite candid, and if we are willing to bestow some patience in going whither our candour leads us" (p. 10). Nor is the higher (?) criticism on Esther by any means the only part which candour must lead the author to withdraw.

It is no exaggeration to say that we are living in the midst of one of the greatest revolutions that the English people have ever passed through. Its magnitude is apt to be overlooked because its progress is as subtle as it is all-pervasive. With no manifestation of popular excitement, with no building of barricades, or sacking of palaces, or sanguinary conflicts in the streets, like those that ushered in the French Revolution, a movement is on foot among us which is involving as certain a transference of power, and as decisive results. We refer, of course, to the rapid progress of the Labour Party. What the coming dissolution and election may bring it is impossible to say.

But evidently even now there are striking symptoms of the rapid development of the power of working-men. The Prime Minister and the Leader of the House give a patient hearing to their representatives, and evidently shrink from meeting their demands with an unqualified negative. The members of the London County Council, sensible that their position is largely affected by the votes of the working-classes, are conspicuously attentive to their interests, and quick to provide for them, as in the recent arrangement for working-men's trains. A peer of the realm, who is generally credited with the sagacity that can read the signs of the times, says that working-men will no longer be content with the crumbs which fall from the table, but will demand to sit at the board; and he admits that they are justified in their request.

It is no part of our province to express a preference for rule by the few or the many, though, in our opinion, masses of men are apt to be swayed by the same passions, to be driven by the same impulses, and to exercise the same tyranny, as the autocrats who are credited with so much of the evil that has cursed nations and races of men. It is interesting to learn that several of the leaders in the present movement are not ashamed to avow their allegiance to Him who once wrought in the carpenter's shop of Nazareth. One or two of them not infrequently occupy pulpits and address religious assemblies.

Various causes have been assigned for the non-attendance of working-men at places of public worship, which is said to arise, not from hostility, but from indifference. And we are quite prepared to admit the truth of several of them. No doubt the pew-system has done much to perpetuate class-distinctions. There has been too much scholastic preaching and too little of that straightforward honest talk such as working-men like. And there has been, perhaps, too much indifference on the part of Christian men to the crying evils of over-crowding, sweating, and insufficient pay. One such instance as that which came under our notice lately of a millionaire manufacturer, a professing Christian, who pays his young women employées five shillings per week, leaving them to pick up the remainder of their necessary livelihood as well as they can amid the temptations of a large town, is enough to prejudice a whole population against himself and the religion he professes.

It is pitifully true that our churches and chapels are very generally built and arranged for the comfortable classes; but the remedy does not lie in the formation of working-men's churches. We cannot too strongly accentuate the wisdom of the Divine Love which would gather all ranks and classes, for one day at least, under a common roof, breaking the bread of the Gospel to all as their common food, uniting them to the one cross, the one Father, and the one home. The humanitarian or "social gospel" is by itself not a gospel. The Gospel has always antagonised social evils by regenerating the hearts and lives of individual men. But its social aspects are not primary, but secondary. Its first appeal to man is as a sinner needing redemption; and when it has brought him to God, it constitutes him a good father, or citizen, or patriot, or philanthropist, or a goodsoldier fighting under Christ's banner against all forms of wrong.

A number of very important changes are to be made in the Protestant Church in Prussia, owing, it is said, to the personal interest taken by the Emperor and Empress in the growth and spiritual condition of the large towns. The Government intend to ask, in the next Budget, for means to attach additional curates to the incumbencies in these centres, and the ecclesiastical authorities intend, we believe, to arrange for the churches to be kept open on weekdays, as on Sundays, and for there to be a brief evening service daily.

The Uganda Troubles.

Up to the time of writing, no reliable news has come from the seat of the reported disturbances through English channels; until it arrives we must suspend our judgment on the questions at issue. Meantime, the following deeply interesting summary of the history of the Uganda Mission, sent to The Manchester Examiner by Rev. C. Sutcliffe, of Holy Trinity Vicarage, Stalybridge, deserves to be carefully studied:—

We must go back to the days of 1875, when Gordon was governor of the Soudan, whose efforts to put down the slave trade on the Upper Nile led him to the very confines of Uganda, and during which year he sent Co'onel Long, one of his officers, to visit King Mtesa, of Uganda. That same year Stanley made his second effort to cross the great continent, and leaving Zanzibar, arrived at Mtesa's capital in the month of April. During his stay there he wrote what has now become an historical letter, which appeared in The Daily Telegraph of November 15, 1875, asking in the King's name that Christian missionaries and teachers might be sent to Uganda. That letter evoked such sympathy that a sum of £12,000 was offered to the Church Missionary Society if that Society would undertake the work.

To the honour of its committee (among whom was that eminent statesman, Lord Lawrence), this letter was answered in the affirmative. Seven suitable men were at once selected, including the saintly Alex. Mackay, and sent out. The reply letter to Mtesa, which was signed for the committee by Archbishop Tait, of Canterbury, and the Earl of Chichester, contains a pregnant paragraph:—"We hope that very soon the Word of God, which is the foundation of England's throne and England's greatness, will be translated into the language of Uganda, and that it will be the means of establishing a lasting friendship between the kingdoms of Uganda and England."

Now, this letter, read in the light of recent events, is very suggestive, for it takes us back to the time when there was no British East Africa Company formed, no communication of a political character between our country and Uganda, and, what is still more significant, when the French Jesuits, or "White Fathers," had not even approached the Victoria Nyanza. The Church missionaries in 1876 went to penetrate the East Coast, as others had penetrated the West Coast sixty years before, with no weapon in their hands but the Word of God, and with no other motive than that of carrying the Gospel message to the benighted people of those far-off lands.

The history of the Mission is full of pathetic interest, and may be had at the C.M.S. House, Salisbury-square, E.C.; but it is to the entry of the French Jesuit priests, in 1879 (two years after the English Church missionaries), that especial attention should be given. Up to that time, notwithstanding the heavy losses sustained by the Mission, the work at the capital progressed with such success as could reasonably be expected. It is quite true that the King was fickle and troublesome; but Mackay and his fellow-missionaries (some of whom were personally known to me) quietly won their way amid the fierce and subtle opposition of the Arab slave-traders, who ever were and must be the natural foes of Christian teachers.

But on the arrival of the Jesuits another source of trouble presented itself to the Mission, for although professing to be a Christian body, their main aim seems to have been to undermine the influence of the Protestant missionaries, to draw away their converts, and to set up the Roman system in the Court of Uganda. Here, then, is the "bone of contention." Many think that the Jesuits had no right to invade that country as Christian teachers, since the work had already been undertaken. Moreover, an informal conference had been held on the coast near Zanzibar two years before, when the English and French missionaries agreed not to trespass on each other's pastures, in the face of the dense heathenism of that continent. This has ever in the main been carried out by all the great Protestant missionary societies (British and American) in their operations, so that if the French Jesuits had adopted this course no such trouble as that before us would have been experienced.

From that time to this there have been constant feuds, the Jesuits attempting to oust the "heretical teacher," while the latter, with the Englishman's tenacity and fervour, has held the fort up to now. But it is since the time that the petition of Africa became an accomplished fact, and Uganda was found to be in the sphere of British influence, that the spirit of Jesuitical opposition has been more prominently displayed. They would seem to think that English authority is synonymous with Protestant bigotry and intolerance, as they seize every opportunity of undermining it. What, then, is our duty? It is to wait patiently for Captain Lugard's report, which I have no doubt will clearly vindicate his course of action. If he has deposed Mwanga, the King (Mtesa's son), who is nominally a Roman Catholic, it is because the King has allowed himself to be used as a tool in the hands of designing men who are hostile to British authority. Greater men than Mwanga have had to be removed from their kingly position when their weakness or vacillation has proved them to be a source of danger to the State. Certain we are of one thing, that England's authority has always been on the side of religious and civil freedom; that whether its subjects be Mohammedans, Hindoos, Romanists, or Protestants, it holds the scales with unflinching equality, only one condition being imposed—that they shall be loyal and true to the power that shields them.

"TAKE FAST HOLD."

We must take fast hold on God's Word; and we must believe that all is true which the same speaketh of God, although God and all his creatures should seem unto us otherwise than the Word speaketh of Him, as we see the Canaanitish woman did. The Word is sure, and faileth not, though heaven and earth must pass away as Christ saith. But, oh! how hard and bitter is this to natural sense and reason, that she must strip herself naked, and forsake all which she feeleth and conceiveth, and must only depend upon the bare word, specially she conceiving and feeling quite the contrary! The Lord of his mercy help us with such a faith in our necessities, and at our last end when we strive with death.—Luther.

LAST WORDS.—(Deut. xxxiv. 10.)

What a marvellous wealth of meaning there is in the words with which an unknown writer closes the record that Moses left unfinished! With his own hand he probably appended his song, and his blessing on the tribes. Amongst the last words he spoke and wrote were the beatitude with which the previous chapter closes, and which could never have been composed had it not been for his noble life. And then that tongue grew silent, and that hand still, and probably two or three centuries or more passed away before another (perhaps Ezra) essayed to write an epitaph, which might have been inscribed by angel-hands upon that unknown grave in the land of Moab.

It is only when the traveller has traversed many a winding valley of the Alps, and looks towards Mont Blanc from the shores of Geneva's lake that he, at a distance of some fifteen miles, realises its true magnitude. And so, great as Moses was to his contemporaries, succeeding ages have only brought out the colossal proportions of the character of the great servant of God.

Though Isaiah the evangelic, Ezekiel the seraphic, and David the prophet of the Messiah, rear themselves with heaven-piercing greatness in the Bible story, yet amongst them all Moses retains a unique and royal position; and it is still true that with the exception of John the Baptist, whose proximity to Christ gave to his ministry a special significance, "there hath not arisen a prophet, since, in Israel like unto Moses." Still, his noblest characteristic consists in his moral and religious greatness, so that the Lord knew him face to face; and still this is the highest encomium that can be passed upon his life work, that "he did all that God sent him to do in the land of Egypt, to Pharaoh, and to all his servants, and to all his land." O servant of God, faithful in all his house, exact in thy obedience, and uncompromising in thine allegiance, thy hand was mighty because it wrought with God, thy deeds were full of power because they shone with the light of his glory!

If we were called upon to design a monument to his memory, on the four sides of its base we would affix medallions depicting him in four of the most momentous scenes of his glorious career. The first, with rod outstretched over Egypt, as the messenger of the Almighty, able to call for thunder and lightning, darkness and hail, locusts and frogs, plagues and death. Second, of him standing amid the victorious hosts elate with the rapture of an accomplished work, as the emancipated people break out in irrepressible and triumphant shouts. Third, as he descends from Mount Sinai, the Lawgiver, bearing in his hands the tables of stone. Fourth, as the historian of creation, of the deluge and of the first mysterious centuries of human existence, sitting at his scroll with an ear attent to voices that spoke to him from the unseen. But on the pediment itself we would rear a statue of one kneeling in the attitude of fixed devotion, with face on which a light was flung as from another face unseen by any other eyes than his. That face to face communion was and is his proudest prerogative, only one other of all of woman born has completely resembled and surpassed him in this, and He it was, who said, "He that sent Me is with Me. The Father hath not left Me alone, for I do always those things that please Him."

There are two or three matters that call for a few concluding words:—

I. The Indispensableness of a Human Life to God.—One of the most wonderful things in the history of this world is the way in which the Almighty God has bound Himself by the necessity of employing human agents for the execution of Divine purposes. It is as if the whole resources of the Almighty would be abortive unless there were a human channel through which to flow, or as if the stores of omnipotence could only be unlocked for man by the key of a human life. God on the one hand, and the world upon the other, wait for the coming of the man who shall be the means of communication between the two.

When the purpose of God is about to unfold itself in covenant relationships to men, He must call Abraham from the midst of his idolatrous surroundings to isolation in the land of his adoption, that through him the provisions of that covenant might be announced and sealed.

When from the anarchy of the Jewish commonwealth He had resolved to build up a kingdom which should in some way realise the ideal kingship amongst men, "He chose David his servant, and took him from the sheepfolds, from following the ewes that gave suck."

When the whole Gentile world is waiting for the Gospel of his love, He restrains his direct speech, though He might have spoken so that all the world should hear; He restrains the angels, though they must have fretted against the barrier of his prohibition, and He cannot act until He has called a man named Peter from the house of Simon the tanner, or a man named Paul, pacing to and fro on the quay of Troas, looking wistfully across the western sea to where Mount Athos shone like a pyramid of burnished gold.

In every age of the world the long traces of Divine purpose and preparation have lain in the fissures of the granite foundations of the universe, awaiting the advent of men whose hearts, lit with a Divine enthusiasm, have been as necessary as sparks to fire them. As dynamite and gunpowder are useless without the spark, so God's plans are in vain until associated with human hearts glowing with Divine passion—a Luther, a Carey, a Wilberforce.

There are no passages more marvellous in the writings of the Apostle Paul than those which declare that men may become fellow-labourers with God, his weapons, his instruments, his mouthpieces—the members of his body, pliant to the impulse of his will.

And it is this that ennobles men. We seem to think that the men whom God selects to serve him in these august capacities were by nature men of different mould to ourselves, cast in some special shape, to be broken immediately so as not to be repeated; but probably this is a mistake, and that God's chosen instruments in all ages were not specially great before God used them, but became great in being used. As a stream laden with the soil through which it flows drops deposits of golden ore in the sands of its bed, so as God's purposes flow through human channels they drop deposits of his own character and thought and will, which enrich those lives and characters for ever. Men are great when they have been greatly used by Him whose greatness is unsearchable.

This was the thought which animated the Apostle Paul. He was conscious of weakness, and fear, and much trembling. His speech and preaching were not with persuasive words of human eloquence. His speech was halting and his appearance unprepossessing. But he was even glad of all these disqualifications, because they made him more dependent on the power of Christ. And certainly his marvellous influence in the world can only be accounted for on the ground of his having obtained help from God and become his organ among men.

There were without doubt the elements of a great and noble character in Moses. He was designed on a great scale. But the vast influence he has exerted through all the subsequent ages can only be accounted for by remembering that through him the thoughts and purposes of God found a ready and adequate expression.

And so it is still. God still needs human instrumentality for the execution of the designs that must be accomplished ere the present age can close. It is of comparatively small importance as to what men's natural capacities may be, so long as they are susceptible of the Divine touch, and willing to be baptized with the Divine fire. Shall not each reader now lift his heart and life for the blessed baptism, and then cry, in answer to the Divine challenge for agents, "Here am I, send me"?

II. — Comparisons and Contrasts. — God said to Moses, shortly after the people entreated that they might not again hear that awful voice speaking to them directly from Heaven, "I will raise them up a prophet among their brethren like unto thee." In allusion to these words, the multitudes that heard Jesus speak on that memorable occasion, when He described Himself as giving the rivers of living water to those who believe, asked, "Is this the Prophet?" And Stephen, in his defence before the Sanhedrim, quoted the same words, with evident reference to their fulfilment in Him of whom Moses wrote. That greater Prophet could be none other than our Lord, who unites in his blessed Person the triple office of Prophet, Priest, King. These are points of likeness and contrast.

Like Moses, our Lord sprang from the ranks of poverty, and spent his earliest days in a peasant's home.

Like Moses, our Lord refused kingdoms and the power of them when offered at the threshold of his earthly career, and preferred to take them only as the gift of his Father.

Like Moses, our Lord emancipated his people with blood, and led them through death to resurrection, glory, honour, and immortality.

Like Moses, our Lord has taught us to sing a new song.

Like Moses, our Lord acted as law-giver, speaking on the Mount of Beatitudes that marvellous Sermon on the Mount, in which He clearly carried out the legislation of his great predecessor to further issues.

Like Moses, our Lord is the true Daysman and Mediator, speaking to God for man and for man to God, though He has done what Moses would have done, but could not. He has given Himself to be a curse, and was cut off from the midst of the people whom He loved, not for his own sins, but for theirs.

Like Moses, our Lord was misunderstood and misapprehended. Prejudice and hatred dogged his steps. His own received Him not; His family combined to thwart Him; He was as a root out of a dry ground, not desired.

But the points of contrast are greater. Moses was a confidential servant in the house; Jesus a Son over the whole house. Moses faltered in his high commission, and turned, aside from the great purpose of his life, but Jesus never once swerved from the pathway of utter and glad surrender. Moses died on the threshold of the Land of Rest, whilst Jesus brings his people in and settles them there. If, then, a man who set at nought Moses' law died without compassion on the word of two or three witnesses, of how much sorer punishment, think ye, shall he be judged worthy, who hath trodden under foot the Son of God, and hath counted the blood of the covenant a common thing, and hath done despite to the Spirit of Grace?

III. The Realisation of his Desire.—"Let me go over and see that goodly land and Lebanon." So he prayed again and again with eager ardency of spirit. But it was not to be, for reasons that we have seen. And yet there was a day when he did stand within the precincts of the blessed land, on the slopes of Mount Hermon, with which Lebanon was closely associated. "That goodly mountain Lebanon."

It was the hour of the Lord's Transfiguration, when He was girding Himself for death, the death of the cross, and the Father sought to brace his human spirit to endure. "Go," said the voice of God, addressing Moses and Elijah, as they stood forth conspicuous amid the ranks of heaven, "Go, bright spirits, the one to represent the legal, the other the prophetic dispensation, and let it be seen that there is a golden thread, a unity of purpose, through all God's dealings with mankind." So was Moses honoured, and his prayer answered better than he thought.

There was a sense in which Moses often spake of the exodus that Jesus was about to accomplish at Jerusalem. Leviticus is a treatise on it; and every sacrifice which he described, every item of ritual which he enforced, spake of that unparalleled event. But sojourn in heaven had made his interest in it still more keen. And as he came fresh from that world, thinking with intense interest on the approaching death of Jesus, he could not forbear to speak of it with new and tender emphasis.

But how evidently was his inferiority to the blessed Lord established, in that he stood beside him to comfort and assist. Great as he was, he was in the presence of a greater than himself. "He," i.e., the Redeemer, "has been counted worthy of more glory than Moses, by so much as He that built the house hath more honour than the house."

Let us, then, turn from the servant to the Master; let us remember how stars pale in sunlight, and the river is lost in the sea; let us pass from the song of the Red Sea to that of the Sea of Glass; let us adore Him who made Moses what he became, and is willing to do as much through each of us, in so far as we are prepared, at any cost, to surrender ourselves to Him for his service. He only wants us to be faithful, and He will make Himself responsible for counsel in the cabinet, prowess on the field, directions in organisation, and all else we need for the accomplishment of a work which shall live for ever.

COLPORTAGE IN SOUTH WILTS.

During the past four years I have been labouring in this part of Wiltshire, visiting twenty villages and hamlets with tracts, Bibles, Testaments, and Gospel books monthly. I have sold nearly eight hundred Bibles and Testaments, four hundred "Foxe's Book of Martyrs," and over ten thousand Gospel books, besides periodicals and Scripture cards. Numbers of the village people have, by this means, been shown the nature of Romanism and Ritualism, and have had God's way of salvation set before them. Some, also, have given up corrupting literature for the pure thus supplied.

In addition to this, I have charge of a mission hall, erected in a village named Swallowcliffe three years ago last December, because of the Ritualistic practices in the English Church. The Lord has graciously been with us, and souls have been saved. The prayers of your readers are desired, and help to continue and extend the work will be very gratefully received.

Bible Carriage Work.

The Northcote Willy Bible Carriage Mission has been carried on successfully for a great number of years. Since May, 1881, two hundred thousand Bibles and Testaments, besides an immense number of tracts, Scripture cards, Gospel books, &c., have been circulated, and all sorts and conditions of men have heard the Gospel; and through these agencies God has graciously blessed his Word to the salvation of many precious souls. The carriage has visited nearly every county in England with great success. We regret to hear the workers are now feeling the want of funds; in order to free themselves in this respect they have decided to hold a sale of work from May 31 to June 28, for the purpose of raising the sum of £250 for the purchase of a good supply of scriptures and publications, and to enable them to clear the Mission from debt. During the sale Gospel meetings will be held each evening. It is to be hoped that Christians will support Mr. Willy in his grand and substantial work. He may be addressed 66, Cambridge-avenue, Chapeltown-road, Leeds.

MARTYRS' MEMORIAL HALL, DARTFORD.—The second anniversary of the work in connection with this hall was held last week. The report shows a variety of operations in the way of Gospel meetings, weekday Protestant and other lectures, temperance, Bible-classes, juvenile work, &c. God has greatly blessed the Mission; but at present it is most important that an addition should be made to the building for the accommodation of the Lord's work; and for this about £450 is required.

"PARSON HARDWORK'S NUT."

A very lively and instructive book with this title has been published by C. H. Kelly, 2, Castle-street, E.C. The writer is Rev. W. Wigley Haughton, and his racy chapters, descriptive of ministerial life and experience in the Methodist body, may be read with interest and profit by all. We extract the address given by Parson Hardwork at the welcome meeting held on his appointment as Superintendent of the Poppleton Circuit:—

I congratulate you, my friends, upon your large chapel. The only thing it needs is filling, and there are enough non-worshippers in Poppleton to fill it over and over again. God wants it filled, for I don't think an empty sanctuary can be a pleasing sight to Him. The Methodist Conference wants it filled. I have no doubt you yourselves want it filled, and I am sure that I do. This, then, is the nut which has to be cracked, the problem which has to be solved. It will only be accomplished as each member is brought to realise his personal responsibility. If you simply fold your arms, and leave all the work to me, it will never be done. You must all feel that it's your concern as much as mine, and that we are partners in this business. I want every member to become a downright hard worker. The Church of Christ has no room in it for drones.

If the love of God fills your hearts, service will be a delight. It is only when persons live a long way from God that they find Christian work irksome. It is impossible to drive an engine with cold water, and equally impossible to make an effective Christian worker out of a man who lacks the fire of God's love in his heart. Was not Paul supremely happy when serving the Lord? The reason was that he was filled with love to the Saviour. He himself says, "The love of Christ constraineth me."

It is terribly sad to see the numbers of people who are simply frittering away their lives. This was vividly brought home to me in one of my circuits. A certain man used so frequently to pass my window that I could not help making him a study. He was a tall, portly fellow, and wore a short jacket. I found that his one purpose in life was to kill time. Day after day he wandered aimlessly up and down the street with slow step, as if he had such multitudes of minutes and hours that they were of no consequence to him. Now he would stand and listen to a German band, now he would gaze at the Italian organ-grinder's monkey, or perhaps would stop for five minutes and talk drearily with some neighbour about the weather and the crops.

That man set me a-thinking. I often wondered how he regarded life, and what his thoughts were on commencing his daily, monotonous round of mere existence. It was evident that he had never realised the value and sacredness of life on earth. And yet that man is simply the type of thousands who, though anxious to live, are constantly scheming how to kill the hours. How totally different was St. Paul, with his great watchword: "Redeem the time!"

If we are going to do anything at Poppleton we shall have to be aggressive. We have tried the defensive too long; it doesn't answer. It seldom answers in military matters; it never answers in spiritual work. I have often thought that that well-known hymn of Mr. Sankey's, "Hold the Fort," would have been far better rendered thus:

Capture forts, for I am coming,
Jesus signals still;
Wave the answer back to heaven,
By thy grace we will.

God wants us to turn assailant and drive the devil out of the world. For while we are boxed up in our comfortable sanctuaries, singing contentedly our beautiful hymns, and soothing one another's feelings, every now and then, with votes of thanks, the devil is going to and fro in the earth, and is every moment binding fresh captives, and throwing them into his loathsome dungeons. If we cannot learn from anybody else, let us, as Latimer says, learn from the devil, for there are some matters on which he is fitted to be our teacher....

There is one thing, my friends, I wish you to understand from the very beginning of my ministry amongst you. It is this—I am no party man. Factions are a sin, and cause endless mischief in the Church, and I therefore earnestly beseech you to shun them. As long as there are bickerings and parties God will never bless. The Lord Jesus Christ has taught us to desire unity. In his memorable prayer, He said; "I pray that they all may be one; even as Thou, Father, art in Me, and I in Thee, that they also may be one in us; that the world may believe that Thou hast sent Me." The nearer we get to Jesus Christ the more unity there will be amongst us, because He is the centre of all true unity. Let me beseech you in all your works to keep one end steadily in view, and that neither the exaltation of party nor of self, but the glory of God...

As I get older, many of the dreams of my childhood begin to vanish away, as do the white mists upon your hills when the sun arises; but, amid vanishing dreams and ideals which are discovered to be impracticable, the thought of life's possibility, and its solemnity, too, ever abides, and constantly waxes stronger. It is an inspiring as well as a humbling vision. May God this night open every blind eye to behold it!

GREAT ASSEMBLY HALL, MILE-END.

"Georgie," or the "Bishop" of Whitechapel, names by which Mr. Geo. Nokes is familiarly known among the denizens of the East-end of London, has just concluded a five weeks' Mission in the great Assembly Hall, Mile-end-road. Although the weather during May has been more like July, still the large hall has been crammed on Sundays with its eager listeners. There can be no doubt that Mr. Nokes has won the respect, and in many cases the hearts of the poor among whom he lives and transacts his business. His yearly six months' services during the winter season at the Pavilion Theatre also make him widely known in this part of the metropolis.

It is no wonder, then, that crowds have visited Mr. Charrington's hall to hear this popular man. His style of preaching and matter are well adapted to an East-end audience. A native of Essex, he retains to a wonderful extent his "native dialect;" as someone quaintly observed, "You can nearly cut it." He is very original, most pleasant, but at the same time awfully earnest in his delivery. His illustrations are very touching, and mostly taken from scenes in his own life and experience. He is a born preacher; and we thank God for such a man, whose grand natural abilities are devoted to the cause of uplifting his fellow-men, and preaching the unsearchable riches of Christ as their only Saviour and safeguard from sin. Not only have his addresses to sinners been blessed to the change of life of many who were living in sin, but God's own children have been built up and edified by the unvarnished truth of his Word pointedly and earnestly placed before them. Many interesting cases might be cited; suffice it to record the following happy results of our brother's Mission.

A poor woman came one evening, accompanied by a little ragged boy. She had a black eye and a wound in her side; for days she had been away from home drinking, and on her return her husband had thrashed her. Her poor old mother, who had prayed for her for years, had found her out and brought her to the hall. The poor, wretched drunkard cried much, and it was quite touching to see the little boy tugging at her ragged dress, and saying, "Don't cry, mother; has father been a kicking of you again?" Great was the rejoicing as this wanderer declared she would sign the pledge and give her heart to Christ.

Another woman, of the costermonger-wife type, came into the inquiry-room in great distress, and, pulling out of her pocket a bottle, showed Mr. Nokes the poison she had intended taking that night—her home being so miserable, her husband such a brute, that she had determined to end her existence. Something induced her to come into the hall, and the Gospel of Jesus Christ arrested her, and she gave her heart to Him.

On Mr. Nokes's last Sunday night Mr. Kerwin stopped a ragged, dirty-looking man, as he was just passing out. A few words revealed he was a backslider, and, bursting into tears, he walked right down the large hall into the inquiry-room, and returned to the Lord. "Ah," he said, as he left, "what good news for my dear wife and children! Those poor little dears have always flown at my approach. They shall, indeed, have a father once more to care for them. Thank God, my mate brought me here to night!" These cases might be multiplied. The power of God has been very manifestly felt throughout the Mission. To Him be all the praise!

Rev. Newton Vanstone conducted the Wednesday and Thursday meetings during the five weeks, and God used our brother to the building up of believers.

E.

Missionaries in Manchester.

The twelfth annual Christian Convention was held in the Conference Hall, Strangeways, last week, from Tuesday to Thursday, inclusive. On many previous occasions the subject has been the Deepening of Spiritual Life; it was, therefore, especially fitting that this year Manchester Christians should have the opportunity of studying Foreign Missions as an outcome of their practical consecration.

This aspect of work for the Master has more and more come to the front of recent years at such gatherings, as visitors to Keswick will recall. Unhappily, however, the voice of one devoted worker in the cause so familiar at such gatherings was still unheard, Mr. Reginald Radcliffe being yet in great bodily weakness. Several allusions were made to his burning zeal. Indeed, one of the speakers, Mr. Cobban, acknowledged thankfully that his own adoption of the foreign field as his life sphere was due to Mr. Radcliffe.

The forenoon each day was devoted to prayer, and a Bible-reading by Rev. David Baron, of the Mildmay Mission to the Jews, whose expositions of passages in Haggai, Zechariah, and the Psalms were listened to with real eagerness and keen appreciation. We purpose giving notes of these in subsequent issues. The one trouble always was that the time allotted was too brief, but in half-an-hour enough was given to occupy hours of quiet contemplation. Many thought the adoption of this plan more helpful than that of having expository addresses from three or more speakers, which provides a more liberal fare than can possibly be assimilated. Of course, this does not apply with the same force to the afternoon and evening gatherings, when the several speakers addressed themselves to the specific fields of labour with which each was associated, and whence most of them had only recently returned. Thus Rev. Canon Tristram represented Japan; Dr. Harry Guinness, Central Africa; Miss Geraldine Guinness and Mr. Marcus Wood, China; Dr. Baedeker, the Continent; the Hon. Miss Kinnaird, Mrs. Bardsley and Rev. Jani Alli, India; Rev. J. R. Newell, Samoa; and Rev. Eric Lewis, the Soudan; while medical mission work was strongly advocated by Dr. Henry Soltau and Rev. G. Mackenzie Cobban. Rev. Prebendary Macdonald presided at some of the meetings, in turn with Mr. James Boyd and Mr. Leonard Shaw, the last-named bearing the greatest share.

Throughout the Convention the utmost harmony prevailed, and, indeed, as one speaker remarked, "The spirit of union evident at such conferences is essentially akin to the missionary interest. For there is nothing like work in a heathen country to teach the littleness of denominational differences."

First upon the missionary programme stood the name of Canon Tristram, who has recently returned from a visit of three months' duration to where his daughter is labouring. This, however, was not his first missionary tour, and, accordingly, he was able to testify from experience that the same remedy—the Gospel—is needed in every land, alike for high and low, civilised or savage — the Gospel of an open Bible, of the cross of Christ, and of the Holy Spirit's influence. One notable danger in work in Japan is the temptation to compromise. The very civilisation of the country, and its high degree of education, adds weight in this direction by the respect which it demands. On the other hand, the Japanese, instead of receiving the Gospel gladly, give it their "respectful consideration," which generally means respectful hesitation. One encouraging point the speaker noted, however, was that the Japanese do not look with favour upon Unitarian belief, because, if not required to accept Christ as the Son of God, co-equal with the Father, they cling in preference to their native Buddhism. In fact, they are at a loss to understand in what Christian belief consists, if not in the divinity of Christ. The Canon related many interesting facts of what he had seen and heard on his tour. On one occasion no less than eleven hundred Japanese (of whom five hundred were students) listened with the greatest attention to a lecture on the evidences of Christianity. A remarkable interest was also evinced by medical students, a number of whom have declared themselves as converts. He also urged the importance of woman's work in Japan, giving sketches of that in which his daughter is engaged. Over sixty Japanese young ladies are boarders at her school in Osaka. Only two are the daughters of Christians, yet, of the seventeen members of the two highest classes, fifteen are baptised, the remainder only awaiting the consent of their Buddhist parents before professing Christianity. These girls take an active interest in mission work; indeed, the rule with Japanese converts is to set to work at once. The instance was given of a man converted whilst cook at the sailors' home, Nagasaki, by the example of some Christian English sailors. He entered the service of a missionary, on a boy's wages, giving up a much larger salary, for the sake of Christian instruction. He is now most diligent in witnessing for Christ. The speaker urged the necessity of sending out eighteen male missionaries, and thirty ladies during the present year. Four are going out from Sunderland. He hoped that Manchester would provide others.

CHINA.

Mr. Marcus Wood, from North-east China, spoke from an experience of seven or eight years, in which he had obtained an insight into the stupendous spiritual needs of that vast country, and the journeys he had made from one side to the other enabled him to see what was being done to meet that need. The figures quoted by this speaker and Miss Guinness in this regard were bewildering in their awfulness. To learn that in a single province there are only nine male missionaries to preach Christ to nine millions of people; that of three provinces, containing a total of 278 large cities, each a centre of government and influence, only five possess a missionary at all; that the population of the Empire is equal to eighty times the number of letters contained in the Old and New Testaments combined—are not these statements so appalling as to sound a loud call for many to "come to the help of the Lord against the mighty"? We have great dealings with China in the commercial world, and yet how few volunteers has England sent out with the good news of salvation. Mr. Wood likened this condition of affairs to a scene he once witnessed (though powerless himself to render assistance) on the Yangtse river. A vessel had struck on a reef; the cargo was floating down the stream, when a man was seen struggling for his life. Boats were hurriedly put off from the banks; what for? To save the drowning man? No, to secure as much as possible of the cargo, which, by native custom, would be the perquisite of those who seized it; and, like a dog,

THE MAN WAS ALLOWED TO PERISH.

This, said the speaker, is very much like the indifference of England to the spiritual state of China, while devoting much attention to the benefits derivable from its commerce.

One great obstacle to the work lies in the fact that the very expressions of the Bible regarding the way of salvation convey no idea whatever to the Chinese mind. Every phrase, therefore, has to be elaborately explained and illustrated, which, of course, adds immensely to the time and labour involved. Then again, when the listener seems at last to be comprehending the importance of the subject, he will suddenly ask some absurdly irrelevant or trivial question (such as "Is it true that you have a Queen in England?"), which would be ludicrous if it were not so solemn and disheartening. As in our Lord's days upon earth, it is the common people who listen gladly, while the rulers and literary men, Pharisee-like, oppose and persecute, not entering themselves, and "those that are entering" they "hinder."

Yet another difficulty is found in the supposition that the male missionary is an emissary of the English Government, working for political purposes; hence he is viewed with suspicion. Herein lies the value of the lady missionary, to whom no such motives are imputed.

This point was also strongly urged by Miss Guinness, who gave two very telling addresses, as full of pathos as they were of fact. She added the following painful statistics to those quoted above:—There are in Great Britain some thirty-five thousand ordained ministers, in addition to a vast host of lay workers, while the province of Honan (in which she has been labouring), which is greater than all Great Britain, has eight men telling of Jesus; and this in a country thirty-seven times as large as Scotland, which boasts no less than 3845 ordained ministers.

It is four years since Miss Guinness exchanged a life of activity among the poor of East London for one not less arduous in the province of Honan. Her return, as also that of her brother from the Congo, was necessitated by the precarious condition of Mrs. Guinness' health a few months ago. It was her joy to tell of open doors throughout the empire, with the exception of one or two provinces. In Shanghai last winter fifty young men engaged in shipping and commerce were brought to the knowledge of the truth. China may be termed the

"GIBRALTAR OF HEATHENDOM."

If the Gospel once obtains a firm foothold there, the possibilities of evangelising the rest of the world are incalculable.

The speaker described her visits to some thirty mission stations, as well as a great number of cities where there is no missionary at all—vast districts plunged in darkness which no light as yet has pierced. There are computed to be thirty-seven thousand professed Christians in China; if this number were trebled, it would probably represent the number of adherents or sympathisers with Christianity; if (as a liberal estimate) these hundred and eleven thousand are reckoned as influencing for the Gospel ten persons each, we should then have rather over a million persons in the way of hearing the "good news." But when all this is done there are still 399 millions untouched, and if there were even one missionary to every half-million of people, there would be needed 6500 more than are now in the field. With cogent reasoning, Miss Guinness based upon these figures a very strong plea for a generous response of men and money.

Describing an incident that had happened in her journeys, she said that coming down the river one evening she had been conversing with some native women on the things of God, and in the middle of the night she heard two of them in an adjoining boat repeating over what they had heard, and saying in Chinese, "Don't let us forget it. Jesus Christ died for us; don't let us forget it." Thus it is that

Bread upon the waters cast
Shall be gathered at the last.

Miss Guinness delivered a very forcible utterance regarding the opium curse, urging Christian electors to press the question upon their candidates at the forthcoming elections. She pictured scene after scene at which her heart had well-nigh broken, and quoted a most harrowing instance of a man who had become a victim to the habit, selling his children one by one, and last of all his wife also, to different purchasers for purposes of the greatest infamy.

With great fervour Miss Guinness urged, in conclusion, that the spiritual state of the missionaries abroad might be strongly influenced by the standard of those at home. Be yourself, therefore, she added, so filled with the Spirit as to gain power in prayer; then if unable to go abroad yourself you may greatly strengthen the hands of those whose way thither has been made plain.

AFRICA.

The presence of Dr. Harry Guinness, fresh from the Congo, which so recently his friend, Mr. McKittrick, had "claimed for God by dying there," imparted a very sorrowful interest to the Convention. But it also added weight to his appeals, and drove his message home with greater force. At one meeting he applied some of the points which Mr. Baron had brought out in his Bible-reading. Taking his theme from Haggai i. 7-9, he emphasized the prophet's command to "consider their ways" as relating to (1) God's house; (2) their own house; and showing (3) how little they who had considered their own had thought of God's. Addressing himself to the great continent he was there to represent, he regarded Africa as one part of God's house which claimed the attention of those who hitherto had only considered their own. He had had forced upon his gaze some awful sights and examples of cannibalism, which had so fearfully impressed themselves upon his mind as to render his appeal almost painful in the intensity of its earnestness.

Referring to the shortness of life experienced by many in the African climate, he instanced Christ's own ministry as being only three years in duration. Christ died for Africa as well as for the rest of the world; how joyful to meet Him after doing the same, as those who have laid down their lives have met Him. As with China, we have commercial dealings with Africa—especially the iniquitous trades in gunpowder and spirits. A little girl dying alone in the dark, or the cry of a murdered native, "White man, I'm dying—" these represent the appeal of souls passing away in thousands daily, throughout the great Continent.

Speaking of the Balolo Mission, he exampled its wonderful success by the fact that ten months ago there was not one Christian on the Upper Congo; now there are scores. The Mission needs a business man to superintend the difficult traffic through the cataract region; also a first-rate engineer, each of whom would receive £80 a year.

Rev. Eric Lewis, representing the Soudan, could not but refer to the band of six devoted missionaries who had set out for that district some two years ago, of whom two, Rev. J. A. Robinson and Mr. Graham Wilmot Brooke, had already been called to their eternal home. The removal of earthly leaders, however, denoted no failure on God's part, but it showed that he could work with or without human instrumentality. Those two graves are a pledge that the land is taken in the name of the King. Mr. Lewis described his first acquaintance with Graham Brooke, and the knitting together of their lives for Africa, with his own determination to carry out the wish, expressed in his friend's will, that he should carry on the work. He thought that if every working Christian in England were caught up by the Spirit and placed in Africa, the sleepy or timid ones left behind would rouse up and do the work. Men of experience, not youths, are wanted for African work. Describing the dead state of the native Christians on his arrival in Lokoja, when the missionaries were compelled to shut many out of church fellowship, Mr. Lewis rejoiced that God's blessing had rested on this faithful dealing, and many are now restored and working for Him. It has been said that an Englishman going to Africa may expect no more than seven years of life, but if so, the seven might be better laid out than perhaps seventy at home.

Mr. Newell, of the London Missionary Society, spoke of the great blessing on devoted native agents in Polynesia, who have spread the Gospel through the chain of Pacific Islands and New Guinea. One, whose wife was dead, and who himself after dangerous illness, suffered shipwreck, and lost his child, writes that faith and hope burn higher in him every day, and that the degradation of the cannibals among whom he lives, makes him only love them the more.

INDIA.

A very stirring address was given by Mrs. Bardsley, who accompanied her husband, formerly a vicar near Manchester, to India some twenty years under the auspices of the C.M.S. Her theme was Woman's Work, dealing especially with that in the Zenanas. The agencies that reach the men fail entirely to influence the women owing to the exigencies of native customs. She pictured the vast misery permeating the lives of 78,000 widows under nine years of age. This custom, together with that of early marriages, is the bane of Indian womanhood, and the cry that she once heard only ignorantly voices the longing of thousands more—"Pray that in the next world I may be born of Christian parents, for I am tired of being shut up like this." This yearning for freedom is the result of seeing the liberty enjoyed by European ladies, and from this cause, too, a change is gradually coming over the minds of the people. The various phases of her work Mrs. Bardsley described, viz., direct zenana visitation, schools, medical treatment, and that among the widows and the blind. The value of the schools is seen in the fact that many of the converts recently baptized confessed to having received their first impressions as children.

The Hon. Miss Kinnaird, having just returned from a prolonged tour in India, warned her hearers against the danger of attending missionary meetings if it does not result in personal devotion to work at home or abroad. Much can be done by those who cannot go far afield. Many who profess their willingness to go to the ends of the earth shrink from attending at a missionary office for a few hours occasionally to write letters and aid in other such detail work. The opportunity Miss Kinnaird had had of associating herself with the recent labours of Dr. Pentecost among the English-speaking population of India afforded her an insight into much of the need of Gospel effort in that country. On all sides there were open doors (in fact, this encouraging fact was noted during the Convention as applying to various countries), and what are needed now are open purses and open hearts. There is much to be done among the spiritually-starved Christians, of whom multitudes may be found in India. Revival among these will greatly further work among the heathen. There is great need, too, for Christian Englishmen in the tea companies and Government service, the example of consecrated merchants being of immense value.

Yet another sphere of usefulness is to reach the English ladies, the wives of our countrymen; and to go, not as missionaries, but to live and exert an influence for Christ among the Eurasians and English people settled there. Many English ladies were converted during Dr. Pentecost's Mission, and many persons too old to learn a new language might be of the greatest service in such a sphere. In conclusion, Miss Kinnaird entreated her hearers to avoid anything like hasty decision in a moment of enthusiasm to go abroad, but rather definite surrender to God's will and quiet prayerful consideration; then, if the way were opened, real lasting work would be the result.

Additional testimony came from Rev. Jani Alli, of the C.M.S., who has been for eight years in Calcutta. He deprecated any tabulation of results, for the reason that the value of a single soul cannot be computed by monetary figures. Christ sent his disciples to places "whither He Himself would come." This is the hope of the missionary, to know that his Lord will one day visit heathendom. This missionary's work lay chiefly in education, there being under his charge two schools, one a "high" school, with 283 men and boys, and one for middle class pupils, where 153 Mohammedan boys daily read the Word of God. He himself had been brought to a knowledge of Christ at a missionary school. He instanced the case of a young native who, after a course of sin, was condemned to death. From the scaffold he said he had learned European ways (including drink), and had received an English education, but had never learned of Christianity. It was essential, therefore, that education should not be left to non-religious schools. Lord Dufferin, on retiring from his position as Viceroy, had passed a minute to the effect that the Government schools were a failure, and recommended that large grants should be made to "private enterprises," alluding to the missionary schools.

Then there is the preaching work. Last year in thirty-one weeks there were thirty-five baptisms, which meant a good deal considering what confession of Christ involves among the converts. Why, many a man in England, surrounded by Christian influences on all sides, hesitates to confess Christ; how, then, can we estimate the sacrifice it is for a heathen to take such a step in the face of the bitter enmity characterising his surroundings? He remarked that Mohammedanism has been said, by a recent eminent Mohammedan author, to be brought into existence by "a corrupt Zoroastrianism struggling for centuries with a still more corrupt Christianity." He urged the duty of those who possess a pure and Scriptural Christianity to wipe away this reproach left by mediæval superstition, and gave instances of the changed and more friendly attitude of Mohammedans in India towards Christian teaching.

MEDICAL MISSIONS.

Dr. Soltau and other speakers described the great openings for Gospel work which medicine created. In fact, most of those who spoke alluded more or less to this important phase of missionary effort. This is the more essential in view of the frightful state of sanitary matters. A village was described containing three thousand inhabitants, much frequented by pilgrims, in which the only water supply for all purposes was a tank, without outlet, containing rain-water. Overcrowding and want of cleanliness are very rife, and the frequent famines are a source of disease as well as suffering. What hospital help there is, apart from Christian work, lacks the element of kindness which only the spirit of Christ can supply. The speaker gave instances of spiritual blessing following upon the medical work. Manchester is represented in India by its merchandise, it should be so also by the mercy which is better than merchandise. This aspect of it was further characterised by Mrs. Bardsley, of the C.M.S., as a "face to face, hand to hand, and heart to heart" work. A wise word fell from Dr. Soltau, in advising those purposing to undertake medical mission work, to see to their Bible as well as to their technical training. If it were "loosely bound, with some leaves falling out by reason of the 'higher criticism,' they had better not go, for nothing short of the whole Book was needed for the mission field.

WORK AT HOME

also found a place in the proceedings of the Conference. Mr. Russell Hurditch described the rise and progress of the excellent work done by the Evangelistic Mission. Mr. George Clarke pleaded for a more earnest zeal in Christians at home and faithful testimony (accompanied necessarily by a holy life) among those around them, especially those who move in the "higher" circles of society, where there was a vast amount of irreligion. A most interesting account of slum work in Ancoats came from the mouth of Miss Jackson, a lady who is devoting herself at her own charges to this cause. Her entreaty for other ladies to take up similar work was as irresistible as it was pathetic, and we shall gladly learn that her call has been answered. We hope to refer to this work again. The closing meeting was chiefly in the hands of Mr. Hurditch and Mr. Clarke, and resulted in several definite offers for service as the Lord might direct, some willing to go abroad, others pledging themselves to some special acts of self-denial to send forth others who were free to go.

Conferences of such an eminently practical character might well be multiplied. More than once the question of "giving" was unavoidably brought forward, but by none more forcibly than Mrs. Bardsley, who quoted an effective answer to the question, "How much ought I to give?" "Go on giving till you feel it." We hope many of our stay-at-home readers will adopt the suggestion.

THE NORTH AFRICA MISSION.

The June issue of North Africa contains many details of work in Morocco, Algeria, Tunis, and other North African lands. The workers in the Medical Mission in Tetuan, and at the Tulloch Memorial Hospital, Tangier, show how a hearing is being gained for the Gospel amongst the fanatical, prejudiced, and self-righteous Moors.

We find, however, that the North Africa Mission is somewhat pressed by lack of funds. It is stated that "Our needs have been greater than our receipts, so that many of our valued missionaries have had to endure much hardness during the past year; we have had our faith tried by frequently having no funds in hand, except those designated for special purposes. We would gladly send to each missionary at once one-third of what we have been able to forward to them during the twelve months ending April 30. We believe every one of our readers would readily contribute whatever extra sum they could afford, in addition to their ordinary gifts, did they know how small have been the incomes of the majority of our workers. We thank our gracious God for the faith, self-denial, and endurance of our North-Africa labourers; and pray earnestly that, though poor as regards things of earth, they may be endowed with heavenly riches.

"For the future, not only shall we need a far larger income than ever before, but we shall require a rapidly-increasing circle of friends. The Mission has grown so much the last year or two that we could with great advantage spend in the coming twelve months twice as much as we received in the year that has passed. Many of our donors have, we have reason to believe, given all they could afford; but are there not a few who would, if constrained by the love of the Lord Jesus, cheerfully double or treble their former gifts, perhaps not without a little self-denial; but shall we who have received so freely not return to the Lord of his abundance in such a measure as shall be somewhat costly to us? Shall we give unto the Lord that which cost us nothing? Let us rather be like Araunah, who gave unto David 'as a king unto the king.' Our missionaries have given themselves to their King. Shall we withhold our substance with which the King has entrusted us for his service?"

THE GOSPEL IN CAMP.—From seven hundred to eight hundred men of the South Wales Borderers, from various parts of Wales and England, are now beginning to assemble for their annual training, under canvas, at Brecon. Every year during the training month the camp is visited each Sunday and Wednesday by members of the Y.M.C.A. with tracts and religious papers. The improvement in the conduct of the men has been remarkable, and a large number of pledges are secured. The commanding officer, who is an abstainer, thoroughly approves of the effort. Christian periodicals, tracts (illustrated preferred), and Gospel booklets are earnestly solicited by D. Devoir Thomas, Y.M.C.A., Brecon.

Baptist Missionary Centenary.

Deeply interesting meetings, in connection with the Baptist Missionary Centenary, were held last week in Midland towns associated with the life and work of William Carey, the pioneer of modern missionary enterprise. On the Monday Dr. Culross presided over an inaugural prayer-meeting in George-street Chapel, Nottingham He urged a large and vitalising expectation of blessing from God upon great things attempted in the name of Christ. The following day's programme was a full one. At a breakfast it was reported that £78,000 had been raised towards the special fund of £100,000.

The centenary sermon was preached by Dr. Clifford in the large Wesley Chapel in Broad-street. It was founded on the text of Carey's famous discourse a hundred years ago—Isaiah liv. 2, 3: "Enlarge the place of thy tent, and let them stretch forth the curtains of thine habitations," &c.—and was informing and eloquent in a high degree. He said the Reformation itself had little or no missionary passion, and Luther said with unfathomable sadness—a foregleam of the agony and pity that stirred the Churches at a later date:—"Asia and Africa have no Gospel; another hundred years and all will be over. God's Word will disappear for want of any to preach it." Surely not, O prophet of God! The Word of the Lord endureth for ever. When the tale of bricks is doubled, then comes Moses. When the night is darkest, then leap up the stars. The living God is always at work. The exploration of the world is even now opening the eyes of men, and for a Christian man an open eye is an open heart. It is only lately the search-light of historical investigation has found the true significance of the eighteenth century. No doubt England had been more barbarous, more inhuman, and more wicked than it was in the middle of the reign of the Second George; but its barbarity had never been so completely unrelieved by high enthusiasms. The diffusion of the English race over the planet, as leaders in the life of the world, bids us translate the words of the prophet, and of Carey, into the language, "Every Englishman a Christian. All Christians missionaries. All men of our own generation brought to know God and his Son Jesus Christ, in knowledge of whom standeth our eternal life."

On Tuesday afternoon there was a meeting of the Ladies' Zenana Mission, at which Marianne Farningham called for more prayer, more women, and more money, declaring that there was no reason why a hundred more lady workers should not be sent into the field. Mr. J. J. Turner spoke of labour in North China, and Miss Angus gave some interesting facts and figures. Two public meetings were held in the evening, one under Mr. E. Rawlings, and another under Mr. W. Willis, Q.C. One of the speakers, Rev. G. Hawker, illustrated the devotion of Carey by stating that from his professional earnings he gave £60,000 towards the work of the Society of which he was the founder.

Other speakers were Revs Dr. A. Mackennal, T. Vincent Tymms, Dr. E. Parker, T. Graham Tarn, and Hugh Price Hughes. The last-named held that missions are realising the essential unity of the Church. He greatly longed to see a mighty exodus of able-bodied and wealthy Christians, who, instead of retiring when they have made themselves enough to keep them, shall retire to Timbuctoo or Calcutta, and work for Christ at their own expense. This island is overcrowded by overfed saints. Let the rich Christians go, and their poor brethren would see to the work at home.

On the Wednesday the scene of interest was removed to Leicester, where several meetings were held. At that in the afternoon Dr. A. T. Pierson expounded Rom. xiv., and preached from the same historic text as Dr. Clifford had taken. He held the supreme need of the churches to-day to be universal prayer for missions. In all crises in this enterprise, prayer has been a victorious force. There must also be a sanctified giving to mission work, beyond present experience. Holy living is a "strengthening of the stakes." The Gospel missions have hitherto been successful, and to prove this Dr. Pierson mentioned that during a period of years the work among the Telugus of South India resulted in not one conversion, whereas afterwards, two thousand were baptized in a day, five thousand in six weeks, in ten months ten thousand, and in the last current year another ten thousand. The largest church on earth is a Telugu church, with thirty to forty thousand members; yet that mission is only fourteen years old. A public meeting was also held in Belvoir-street Chapel, presided over by Mr. B. C. Wates At another gathering in Friar-lane Chapel one of the speakers was Rev. Samuel Pearce Carey, M.A., grandson of the late William Carey.

The proceedings at Kettering on Thursday were deeply interesting. It was here that the Society was originally formed. The programme opened with service in Fuller Chapel (named after the first secretary), the address being given by Rev. Dr. Angus. Meetings were held in a tent, capable of holding seven thousand persons. Dr. William Landels preached a stirring sermon, also from Carey's well-known text. Mr. W. R. Rickett, treasurer of the Society, presided over the evening meeting, at which addresses were delivered by Mr. A. H. Baynes (general secretary), and Missionaries from India, China, the Congo, and Ceylon.

India's Aborigines.

It is now estimated that in Central India there are about two millions of these relicts of the once proud possessors of Hindustan. They are divided into, at least, thirty different tribes, some of which number but a few thousands. As the American-Indian has been crowded backward toward his own extinction, so these less warlike people have been trenched upon till they are now found, as a rule, in dense jungles and hills, or mountain fastnesses. If we mistake not, the most numerous of all the aboriginal tribes in Central India is the Koi, or Koiwar.

We lately spent two months on tour among them, putting in forty-two days in the State of Bastor, east of the Godavery river. In the Great Godavery-Pranhila valley, between the Madras Presidency in the south and a line nearly up to Chanda north, from fifty miles west of the Godavery to a hundred and twenty miles east of it, are to be found not less than four hundred thousand of these interesting people.
